Tippo Greets Frosh At Cage Convocation

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

Freshmen and administrators performed the polite ritual of Convocation yesterday afternoon in the half-filled Curry Hicks Cage. Stern faced Chancellor Oswald Tippo greeted the freshmen, urging the new students to get involved in the University, cautioning students to fulfill their "obligation" to parents, the State government, and themselves, by making "good use of time" at the University.

Dean of Students, William F. Field called to order the first meeting of the 104th class to enter this state institution, asking the assembled freshmen to rise for the national anthem. Dean Field then read a lengthy introduction to Chancellor Tippo citing Dr. Tippo's past experience and education, including an Eaton Professorship at Yale, Provost of the U. of Colorado, and the Chancellors own service at the UMass as Provost.

The Administration was also represented by Asst. to the Chancellor for Student Affairs, W. Randolph Bromery, former head of the UMass Geology Department and Provost Robert Gluckstern. Neither spoke.

The Student Senate was represented by President Glen Elters, a member of the UMass Board of Trustees. Elters confined his speech to the organization of the Student Government Association, which he termed, "one of the best in the country." Elters, who has on occassion lashed out at administration and University policies, remained seated during the playing of the National Anthem; gazing passively at the black-speckled red carpet, covering the makeshift platform.

Chancellor Tippo told the students that they were, in this time of constant upheaval, "fortunate to be in this beautiful valley."

He added, "I only hope it stays this way." Tippo called UMass "one of the strongest State Universities in the nation."

As the Chancellor looked out over the 1200 freshmen gathered, he reminded them of the importance of living in "big places" even though, as Tippo said, "the human soul craves smaller units."

Drawing on a theme which has developed over the last couple years in administrative circles, the Chancellor urged students to "identify with the smaller units" on campus. Tippo named dorms, fraternities, and campus organizations as important for students to find enjoyment. "It's amazing where students find solace and conversation," said the Chancellor.

(During the past year Dr. Tippo has been a strong advocate of better dormitory life. He has argued before the Board of Trustees for Co-Ed living and other improvements for the Amherst campus.)

Chancellor Tippo mentioned the "crowding problem on campus", telling the freshmen that some 350 rooms would be tripled this year. He offered for comfort to some, that "when I was a freshman at UMass" (not mentioning any dates) I also had to live three people to a single room." Tippo hoped that students would recognize that the building on campus, in spite of the discomfort it creates, is "for the good of the greatest number." He told the group that "only 3600 of the 18,000" applicants were able to enter this year and that as a State institution UMass had to expand as much as possible.

Tippo took great pain to warn the new students of the "suspect motives of a few outsiders". He called on students to be "suspicious of anyone seeking violence, seeking to divide . . . and suggesting interference with the rights of others." Tippo challenged the students to "think for yourselves . . . don't believe rumors and gossip . . . and don't follow the crowd." He mentioned the "hangers-on" some of whom "would like to destroy the University" and urged students to be "intellectually" hard-nosed in dealing with them.

There was only one muted cry during the Chancellor's whole rather hard-line speech. The freshmen listened patiently as Tippo ended his speech by pressing students to recognize the functions of a University; teaching, learning, seeking knowledge and passing it on to the greater society, and to take full advantage of the University as a place "primarily for study and thought."

Tippo also cited the help available to those students desiring assistance, through both administrative and student agencies. He also urged all to participate in the many activities on campus.

Everyone, including Senate President Elters, stood for the University Alma Mater, probably the first and last time for this group of freshmen to hear it.

Dean Field closed the meeting after making several announcements concerning registration and the President and Chancellor's Reception this Sunday evening in the Campus Center teak wood floored ballroom.

Enrollment Rises Again; As New Semester Opens

Record enrollment, important new programs and continued building will mark the coming academic year at UMass New England's largest university in terms of full-time enrollment. The total enrollment at the Amherst campus will be an estimated 19,150 including 15,400 undergraduates, 3150 graduate students and 600 two-year Stockbridge School students.

It will be the first year for the Amherst campus under its new governance system. State University System President Robert C. Wood directs the statewide system from his office in Cambridge, with the Amherst campus headed by Chancellor Tippo, who assumed his post last February.

At Amherst the new semester will see a number of academic changes, new courses and new programs. The W.E.B. Dubois department of Afro-American studies will offer its first courses this fall under acting head Michael Thelwell. African art, African languages and other courses will be offered, and a Black Repertory Theatre is being developed.

A new Division of Continuing Education is offering university-level evening courses on and off campus for the first time this fall. Courses will be taught by UMass faculty in Amherst, Greenfield, Holyoke, Pittsfield and Springfield. A total of 61 courses in 23 different subject areas will be offered, with most of the courses scheduled to meet one evening a week.

An Asian Studies Program offering 35 courses begins this fall under William E. Naff. The program concentrates on China, Japan and India, offers Chinese and Japanese language courses and is being developed in close cooperation with the other members of the Five College Cooperation Program at Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges.

A new Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration at Amherst permits a student interested in independent study to work out his own program of study with the help of a faculty sponsor. Also new at Amherst is a Ph. D. program in speech and new undergraduate majors in human development, comparative literature and computer systems engineering.

A new special assistant to the chancellor for public affairs now administers the areas of development, alumni fund raising, public relations, radio and television, and publications. He is Prof. Joseph S. Marcus, former associate dean of the UMass School of Engineering, a UMass staff member since 1948 and a winner of the Metawampe Award for distinguished teaching.

His appointment is part of an administrative reorganization plan starting this fall at the Amherst campus. The plan divides the administration of the Amherst campus into five areas -- academic services, student services, public affairs services, financial services and supporting and administrative services.

On Campus Housing Squeeze Better Than Expected

By CLAUDIA HAMBERG, News Editor

As the last of 19,150 UMass students arrive in Amherst for the 1970-71 academic year, the housing situation is tight, but not the "crisis" that was expected three months ago. Approximately 260 triples, 60 of them voluntary, are anticipated in campus dormitories at the start of this semester according to James West, Director of Housing and Business Manager for Student Affairs. Most of the assigned triples will be freshman males.

WHILE ON-CAMPUS CROWDING, in the form of triples, decreased from last year, finding housing off-campus is more difficult than ever this semester. (MDC photo by Steve Schmidt)

The situation looked bleak last spring to both administrators and students, when it was announced that the three "1970" dormitories under construction would not be open until at least January, 1971. With the University growing by nearly 1500 students each year and the Class of 1974 already accepted, the new dorms were sorely needed.

Everyone remembered September, 1969 when close to 1000 triples existed the first few days of the semester until vacancies could be discerned, and students shuffled. Approximately 250 triples lasted through the fall semester last year.

But now the situation appears under control.

Residency figures were "inflated" a year ago, said West. With the room deposit system initiated last spring ($100 for freshmen and transfer students and $50 for returning dorm residents) the housing office can now plan more accurately just how many students will be living in dormitories. Some 400 students who had signed up for rooms for this semester did not pay the deposit, and lost their spaces.

The administration went to work last spring to avert the expected campus housing squeeze, West added. Students were urged to commute from home for the fall semester if possible, voluntary triples were encouraged (at a 30% saving in room rent), and juniors were allowed to move off-campus. The completion of new apartment complexes in the Amherst area made room for more students to live off-campus. But apartments off-campus are difficult to find this fall.

The filling of co-educational dorms presented a special problem for housing, because of a Board of Trustees ruling which prohibits the placing of freshmen in co-ed dorms. Some of the co-ed dorms were difficult to fill and required the switching of agreeable upperclass males.

Housing officials worked through the summer, relocating freshmen and transfer students in August to utilize all available rooms. Extra beds have been placed in each dormitory "to be prepared."

The room assignment system has been loosened this fall to make room changes easier than in the past. The Heads of Residence will be responsible for their own houses for the hectic getting-settled period and room changes will be made through them. Students will be allowed to change rooms, one-for-one, with the permission of the Head of Residence. The housing office will be in frequent communication with each Resid-Head to determine which dormitories have vacancies and which are overcrowded.

All rooms must be held until at least Thursday for late-arrivals. Students wishing to move into vacant rooms should contact their Residence Heads early next week. They will be in charge of dormitory rosters, and the Housing office will work to facilitate the moving of students.

Administration officials admit that the figure of 260 triples is "on paper," and no precise figure can be determined until the end of the week when all students have arrived.

Index Arrival Delayed

The 1970 yearbook, INDEX, will be one week late, according to its editor, Alan Marcus. "In order to provide full, color coverage of the Strike last semester", he said, "our printing deadline was missed by about a month. Also, the fact that our office was being used by the Strike Committee during the critical final deadline time and the active involvement of some of our staffers in Strike activities contributed to our delay."

Marcus assures the student body that the INDEX will be well worth the delay. In addition to an innovative cover design, INDEX will use creative approaches to layout, design, and theme.

Students will be able to pick up their INDEX in front of the Student Union beginning Monday, September 14. Only students who were here both semesters last year and who bring a 1970-71 ID card will be able to pick one up. INDEX will be mailed to all graduated seniors.

"New Concept" Education Course Set

The Department of Engineering is sponsoring a seminar course this fall which will deal with the interrelationship of technology, society, and public policy.

The course, entitled Engineering 385 Special Problems: Technology and Public Policy, is an outgrowth of the student and faculty meeting held in May, 1970. It is intended to help engineering students develop abilities to evaluate technological alternatives in terms of scientific feasibility, social benefit, cost, ecological impact, and political legal implications. This will be accomplished by a seminar which involves direct student participation in the selection of topics and method of inquiry. Students will be urged to take the initiative in defining their own areas of interest and the methods by which they will investigate.

A Steering Committee of five students and five faculty will organize the course and formulate guidelines.

Cardinal Cushing Resigning Post

BOSTON (AP)-Richard Cardinal Cushing, the onetime blacksmith's helper who became spiritual leader to the nation's second largest Roman Catholic archdiocese, is stepping down after several years of ill health.

The Vatican announced Tuesday that the 75-year-old cardinal's request for resignation had been accepted.

Appointed to replace him was the Most Rev. Humberto S. Medeiros, 54, a former chancellor of the Fall River, Mass., diocese. He has been bishop since 1966 of the Brownsville, Tex., diocese, where he has been identified with the problems of the poor and migrant workers.

A spokesman for the archdiocese said Bishop Medeiros will be installed Oct. 7 at the Cathedral of the Holy Cross by the Most Rev. Luigi Raimondi, apostolic delegate to the United States and representative of Pope Paul VI for the occasion.

The bishop said no date has been set for him to go to Boston.

Cardinal Cushing has long sought retirement, but when he applied earlier-the first time was 10 years ago-he was refused.

Seek Israeli Support

Thirty professors at Harvard, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Princeton, Chicago and other universities called upon the Nixon administration Tuesday to "keep faith with Israel."

Copies of the statement were sent to Henry Kissinger, President Nixon's foreign policies advisor.

Arabs Still Hold Hostages In Aftermath of Hijacking

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Arab commandos held 178 hostages captive aboard two hijacked jetliners in the sweltering Jordanian desert for a second day Tuesday while diplomats met in half a dozen capitals seeking to secure their release.

Women and children among the hostages were described as terror stricken as their ordeal continued.

The Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine--PFLP-which engineered Sunday's three hijackings and a fourth attempt, rejected the diplomatic efforts. The guerrillas threat ended to blow up the planes, possibly with the passengers inside, if seven guerrillas held in Switzerland, Britain and West Germany, were not freed by 10 p.m. EDT Wednesday.

In Washington, President Nixon met with Secretary of State William P. Rogers, FBI director J. Edgar Hoover and Richard Helms, head of the Central Intelligence Agency. A spokesman said tougher legislation against aerial hijackings was considered.

Rogers summoned the ambassadors of 10 Arab countries to a 30 minute conference. The ambassadors told newsmen they had promised to try to persuade the commandos to free the captives, but added that their governments have little influence over the guerrillas.

The 178 hostages were being held aboard a Swissair DC8 and a Trans World Airlines Boeing 707 at a dusty military airstrip 25 miles northeast of Jordan.

Earlier, the guerrillas had freed 122 passengers - 86 from the Swissair flight and 36 from the TWA plane. Most were women and children. They were driven to Amman.

The guerrillas are opposed to any Middle East settlement that does not restore Arabs to their former home in Palestine, the area which became Israel.

Palestinian commandos who hijacked a Pan American World Airways Boeing 747 Sunday and forced it to land in Cairo blew up the plane after its 188 passengers and crew escaped through emergency chutes.

The PFLP in one statement, said it would blow up the Swissair and TWA planes with the passengers aboard if its ultimatum for the release of jailed guerrillas was not met. But a PFLP spokesman at the field where the hostages were held said only that the planes would be blasted. He said the hostages would be removed first and probably taken to another guerrilla camp.

Twenty one hostages were permitted to leave the planes Tuesday to talk to newsmen. Patrolling guerrilla jeeps kicked up clouds of dust as the hostages told of a water shortage and said the planes were hot during the day and cold at night.

Children could be seen peering from the windows. Armed guards stood at the open doors.

A French representative of the International Red Cross told newsmen, "We have a psyshosis problem here. The women and children are terrified."

Laird Plans Mobilization

WASHINGTON (AP) - Future emergencies requiring a rapid buildup of the armed forces will be met by mobilizing the Reserves and National Guard and not through higher draft calls as during the Vietnam war, the Pentagon announced Tuesday.

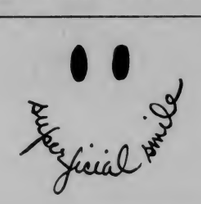
The order by Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird reversed the policy of the Johnson administration which left the bulk of the nation's million man Reserve force at home while large numbers of draftees were sent to fight in Vietnam.

National Guard officials said they are delighted with the new policy. "All we've ever asked for is a chance to prove our worth," said Maj. Gen. Winston P. Wilson, chief of the National Guard.

"This is the first time we've ever had a definite policy on the usage, equippage and financial support of the Guard and Reserve," Wilson said.

Actually, pre-war plans in the early 1960's had envisioned calling up the Reserves during an emergency. But when former President Lyndon B. Johnson decided in 1965 to build up U.S. forces in Vietnam, he resorted to higher draft calls. Calling up the Reserves, it was feared, might have led to further political and social problems at home.

Johnson eventually called 38,000 reservists, but not until after the Tet offensive and seizure of the USS Pueblo by North Korea in 1968.



Laird's new policy was contained in a two page memo sent Aug. 21 to the secretaries of the Army, Navy and Air Force and the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Campus War Research Continues Despite Protests

NEW YORK (AP) - Thirteen major universities where government defense work has been the target of student protest report they have in no way changed their policies toward war research.

A survey of some 70 colleges around the country shows further that only two of four colleges that have curtailed or ended their government affiliations in the past couple of years did so directly because of student protests.

Most of the colleges queried said they conduct little defense-relate research. What Defense Department contracts they do have are generally unclassified or unrelated to warfare, they said.

Military campus spending has been declining, and further retrenchmens may occur particularly if campus strife continues.

The Associated Press survey turned up these examples where colleges have not yielded to student demands on the issue of defense research.

At Ohio State University--where defense work accounted for roughly a third of all research during fiscal 1969--officials say a major effect of student protests was to remove money from proposed social, ecological and other research programs. The money, a spokesman said, was diverted to repairing damage and beefing up the campus police force.

The protests did not change university policy on defense research, Robert P. Stevenson adviser to the vice president of academic affairs, added.

Kent State University, where four students were killed in a confrontation with National Guardsmen last May, has a long-time policy against accepting classified research but, despite student demands, still houses four Defense Department projects.

The University of Wisconsin, scene of a bomb explosion that killed one student and injured four others last month, has not dropped any military research programs over the past several years because of campus demonstrations.

At Iowa State University, student demonstrations had "no effect however" on defense-related contracts, Wayne Moore, vice president for business, said.

Other colleges which said they have not changed their policies despite student protests include: University of Kansas, University of Illinois, University of Arizona, Ohio University, University of Minnesota, State University of New York at Buffalo, University of Rochester, Pennsylvania State University, and Washington University.

Heavily involved in defense research is the University of California, which runs two weapons laboratories for the Atomic Energy Commission. In fiscal 1970 the AEC said it appropriated an estimated $224 million for these labs. The contracts for these installations are up for renewal in 1972.

Former UM Trustee Sentenced

Former UMass Trustee Martin Sweig was sentenced last week to serve two and a half years in prison and to pay a $2,000 fine for lying to a grand jury while being questioned for allegedly defrauding the Federal Government.

He served for over 20 years as an aid to U.S. House Speaker John W. McCormack until the National Securities Commission began investigating him.

Governor Endicott Peabody appointed Sweig a Trustee in 1964 and he was reappointed for one year in 1969. He left the Board last January.

Sweig was convicted after a three week trial last July of purgery when he denied that he had known or had interceeded with government agencies on behalf of Gary Roth, a Long Island serviceman who wanted a hardship discharge from the Army.

Federal Judge Marvin E. Ffankel said at the sentencing, I am of the view that I would be derelict if I did not impose a substantial prison sentence in this case, and I will.

'Scarlet Empress' Hits the Screen

THE SCARLET EMPRESS, a film which is based on the youth of Catherine the Great up to her ascension to the throne, is playing tonight at Mahar Auditorium at 7 and 9:15 p.m. To its smallest detail, this film is the work of one man. Josef von Sternberg wrote the screenplay and dialogue, suggested the decor and ikons, designed the statues -- which are more numerous than the actors -- sketched the costumes, arranged the lights, composed some of the music and personally directed the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, which plays the score.

Only upon seeing the film can one fully appreciate the sheer magnitude of such an artistic achievement, as well as the filmic genius of Sternberg. Made in 1934, THE SCARLET EMPRESS was the sixth of seven films (beginning with THE BLUE ANGEL and ending with THE DEVIL IS A WOMAN) that Sternberg made starring his discovery, Marlene Dietrich, between 1930 and 1935.

Parking Stickers Available

On-campus parking stickers are available to all students at a special table at undergraduate registration today. Students, faculty and staff members can also obtain stickers at 105 Hampshire house from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. daily.

Robert Ferrifer, Parking Coordinator, said this week that his office has done its best to preregister campus parking, and estimates that 60% of students and 95% of the faculty and staff members have already received parking assignments.

University parking lots handle 12-15 thousand cars each day, and Ferriter said "no great rush" is expected as students, faculty, and staff pour into UMass this week.

The Campus Center parking garage, expected to open in the very near future, will also be available for student parking at a reasonable fee.

Campus Center Planning and Facilities Questioned

By ALBERT BENSON

Ornate and expensive , the new Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center stands as a monument to unrealistic planning, student apathy and inflationary prices. Ever since its conception in the late fifties the center has been hampered by bureaucratic procedures and a lack of student and administrative communication.

In 1959 it was becoming apparent to everyone, students and administrators alike, that existing Student Union facilities were no longer adequate. Built to accomodate a peak crowd of 10,000 its cafeteria, ballroom facility, and conference space, was overworked and over-crowded. To alleviate the problem, J. Paul Mather, then President of the University, appointed a committee of 8 students and 2 faculty members to investigate the problem.

Studies were taken regarding areas of greatest pedestrian traffic, areas where new space was needed, and areas where existing space could be expanded. Questionaires were given out regarding the type of building and additional facilities that could be constructed. On January 15, 1963 the final survey was submitted to President Lederle.

The study recommended the construction of 138,70i additional square feet. Included in this new space were: an informal room, an area adjacent to the pond where people coming in from outdoor activities could gather, talk and dance, a snack bar, a cafeteria and its support facilities additional game facilities, and expanded ballroom and catering areas. The report further stated that the book store needed expanded facilities. Two square feet, the report maintained should be provided for each individual using the store.

While the study indicated that a majority of students wanted expanded ballroom facilities, it also indicated that they did not need conference space or want any hotel space. In fact, the study specifically stated that most of the conference rooms were adequate and that no recommendations were made for any type of guest facilities.

"At the time the study for the new facility was researched", commented Dean Field, "students were oriented toward a fraternity-sorority life styles, with most activities centering around parties and football rallies". "The emphasis in the seventies has shifted to social concerns", he added. "When the survey was done, the expanded social facilities were the most important part of the center, now they're not".

After the study had been accepted and the committee officially recognized, President Lederle appointed an administrative committee headed by Dr. Leo Redfern, Dean of Administration at South College. This group was to be the moving force in the shape the new building was to take..

Initially the committee attacked the problem of financing the building. The $5,000,000.00 building cost was to be funded through bonds backed up by Student Union Activitie's taxes. The members of Dr. Redfern's committee, decided that student revenues alone would not be enough to support the complex.

Higher wages for Student Union workers and the consequent loss of revenue in the summer made impracticable, the committee members contended, the use of activities funds to support the building. To help defray the costs it was decided to incorporate the continuing education and conference centers into the Student Union Complex.

After the decision was made to incorporate the two, the committee submitted a booklet to Marcel Breuer, the architect, requesting space assignments in the new building. In this booklet recommendations for space were much the same as in the initial survey. The major difference being in the seperation of the three areas, the hotel, the conference area, and the Union. The report itself stated, "Student Activity areas should be blocked within an area seperate from those commonly shared by the community at large. Lounge areas should permit easily relaxation away from the traffic, yet must permit inconspicious supervision."

While the booklet recommended the same kind of support facilities the figures for the gross amount of space were different. The area for the entire building was 201,000 square feet.

Forty-two thousand two-hundred fifty feet of that building were to have some living accomodations, continuing education offices, the labor center, and other office units.

The requests were then submitted to the architect who was to do a feasability study for the state on the campus center. When the report was completed in July of 1965, it was submitted to the committee.

Essentially the plan was like the one before it. The gross area was up to 287,050 sq. ft. The space allotments were somewhat different, however. The two student floors received a combined area of 134,410 sq. ft., the stairways 2,200 and the terrace level 5,460. The entire amount of space in the tower was 104,820 sq. ft.. While the total space of the center increased, certain small aspects of it were dropped. The games area was among these.

After the initial report came Mr. H. J. Littlefield, planning officer and secretary of the building committee, who was also on Dr. Redfern's committee, did a report indicating the initial requests, the amount of space that the architect had and the varience between the two.

Initially, the program had requested 250,000 sq. ft., the architect designed 246,300 sq. ft., giving a variance of 3,700 sq. ft. The biggest loss was in the book store which lost 5,950 sq. ft. The biggest increase was in the hotel units, lobby, and service areas which had a net increase of 7,980 sq. ft. Mr. Littlefield's report was read but, the architect's final plans were accepted.

While the plans for the new building were being finalized, the financial aspects of the project remained to be solved. Originally the state was to have paid the cost of the continuing education center and hotel and the student union tax was to have gone for the support of the Union. The members of the committee learned, however, that it wasn't possible to marry the same two funding sources. Consequently the Student Activities taxes were used to support the whole building. The plans were finalized and the responsibility for $7,780,000 bond was given to students in 1965.

The first student was elected to Dr. Redfern's committee in 1966 according to one University spokesman. The student, Nell Whitman, was on the committee until 1967. According to one University official who wished to remain anonymous, there were times when Mr. Whitman was purposely not told of meetings. "They would call him at 7:45 for an 8:00 meeting", the source stated. Nevertheless, while Mr. Whitman was on the committee, there was a dialogue between students and administrators.

After Mr. Whitman left, according to an administrative source, student representation at the meetings was infrequent. It wasn't until 1968 and 1969 when the building had been planned and financed that students again became involved. At this time members of the S. U. G. Board worked closely with the people in charge of the building on interior design. Some reforms were put through.

School of Ed. Slates Media Group

The Media Specialists Program begins its second year this fall. The program prepares students for positions in schools for the deaf in the area of educational media. It is a three-year program leading to a bachelor's and master's degree and is funded by the United States Office of Education, Bureau of Education for the Handicapped.

The education of the hearing handicapped can be tremendously improved through the use of a great variety of media. Optimum media utilization requires a well-trained professional person competent in the media field and education of the deaf. The students completing this program would be prepared to work with all aspects of media and with all members of the staff, but would not be prepared to teach the deaf.

CASIAC Revisions Affect Core Requirements

Curricular requirements of both the University Core and the College of Arts and Sciences have been liberalized and all features are retroactive, according to the school's advising confer, CASIAC.

To qualify for graduation from the University, every student must fulfill the University Core Requirements, plus the requirements established by his college or school and those of his specific major. During the 1969-1970 academic year, the College of Arts and Sciences modified its graduation requirements when the faculty voted approval of the so-called JUNE PROPOSAL.

Some of the changes in the requirements established by the JUNE PROPOSAL were so extensive that their acceptance necessitated revision of some of the University Core Requirements and these changes were recently approved by the University Board of Trustees on August 10, 1970.

It should be noted that the completion of the University Core is required of all students in the University. However, the Core Requirements are incorporated into the JUNE PROPOSAL; thus, the completion of the College of Arts and Sciences graduation qualifications and those of an approved major will certify a student for graduation. As a result of the vote of the Trustees, all changes in the University Core and in the College requirements are now in effect and all are retroactive. The retroactive feature is especially important for upperclassmen since the requirements have been universally liberalized and/or reduced.

The specific features of change in the College of Arts and Sciences graduation qualifications are considered below, and a copy of the current Checklist of Graduation Qualifications for the various degrees in the College is reproduced (in the adjacent columns).

RHETORIC REQUIREMENTS

(B) The former English Composition-Speech requirement (6 or 7 credits) is replaced with a requirement for completion of 2 courses in Rhetoric (6 credits). The Rhetoric courses are divided into two groups; Group I with Rhetoric 100 and 110; and Group II with Rhetoric 140, 145, 160, 165, and 170. The Rhetoric requirement for the University Core and the College of Arts and Sciences are the same, BOTH REQUIRING TWO COURSES IN RHETORIC WITH AT LEAST ONE FROM GROUP I. Students who have met the former English Composition-Speech requirement will have satisfied the requirement as will students who have completed 5 credits in the old requirement (e.g. having taken English 111 and Speech 105). Those who have completed only 2 credits, as with English 111 or Speech 101, will need to complete any one of the Rhetoric courses to meet the requirement.

HUMANITIES AND FINE ARTS REQUIREMENTS

(C) Formerly, two courses in Western Literature (English 126-126 or equivalents) were basic features of the University Core but the specific requirement has been dropped. Currently, the requirement is met with the completion of ANY FOUR "C" designated courses for the B.A. degree, or THREE "C" designated courses for all other degrees. Further, the number of courses with a "C" designation has been greatly expanded and they are to be found among course offerings in the following departments: Art, Comparative Literature, English, History, Music, Philosophy, Speech and in the Foreign Languages. English 125-126 and their equivalents are of course designated as "C" courses. Those majoring in the Humanities of Fine Arts may meet the "C" requirements by completion of "C" designated courses in their major.

SOCIAL SCIENCES REQUIREMENTS

(D) This requirement, like that in the Humanities area, has been changed in its specifics. Four courses from the Social Sciences, with at least three with a "D" designation are required for the B.A. degree, while only three "D" designated courses are required for other degrees in the University. Here too, the list has been expanded and "D" designated courses are to be found in the following disciplines: Anthropology, Economics, Geography, Government, Linguistics, Psychology, and Sociology. Again, as in the "C" requirement, there are no specific area requirements and those majoring in the Social Sciences may meet the "D" requirement by completion of "D" designated courses in their major department.

SCIENCE AND/OR MATHEMATICS REQUIREMENTS

(E) The University Core requirement in the Science-Math category is now established as three "E" designated courses. However, THE COLLEGE OF ARTS AND SCIENCES CONTINUES TO REQUIRES FOUR "E" DESIGNATED COURSES FOR ALL DEGREES IN THE COLLEGE. Once again, the specificity has been removed and the requirement may be met with the completion of any four "E" designated courses. Thus, all could be taken in one discipline; as in mathematics, or in chemistry or in botany, or a student might elect 4 introductory courses from four disciplines. Any combination is acceptable. Once again, the number of "E" designated courses has been expanded and "E" designated courses are to be found among the course offerings in the disciplines of Astronomy, Biochemistry, Botany, Chemistry, Entomology (Ent. 126), Geology, Logic (Philosophy 125), Mathematics, Microbiology Physics, Statistics, and Zoology.

FOREIGN LANGUAGE REQUIREMENT

The foreign language requirement for the B.A. and B.S. degrees in the College of Arts and Sciences remains unchanged from that approved by a vote of the faculty in June, 1969. Specifically, the requirement is satisfied by: (a) the completion of a foreign language course at the 140 level (b) satisfactory performance on an achievement or placement test (c) four high school units in one foreign language or three units in one language and 2 units in another foreign language (d) a year in a high school in which English is not the basic language (e) substitution of language related study when there is CLEARLY DEMONSTRATED DIFFICULTY in language study which has been approved by the Foreign Language Board. Two things should be no-language requirement noted are established by the College, but several departments in the College have requirements which may in some instances exceed those listed by the College. Second, a majority of all freshmen entering the College of Arts and Sciences now meet the language requirement on the basis of high school language training; thus, it might be well to tell your high school friends about this method of meeting the language requirement.

The completion of the above qualifications, plus 120 credits (exclusive of Physical Education) along with satisfaction of the requirements of a major department will certify a student for graduation.

A requirement check list is available at CASIAC headquarters.

Allen Named to Dean's Post

Associate Provost Jeremiah M. Allan was appointed Acting Dean of the College of Arts and S ciences by Chancellor Oswald Tippo. With the unanimous recommendation of department heads and Provacated by Seymour Shapiro, who is presently on sabbatical leave.

The appointment has not received the approval of the Board of Trustees and will remain "un-official" until the next meeting of the Board, according to a memorandum from the Provost's office.

Associate Provost Allen will oversee the College of Arts and Sciences during the re-organization of Arts and Sciences into three areas: Humanities and Fine Arts, Social and Behavioral Sciences and Natural Sciences - Mathmatics. Each area will eventually be headed by a separate Dean. Three search committees have been formed to make recommendations for these positions.

On August 10, the Board of Trustees approved the division of Arts and Sciences into three faculties. The temporary appointment of Allen was made after a series of Department head meetings.

The Board reasoned the College, the largest academic department in the University, has become too large and too complex to be administered by the one-dean superstructure which had always been used in the past.

They also argued that it was more logical to group diciplines in related areas together, from both an academic and an administrative stand point.

The search committee in the are a of Humanities and Fine Arts includes faculty members Winifred E. A. Bernhard, Joseph T. Lapland, Wolfgand Paulsen, Walker Gibson, Sarah N. Lawall, George Wardlaw and undergraduates Judy Gill and Marshall Spriggs. A graduate student will be named to the committee shortly.

In Social and Behavioral Sciences, the search committee is made up of faculty members Loren Beth, Seymour Epstein, T. O. Wilkinson, Gerald A. Gunderson, Karl R. Wallace, Richard B. Woodbury, graduate student Jane Lee Yare and Undergraduates Thomas Fillmore and Donald Trageser.

The Natural Sciences and Mathamatics search committee is made up of faculty members Phillips R. Jones, William E. McEwen, Otto Stein, Donald E. Catlin, John Roberts, Edward Westhead, a graduate student who will be named shortly and undergraduate s John Lareau and Claudia Peters.

The Crisis Hour

Usually in our first edition, we issue a statement calling for incoming freshmen to meet the challenges that confront them. But this year, the challenges of the UMass community and, indeed, the nation's universities can not be isolated to freshmen or even to just students.

The challenges of universities are in essence whether higher education can continue to exist, as it is presently constituted. Or, have the battles on campuses the past year been the first stage in the demise of American universities?

While UMass has been spared severe violence on campus, the sprawling think tank has more than its share of needless crisis, needless tension, caused by all sides of the uncomfortable and absurdly termed tri-partite community of student-faculty-administration. This uneasy relationship locally has brought about success that has really been pyrrhic victories, in that crisis was averted but no long range solutions were made.

Now, as a new semester begins in an unusually unsteady condition of still feeling the effects of the student strike, and countless other pressures, the tenuous alleviation of past tensions can not be taken smugly to mean that this year there will be again the same victories using the same methods.

The administration must be willing to allow a crisis to be worked out without there omnipresence if this can be done. And the administration must be willing to relinquish more of its decision-making power to students in the form of student participation in the decision of a crisis situation.

Faculty, meanwhile, cannot any longer sit blithely by the sidelines with their tenure notice in their pockets and watch universities disintergrate. Faculty must involve themselves with students, during any tension period, or face the penalty of losing the last tenuous grip of influence over an increasingly questioning student body. Faculty were active last Spring during the strike. Their presence was an asset that was irreplacable.

The faculty must be willing therefore, to continue this involvement and increase it.

Finally, students must be willing to take the time and make the effort to attempt to avail themselves to facts when the issue unvolves. They must be willing to get involved (as overworked as that message is) because though ignorance may be bliss, it is also dangerous to the campus.

A concrete way to begin this realigning of the university's decision making workings must begin at the Board of Trustee level.

One student now is on the board. That number should be at least increased to include two more from the Boston and Worcester campuses. There should be a faculty board member from each of the three campuses also. For, ultimately, the board must be closer to the administration than any other segment of campus, when they should be closest to the people they decide for.

Perhaps all this is now obsolete. Perhaps decision-making crisis alleviation, tension easing, is the antithesis of most student feeling.

Yet, if the university system is ultimately broken down, what becomes of hopes of changing this society which aches to be changed, and can't be without a concerned youth?

A Friend Leaves

Seymour Shapiro leaves this month for a year long sabatical, and while we wish the Acting Dean of Arts and Sciences a profitable and restful year while doing research abroad, we must selfishly state that we deplore his leaving.

We deplore the year long absence of one of the most accesible and concerned administrators in the University. We will deplore time and time again his absence when a crisis needs a thoughtful and helpful hand, or when we need a friend to talk to. And we will deplore countless times that there aren't more faculty or administrators like Seymour Shapiro.

Singing The Blues

By PETER PASCARELLI, Editor-In-Chief

If buildings could talk the white concrete Lincoln Campus Center would probably be singing "Why is everybody always picking on me". It was conceived hurriedly, delayed countless times, and now is being maligned by many students visiting it for the first time.

Local press and media were given a tour of the complex yesterday, complete with dinner at the Top of the Campus. And it's a tough thing to say no to the sumptious offerings thrown up by the CC chefs. The whole affair was given to sell a building that is shrouded in fog to those skeptics of the keyboard who actually are bought for roast beef and Drambuie.

If I weren't a student they would have sold me. Frankly, the arguments, the speeches, the facts thrown out are logical. As it is so difficult sometimes to accept, the other side of an argument can sometimes be plausible.

All the powers to be could not argue with the claims that the building is ugly. Again, the building itself would probably say, "I am ugly, make no mistake a-UMass needs another ugly building like Carter's needs more pills. Maybe Marcel Breuer should be picketed for a lack of aesthetics.

The real trouble with the whole discussion was that no real good reasons were given for why student offices are small and underground, and why so many things are so lavish. A lot of the rebuttal was simply that those in charge weren't here then. And, if things were to be done over, there would be a lot of changes.

What, then, do the students who don't like the building do? Well, they can get mad, call the building putrid and forget about it. Or they can accept it as just another ugly UMass building that can be lived with.

Or perhaps they can work to improve what they have, by working on the SUG board, or by setting up a art committee to cover some of those concrete walls in the airline terminal in the second floor.

Yelling about a hotel isn't going to help; it will pay for itself. The restaurants the same. But the Campus Center is in need of a lot of improvements, and the people to make them are the students who paid for the building.

I don't like the Campus Center. But the old eyesore is going to be there for a long time. And anyway, who wants a 12 million dollar eyesore?

The poor building meanwhile still sings the blues and curses Marcel Breuer, the SUG Board, and adminstrators for his curse.

LandBuying Group Urged

There is nowhere to go, (We need land! the dying own everything but there own happiness, (We are forced to buy the land) but sadness paralizes us in our lonely lives, (We can't do it by ourselves) and we've known for so long that we must learn to love and live together, (Yet we fear each other more than the failure of our private fantacies.) so we wait, (We try to come together in our parents) and what can we do anyway.

WE CAN BEGIN. Begin getting together through organizing around the land. The land IS ours if we work TOGETHER.

Consider: a place to live, to grow, say a hundred acres to roam on, build on, farm. Cost: one dollar from one third of the students in the area.

Not much for a start, and that's just one idea.

Land is a focus, an environment where we can come together in a relaxed way to share our lives, our loneliness, our love with each other.

Please help everybody and give a little money. We can't do anything any where without lots of people.

"Princeton Plan" Campaigning Made Optional

By MARK SILVERMAN, Managing Editor

The Board of Trustees approved in August a modified version of the Princeton Plan, meaning that UMass students who wish to campaign for political candidates during the two weeks before the Fall elections will have to make arrangements with their teachers to make up any work they miss.

The Trustees defeated the Faculty and Student Senates approved Princeton Plan which would have closed the University for those two weeks, and which would have rescheduled the eight class days missed during vacation periods.

As the semester now stands, the University will remain open during the two weeks before the election and classes will go on as usual for students not wishing to campaign.

The Board of Trustees will ask that no exams be scheduled for those two weeks, and all faculty members are now being asked to announce their plans for the two week period at the first meeting of every class.

During the Trustees' debate on the proposed plan, the following points favoring the adoption of the original Princeton Plan were stated.

1) It would encourage students to engage in political activity through established channels, rather than by unconventional or illegal means.

2) By giving students the opportunity to "work within the system" the Trustees said they believed that they might halt the spread of disaffection and a tendency which they said they saw toward violent revolt.

3) By campaigning for political candidates in their hometown areas the students would not have an opportunity to demonstrate on campus during the immediate pre-election period.

4) The Princeton Plan is clear cut; there would be no confusion as to what classes are in session and what work has to be made up. 5) The proposed recess would come close to the middle of the semester, a time many persons feel is the most desirable from an academic view.

6) Direct participation in the political process can enrich the student's education, it was argued.

The following points opposing the Princeton Plan were brought out during the meeting.

1) No one can be sure how many students will actually campaign during the period, in other words, the academic schedule may be altered to accomodate only a few students.

2) Some academic programs will have difficulty adjusting to the two week vacation, and some laboratory and field activities must operate under seasonal restraints.

3) The University's non-professional employees may demand that they also be given the two weeks off to engage in political activity.

4) The State Legislature and several areas of the State government might object to the plan, and this would hurt the University, since it is a State school.

5) Parents might object to the rescheduling of vacation time. But while not stated in the major list of objections to the Princeton Plan, one of the major reasons for the Board's defeating it was the possibility that the Internal Revenue Service might challenge the school's tax-exempt status if it agreed to the politically based vacation period.

Sen. Robert C. Byrd (D.-W. Va. said last month, for example, that all Universities should take "Immediate action to assure that our supported Universities and colleges remain open throughout the entire academic year."

Many UMass programs are supported by federal funds.

Student Senate President Glenn Elters, who is also a Trustee, argued that since both the Faculty and Student Senates supported the plan, the Trustees would be turning their backs on the campus community by not approving the plan.

But the other trustees argued that their "compromise" supported in principle the wishes of the students and faculty, and also protected those students who would not wish to campaign, by keeping their classes open.

Trustee Bishop Christopher J. Weldon opposed both the original plan and the compromise in debate, arguing that since students are being educated "to make them fit well into society, and since no other groups in society get vacation time to participate in election campaigning, then students therefore should not get this kind of special priviledge."

But Elters quickly answered him by saying that not all aspects of society were good enough to merit continuance, that people should be given a larger role in politics, and that the Princeton Plan would educate students in the political process while allowing them to play a usefull role in society.

Healey, Wood Praise Compromise

Joseph P. Healey and Robert C. Wood, Chairman of the Board of Trustees and President of the University, respectively, made the following statement respecting University policy in public affairs:

"As the 1970 political campaigns intensify and as student interest in elections continues to grow, we wish to summarize University policies concerning political activity that have evolved over the years. By doing so, we hope to make clear appropriate guidelines for conduct among members of the University community.

"First, as an academic institution, the three campuses have the historic obligation to provide an open forum for orderly free debate about issues by candidates standing for election and by their supporters. Spokesmen for all shades of political opinion have versity audiences and used University facilities to make their positions known. Those actively engaged in election contests should have the same opportunity as those who comment on them. Their appearance is all the more important since new national legislation lowering the voting age to eighteen makes it likely that more and more students will take part in elections.

"Second, as a public institution, the University has a special responsibility to assure that the political processes which govern the Commonwealth are as clearly understood and as visible as possible. This support must be nonpartisan and show no favoritism. But it should be positive and encourage the dissemination of information, the clarification of policy positions, and the participation of every citizen in the process. This is why the University made its Amherst campus facilities available for the Democratic State Convention last spring.

"Especially for offices that are statewide in nature and carry duties and powers affecting educational development, the University should provide wide opportunity for parties and candidates to make known their positions and records on educational matters. To help effect this purpose, the Trustees voted in their last meeting to make special arrangements for students who wanted to work actively in political campaigns.

"Accordingly, we ask all members of the University community--students, faculty, administrative staff, alumni, and friends--to work to assure the effective functioning of the election process through arrangements that are equitable, open, and available to all. Each campus administration should make plans for this purpose. At a time when the American political system is called increasingly to question by a shrill minority, those who work within and for the system deserve an equal opportunity to be heard."

CAF To Coordinate Five Action Groups

Acting as an umbrella organization, the Community Action Foundation (C.A.F.) will coordinate spending, facilities and organization for five campus social action groups this year, according to founder George Childs.

Included in C.A.F. will be the Northeast Educational Service, a tutoring program in which UMass students travel to Springfield to work with disadvantaged public school students. Run by Ernie Reis and Steve Lazzar, the program this year will maintain close ties with the School of Education to improve the quality of the tutoring, according to Childs.

Also in the main group will be the new program of Racial Seminars, a series of discussions on topics involving the problems of man from a social standpoint. It is being coordinated by Robyn Chandler and Carl Brown.

Another group in C.A.F. is A Better Chance (A.B.C.), which is not related to any off campus ABC groups. This program will concentrate in training discussion leaders for seminars on racism.

The fourth group in C.A.F. is the Committee on Poverty, a research-education group, led by Ken Mosakowski, which will attempt to broaden the public's understanding of the relationships between the draft, the welfare system, and other contributing factors to the cycle of poverty.

Action Lab is the fifth group in C.A.F., and while the bulk of this group's activities have yet to be defined, according to Childs," one project will include supporting Springfield Street Acadamies, a three month old community service organization for high school dropouts, run by UMass student William Smith.

The first major organizational meeting for all of C.A.F. is scheduled for next Tuesday. Specific time and place will be announced later this week.

C.A.F., according to Childs, is separate in organization and function from another campus service group, the Senate Social Action Committee.

He explained, "C.A.F. is interested in social, not political matters, which the Senate Group will take over for the old Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council and its political crusades."

He continued, "We hope that our group can be the first step toward establishing a true 'communiversity' where students will be able to get involved in a meaningful experience in a sociological vein in their community, on and off campus.

N.E.S. Sponsors Tutors For Springfield Area

Northern Education Service

"To observe a ten year old who cannot read, or a twelve year old who can't add three figures in a column, is indeed a sorry sight," commented a participant in the Northern Educational Service tutorial program. "No world problems are solved in the N.E.S. centers in Springfield, but N.E.S. offers you a chance to learn while working with others."

Northern Educational Service dedicates itself to sponsoring tutors in communities where education is often minimal and the chances for a kid to get a good education are limited.

The program began last year with over five hundred UMass students responding to the call for tutors in the Springfield area. But, last year, the program became bogged down; the bus provided by N.E.S. headquarters ran sporadically, tutors and tutees became frustrated and lost interest.

The program deteriorated and there were less than one third of the original five hundred tutors left at the end of the year. According to an N.E.S. memo other problems included, "far from adequate materials" and a lack of "communication and rapport between the tutor and tutee."

The program was deemed to important to abandon so several concerned N.E.S. members at U-Mass set out to remedy the "terrible situation." The first innovations are being worked out through Royce Philips, of the Urban Education Department. Philips has agreed to direct "workshops" to orientate the tutors to both the problems encountered in tutoring and the environment which the tutees come from.

What is most important is "what to expect from the tutee and how to respond and communicate with him." The workshop discussions will range from ideas and methods for making tutoring more meaningful and enjoyable for both parties and the individual problems each tutor encounters. One of the major pitfalls for the program was that many tutees found the program sessions to be little more than extension of the long, boring regular school day.

The workshops will be held on an informal basis for the first five weeks of the fall semester. The leaders of the workshops will be either experienced tutors, program organizers of Mr. Philips. N.E.S. is offering these sessions for all prospective tutors in hope that the program can develop personnel "with the training and interest required to make the program beneficial."

Modular credits, which will be explained at the workshops, may be obtained for steady attendance at the workshops, through the School of Education.

N.E.S. is also planning week end trips for the tutors and tutees to supplement the week-day tutoring sessions during the school year. The trips will bring tutees to the campus and tutors to Springfield. The purpose will be to develop more personal relationships between the tutor and tutee. N.E.S. also hopes to establish student coordinators between the Amherst and Springfield centers. These co-ordinators will act as liason in the entire educational set-up and work out difficulties between tutors and tutees.

N.E.S. will have an information and sign-up table in the lobby of the Student Union door the first few days of the Fall semester. Those who are interested are asked to attend the first organizational meeting, Wednesday, September 16 in the Student Union Ballroom at 7:30. The Orientation sessions will begin Sunday September 20 at 7:30 and run through October 25. N.E.S. also has a Campus Center Office, Rso 3340, Campus Center.

Dean Allen to Attend 'Children' Conference

Dr. Dwight Allen, Dean of the UMass School of Education, was named to chair a panel on "education Myths", as part of five day White House conference on "Children". Allen, is amongst forty other experts, including Massachusetts State Education Commissioner Neil V. Sullivan, chosen to lead discussions on topics ranging from child reading programs to abuse, with some four thousand other conferees.

The conference, which will be held Dec. 13-18, is something of a tradition for the White House; dating from the administration of President Taft in 1909 when a conference on destitute and orphaned children was held. The conferences have been held every ten years since. Many of these conferences have lead to the creation of this nations finest laws regulating child health, and education.

The December conference will deal with children up to 13 years of age. A meeting scheduled for February will be devoted to youth between the ages of 14 and 24.

Other educators from Massachusetts chosen to attend the conference include Dr. Jerome Kagan, (Harvard), Joshua Miner (founder and president of Outward Bound) and William Gibson (Boston University).

Progress Report: The "Living-Learning" of P-10

by Don Glickstein

Amidst changes that it hopes will end two years of confusion frustration, nebulousness, and a poor campus reputation, Project 10, one of the University's oldest 'living-learning experiments reopened last Wednesday.

Begun in 1968-69 in Moore and Pierpont Houses, Project 10 was to have been a first attempt at breaking the evolution of an increasingly computerized, impersonal multi-university here at Amherst for freshmen and sophomores. In its premier year, the Project freshmen developed into a fraternal-like community, proud, egotistical, and superior--yet they were more creative, enthusiastic, and involved in the University than any others of their peers. They took one to three of their courses as P10 sections held in the dorms, and were often greeted with the challenge What do YOU want to learn? They sponsored movies and Electric Carnivals and boycotted beanies. They smoked and drank and talked, were fearful together, were happy together.

In the fall of 1969, the Project population, with the addition of a new class of freshmen, numbered about 500. The ethos of community was still apparent, but it was not enough to counter the effect of a semester and a summer of inertial neglect. The director of P10 left and was not replaced. The initial freshmen, now sophomores and beginning to want things beyond the vision of the Pierpont courtyard, provided little support. There was no decision-making process, and emergencies were fated by whomever was around and interested. Five hundred people proved to be too big for getting anything done. Communications collapsed. Because of the fear of the misuse of power, all power and leadership was shunned. A few faculty sadly resigned because of intellectual apathy.

By the beginning of 1970, some students and faculty, realizing that something was wrong and that defensiveness wouldn't help them, began planning for this semester. Two prosals emerged. One, drawn up chiefly by the students, called for an overhauling and repair of the freshman year, by making it an exploratory, experimental period with weekly advisor consultations. The other proposal (the Moore House Proposal) would have continued Project 10 with the structure it had the previous two years, but would have moved it into only Pierpont House; Moore House would be open to the University for supervised independent study. Both proposals called for the appointment of a director and for the creation of a coed dormitory. The Moore House proposal was submitted to the College of Arts and Sciences with the names of more than 50 interested students. It was rejected by the College during May 1970.

As the Strike strangulated and P10ers began to trickle discouragedly back to their homes, the first visible change in the Project occured with the appointments of a staff for the summer and this fall. Professor Charles Adamd from the English Department, Dr. Dee Appley from Psychology, and David Hoffman and Emmanuel (Mannie) White from the school of Education agreed to act respectively as the director, community consultant, resource person and head of residence for Project 10. (In late August, Mr. White resigned for personal reasons and Charles Guyotte was chosen head of residence). Freshmen were recruited throughout orientation, but because of a Trustee ruling banning freshmen (even volunteers with parental permission) from living in coed dorms, many problems resulted. After some near-crises with the Board of Trustees, a coed-type living arrangement was approved by the Administration late in July, thus ensuring a smaller, more workable population of 300. To avoid the inactivity of counselors that occured in '69-'70, Pierpont counselors were carefully screened and interviewed during the summer.

When the class of '74 arrived for their special P10 orientation on September 2, they were greeted by sensitivity groups, a concert by Armageddon, community meals, films, talks with the faculty, mental change, implications of Women's Liberation on coed dorms, and drugs. The students in Project 10 may take none or even all of their courses in the dorm.

Project 10 has a new spirit. Eric Thomas, a junior and a counselor explained some of the changes in terms of the new freshmen:

This year's freshmen have experienced, prior to college, Woodstock riots pertaining to college, striked and drugs.

The naivety of the freshmen to college life seems to me not too much of a drawback. They appear to have energy some of the upperclassmen lack. Freshmen are maruring, on a basis of situations, parallies to that of upperclassmen, but earlier and faster because of the existing conditions. I myself feel even old fashioned in many instances, ignorant in some and apprehensive at times.

We run out of things to do, so we look talk, bicker, and jest with each other. We're freeing our human element.

In other dorms, said another girl, you get to know the people just on your corridor. Here, you know all the dorm.

But Project 10 is still far from a Utopia. Norma Flershman, a freshman explained during orientation,

Everybody's playing a bunch of games. I'd like to see it when everybody gets down to work and starts to produce. It's all very contradictory. But I've met some very fine people and I don't feel lost.

Others P10ers have complained about disorganization, confusion in goals, and surprisingly, confirmity in the opposity extreme. The typical uniform of a student in P10 (both sexes) is dungarees and a t shirt or work shirt. The educational atmosphere is one of humanities and romanticism--knowing oneself and being in accord with nature before changing the world. Whether or not this apparent center of community interest was artificially created or is truly indicative of individual sentiment will be evidenced by the continued stability of the community aspect of P10, participation in the rest of the University, and by the University's reaction.

The question that faces Project 10 this year is not one of mobility, but of direction. If it fails in what it tries, then the University may never again attempt a student initiated evolving change. If P10 succeeds, then the University will have committed itself to necessary change.

Allen Hails McCoy

Brownsville Chief Joins School of Ed.

Rhody McCoy, the controversial former unit administrator of the Ocean Hill-Brownsville School District in New York City, will join the School of Education at UMass this September.

He has accepted a half-time appointment as a lecturer at the School of Education and as Director of the Worcester-Springfield Career Opportunities Program (COP),both of which will be funded under the Model Cities Program. As lecturer, he will teach a course in urban education, in addition to pursuing a doctoral degree program. As director of the Worcester-Springfield COP program he will be concerned with the training of paraprofessional school personnel.

Dean Dwight Allen of the School of Education said of McCoy, U-Mass is really fortunate to have a man of his caliber. He is one of the most outstanding educators in the country. He noted McCoy's extensive experience in the education of urban youth and the training of paraprofessional school personnel.

Mr. Mc Coy received his B. S. degree from Howard University, his M. A. from New York University, and advance certification in administration and supervision from Brooklyn College. In July 1967, he was named Unit Administrator of Ocean Hill-Brownsville School District 17A, which consists of eight schools enrolling 9,000 students. Other positions he has held include that of acting principal of P. S. 148, Manhattan, and basic education supervisor in a Manpower Development Training Program.

In March of this year, Mr. McCoy was cited by President Nixon for the success of the vew reading programs he introduced at Ocean Hill-Brownsville.

The School of Education's Assistant Dean for Special Program Development, Tobert Woodbury, said, Rhody McCoy has the perception of the kinds of changes that must come in American urban education,and has demonstrated his willingness to experiment with new methods and ideas. He also said that UMass students of urban education will have a special opportunity to work with an administrator with wide experience in the field of urban education.

Ten Join Campus Police, Including Three Women

Ten new campus police officers have been appointed by the University, it was announced by Dr. Randolph W. Bromery, Special Assistant to the Chancellor for Student Affairs.

The 10 appointments, which include three women, were made following a vigorous statewide recruiting campaign, which included ads in nine newspapers, contact with private organizations and local and state ploice officials.

The 182 applicants were required to take a battery of written tests including general knowledge clerical ability, spelling, gram mar, personality, and a general police examination. Those who sucessfully completed the written tests were required to complete a physical examination; a psychological interview, and a physical agility test.

After these tests, the finalists were interviewed by an advisory board consisting of University administrators, psychologists, police officers, a student, and members of the Massachusetts State olice.

Five of those selected were U Mass employees promoted from other positions, while the remaining five came from outside the University.

Independent Theatre Arrives For Four Night Performances

Two one-act plays will be performed by the Independent Theatre Group in Bartlett Theatre at UMass today through Saturday, Sept. 9-12 at 8 p.m.

This engagement has been arranged through the University's Fine Arts Council and brings to area theatre enthusiasts anopportunity to see the work of two of the country's leading off-Broadway playwrights, Sam Shepard and Leonard Melfi.

Shepard's "Red Cross" and Melfi's "Birdbath" will be presented nightly by this company directed by Nick Crzel, who has acted and directed at Theatre Genesis, St. Mark's Church-in-the-Bouwerie, Cafe La Mama and Sheridan Square Playhouse and in the Open Theatre under Joseph Chaikin in New York.

The company includes Barbara eda-Young, formerly of the Lincoln Center Repertory Company; Beeson Carroll, 1969 winner of the coveted Obie Award for distinguished performance; and Babs Root, well known Western Massachusetts actress.

Mr. Orzel organized the Independent Theatre Group in February 1969 while establishing a drama program at the Berkshire Farm for Boys in Canaan, N.Y. He persuaded a number of actors to join him in producing an original play, "The Baron" by David Knolls. The group decided to try to work at theatre away from New York. Despite financial and artistic restrictions, it has been successful in this effort, as indicated by the critical acclaim for its recent season at Ryther House Barn Theatre in Bernardston.

Ticket prices for this engagement are $1 for students and $1.50 for others. Tickets are available at the University's Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at Bartlett Box Office one hour before curtain each evening.

Theatre 14 to Open With'Romeo,Juliet

"Romeo and Juliet", to be presented at Smith College September 16-20 and 23-27, directed by Stephen Macht of the Smith theatre faculty, will be the first production of the year in Theatre 14, the main theatre in the Center for the Performing Arts.

If the Festival experiment proves successful, it is hoped that in future years more plays will be done, to give the actors and audience an even wider experience in Shakespearean drama. Unlike summer stock, where actors must prepare adifferent play every week with little rehearsal time, the Festival set-up allows for intensive work on one play - a unique opportunity outside of the academic schedule.

Even in this first year, a Festival atmosphere prevails in the theatre. To prepare "Romeo and Juliet", more than 25 Smith and Amherst students and Smith graduate students cut short their summer vacations to begin rehearsals and work on sets and costumes

"Young, Gifted and Black' Slated for Late September

"To Be Young, Gifted and Black," the highly-successful play that ran off-Broadway for more than a year, will be performed by the New York company at UMass., Sept. 25 and 26.

Three performances under the auspices of the University's Fine Arts Council will take place in Bowker Auditorium, including a special matinee performance Saturday, Sept. 26 at 2:30 p.m. The evening performances will be at 8 p.m.

"To Be Young, Gifted and Black" is the story, told in her own words, of Lorraine Hansberry, the brilliant young author of "A Raisin in the Sun" who died in 1965 of cancer. Presented with poignancy and humor, the play, a major statement of the black experience in America, recreates the world of a great American woman and artist who touched the taproots of the human condition.

Boldly contemporary in form, this work was woven together from letters, diaries, notebooks and portions of her plays by Robert Nemiroff, Miss Hansberry's husband and literary executor. The production played to consistently sold-out houses in New York for over a year and has toured at college and university campuses with immense success.

Reserved seats for the three performances of "To Be Young, Gifted and Black" go on sale at the Fine Arts Council Box Office on Friday, Sept. 11, and are priced at $1.50 for UMass undergraduates; $2 for UMass graduate students and students from other schools; $2.50 for UMass faculty and staff; and $3 for the general public. Mail orders may be directed with stamped, self-addressed envelope to the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall Amherst, Mass. 01002.

Continuing Education Slates

Course For Librarians Featured

A special course for librarians will be offered this fall at UMass.

The course will be given by the UMass Division of Continuing Education in cooperation with the University of Rhode Island Division of University Extension and the University of Rhode Island Graduate Library School. It will provide practical experience in the use of basic reference materials, with readings and discussions of the philosophy and administrative aspects of reference work.

The three-credit course, Library Science 212, is one of the required courses for the URI program leading to a master's degree in library science.

VENMAN HEADS

Dr. William C. Venman, director of the UMass Continuing Education program, said, "Eventually we hope to develop a program here, under the auspices of the University of Rhode Island, for all basic graduate courses in library science, leading to URI's Master of Library Science degree. Rhode Island is the only New England state university with a library school."

The course will be held Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 12 noon, starting Sept. 26, in Room 602, Goodell Library, at the UMass campus. The instructor will be Miss Lucille Wickersham, librarian at Bay Path Junior College.

Applicants for admission must hold a bachelor's degree from a four-year institution of approved standing, with an overall average of "B" or better, for unconditional acceptance. The fee for the course if $85, and the minimum enrollment for the course for it to be offered is 20. Applications for admission will be included in registration material sent out.

Students may register for the course by mail until Sept. 8, or in person at the Division of Continuing Education offices from Sept. 8, or in person at the Division of Continuing Education offices from Sept. 9 to 18. Registration material may be obtained by writing to the Library Science Program, Division of Continuing Education, 920 Lincoln Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, 01002. CEQ Presents Film Series; All Deal With Environment Coalition For Environmental Quality presents a free film series downstairs in the campus center today from noon to nine and tomorrow from 9 A.M. to 9 P.M.

BULLDOZED AMERICA, with William O. Douglas and Stuart Udall, shows Commercialism, "Developments," Construction, and the bulldozer pushes back the ever shrinking areas of wilderness and natural beauty.

POPULATION EXPLOSION shows how the "space ship earth" has finite reserves of life-sustaining, wealth producing resources. Our population expansion could be outstripping them.

THE GRAND CANYON shows the canyon as a living eco-system and an open page in Earth's natural history. The Army Corps of engineers has planned to make the canyon into a dammed lake.

Recent legislation makes WASTED WOODS highly relevant. Forests that must serve generations yet unborn are savagely wasted and destroyed by the lumber industry.

Every eco-system meshes with the others in "strands" of dependence. STRAND BREAKS tells what happens when these "strands" are threatened by overgrazing and hunting.

Frosh Games Played, Watermelons Awarded

As the upperclassmen busily moved back onto campus yesterday, a large portion of the freshmen class spent their second afternoon at UMass relaxing at the freshmen games in the field behind southwest.

Soon after the warm-up exercises and spirit-building cheers led by the Scrolls, counselors, and the Southwest Patriots, the initial inhibitions disappeared, and everyone concentrated on meeting people and generally having fun.

The teams were divided according to dorms, and for two hours they competed in such relays as the three-legged race, leap frog, wheelbarrow race, and potato race to the cheers and groans of spectators and players alike.

The four teams totaling the most points won watermelons, with JQA and Washington uppers coming in Exhausted after the games, everyone left to enjoy the outdoor sandwich dinner and band.

Registration Day Goes Smoothly Thousands Return for More Today

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

"Thursday, September 10 is designated as Course Change Day for the Fall semester for Undergraduates. ACTIVITY will take place in Boyden gymnasium from 8:30 a.m. to 4:15 p.m.

This year's "activity", according to Tom Chamberlain, head of the University Scheduling Office, won't be too bad.

"About 90-92% of the students had their first choices satisfied", commented Chamberlain, between questions from confused undergraduates yesterday in Boyden gym. "I think this is pretty good," he added.

Registration day passed without major disruption, with the help of forty-two student employees of forty-two student employees, four regular employees of the Scheduling Office and volunteers from the Scrolls, Maroon Keys, Alpha Phi Omega, and Gamma Sigma Sigma. The longest wait once students entered the Gym was about five minutes. Fourteen hundred students were processed every fourty-five minutes, according to Chamberlain. The line stretching in front of Boyden offered a considerably longer wait for those standing in the rain waiting their turn.

Today, as you wait in line to replace those "ovrnrolld or rstrctd, you are drop!" (sic) courses, perhaps these facts and figures will comfort you:

--on the average, everybody got about four and one half of the five courses pre-registered.

--course change day is just "about the same" every year, consistently, no matter what year it is.

--About 2000 students were informed before registration day that they had lost pre-registered courses. Mr. Chamberlain said that the Scheduling Office is working on a system which will eventually tell students, before registration day, which course will be overloaded.

--This year there were only about 8000 courses dropped from student schedules. Six thousand openings were created during the summer.

--The History department, rather than Psychology or Sociology took the brunt of the course overloads.

--Most of the begining Sociology, Psychology, History, Zoology, English, Botany 100, Astronomy 100 and art courses are closed.

--This is the third consecutive year that it has rained on Registration Day. (Even though we at the Collegain shy away from prophecy, we always knew that Registration day was all wet.)

--English 125, even though it is no longer a requirement, had 800 more people pre-registered than spaces available.

--Approximately 490 people signed up for P.E. 100's horse riding. The University only has 18 horses.

--The School of Education courses are "in a squeeze," as usual.

As you make your way to Boyden today keep in mind some of the hints given by the Registrar. Namely, it doesn't make much difference whether you drop and add early or late, and the earlier you arrive the longer you usually have to wait.

Naff Appointed Chairman Of Asian Studies Dept.

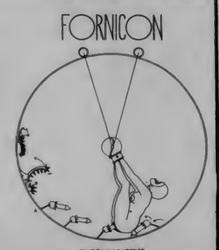
William E. Naff, associate professor of Japanese language and literature, has been appointed Chairman of the Asian Studies Program at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

More than 20 members of the University faculty from nine different departments and programs in the College of Arts and Sciences are associated with the Asian Studies Program. They will offer approximately 35 courses concerned wholly or primarily with Asia during the academic year 1970-71.

Prof. Naff, who received his doctorate from the University of Washington, specializes in early twentieth century Japanese fiction. He has published several articles and translations on this subject and his book-length study of Shimazaki Toson, a leading poet and novelist, will soon be published.

Before coming to UMass, Professor Naff taught at the University of Oregon, Stanford University, and the University of California at Los Angeles. He has lived in Japan for a total of four and a half years, including two years beginning in 1960 as a Ford Foundation Foreign Area Training Fellow. During the academic year 1964-65, he was chairman of the Advisory Board for the Center for Japanese Language Studies in Tokyo.

The Asian Studies Program at the University is concerned with Asia from Pakistan to Japan, with greatest strength at present in the areas of China, Japan, and India. The program offers degrees through existing departments and degree-granting programs. The program also has the responsibility of assisting in the Asian area aspects of curriculum planning for students of any department or school who may need to develop an Asian emphasis.



At present the Chinese and Japanese languages are being taught. Native speakers predominate in the language and literature faculty, teaching courses at various levels including both first-year courses. Mrs. Nora Wang and Mr. Ching-hsien Wang have just accepted appointments to the faculty of the Asian Studies Program. Mrs. Wang is an experienced language teacher who has been working with the Center for Chinese Studies in Berkeley, Calif. Mr. Wang, a poet of established reputation in Chinese and of growing reputation in English, is a doctoral candidate in comparative literature at the University of California.

Dr. Lucien Miller, the first American of Western descent to receive a doctorate in comparative literature with Chinese as his major literature, is presently on the staff as an assistant professor of Chinese and comparative literature.

UMass Haunted by 1.6 Rule, Redmen Miss Date with ABC

UMass will be without the services of two of its finest football players this season as once again the 1.6 rule has come back to haunt Redman athletics. Last year, UMass mistakenly violated the rule which states that an incoming student has to 'project' a 1.6 average for his freshman year or else he can't compete in organized sports.

At that time, UMass turned itself in to the Yankee Conference and to the NCAA. Subsequently, the NCAA placed the Redmen on a one-year probation without sanctions until April.

Recently, the Yankee Conference decided to take further action and take away the eligibility of two of UMass' finest prospects, namely guard Pierre Marchando and end Nick McGarry. Neither of the athletes can be blamed for the infraction since it is the University which decides upon the eligibility of its athletes. Yet it is McGarry and Marchando who must suffer for UMass' mistake.

Speaking of the Yankee Conference, UMass once again suffered due to the unwillingness of one of its rivals to cooperate. Last year it was discovered that UMass was involved in a deal with the American Broadcasting Company in which the UMass-BC game was to be one of that networks regional game-of-the-week presentations. However, for this to happen, it was necessary for the Redmen to shift their schedule so that the game could be played in September instead of later in the season.

The exact date turned out to be September 19 and the scheduled opponent was Maine. UMass then asked Maine to reschedule the game, a move which would have meant extending the Black Bears' season by two weeks. The Redmen offered to pay Maine for its inconvenience but Maine refused. This decision cost the Conference thousands of dollars as well as good TV exposure for UMass. Once in a while, the Yankee Conference must do something good for UMass, but when?

If sometime during one of the UMass football games this year, you notice a few Redmen players who you thought were seniors last year taking part in the action, you are absolutely correct. In fact, there are five Redmen who, although listed as seniors a year ago, still have one year of eligibility left. The five are quarterback Ken Hughes, linebacker Don Dotson, tackle Dick Donlin, defensive tackle Marty Scherallis, and captain John Farrelly, a linebacker. Scherallis was sidelined last year with a chronic shoulder injury and will do some of the kicking along with his regular line duties. Hughes, who saw a good deal of action last year, is the team's most experienced signal caller.

UMass welcomes a new addition to its coaching staff this season as Nick Nicolau replaces the late Jack Delaney as offensive backfield coach. Nicolau was head football coach at Bridgeport as well as professor of education before making his way to Amherst.

A native of New Bedford, he received his bachelor's degree from Southern Connecticut State College where he played football and track. He later received his M. S. from the University of Indiana and his Ph. D. from Springfield College in 1965. He has had previous coaching experience at New Bedford and Wareham High Schools as well as Southern Connecticut State and Springfield.

Redman football players will have a different look this fall as they don new helmets. The new design is similar to last year's except that a UM replaces the 100 which was symbolic of 1969 football's centennial year.

Fusia's Challenge: To Be Even Better

Veteran Coach Heads Fine Defense But Concerned About Depth

UMass head football coach Vic Fusia is entering his tenth season at the helm of the Redmen. All but one of those campaigns has been a winning one while five of Fusia's squads have copped the Beanpot, symbolic of tops in Yankee Conference football.

A 1938 graduate of Manhattan College, his lifetime mark against Yan-Con opponents stands at 38-6; his overall record is 55 wins, 26 losses and one tie, the best winning percentage of any UMass football coach in the school's grid history.

Fusia, who arrived on the Redman scene in 1961, banged out seven winning teams in as many years before faltering in his eighth campaign when the 1968 UMass contingent stumbled to an embarrassing 2-8 mark.

Much to the delight of the UMass fans, Fusia and the Redmen engineered a complete about-face last fall, capturing the Conference title with a clean 5-0 Yan-Con slate, upsetting New England's top-rated team, Boston University, by a 14-9 count, losing only three tilts, two toughies to eastern notables Buffalo and Delaware and one heartbreaker to Boston College.

On Sept. 19, UMass will open its 87th football year at home against now-traditional opening-game rival Maine. Pre-season practice is currently in session. The first five days of training proceeded at a good pace until a virus took the toll of 20 players on the sixth day. Some Redmen contacted the bug for 24 hours, others for 12. It wasn't until Tuesday of this week that a full squad suited up for practice.

As far as the development of the team's two platoons is concerned, Fusia indicated, "At this stage of the game, the defense is way ahead of the offense which is a normal thing." He added that the defense is extremely quick with a lot of good hitters.

In behalf of the offense, the coach had this to say: "We, of course, are still making adjustments...due to those two big holes created by the loss of (Pierre) Marchando and (Nick) McGarry." It is his premise that the offense needs to improve its timing. Overall, he thinks that the team is further advanced that it was at this stage a year ago.

Fusia was asked to name any players who have been outstanding in drills thus far and his answer was: "At the moment, its really been a unit operation without a total standout, or an individual standing out, which is good."

One of the most important positions being vyed for on this autumn's Redman team is quarterback with veteran Ken Hughes "ahead of the pack at the moment." Fusia has been impressed by the showing of two lesser-known candidates, senior Tom Holmes and sophomore Len Matuza. He commented that '69's number three quarterback Mike Marchev has been slow responding, "but I'm sure he'll come around." The head mentor's summary: "We'll have good quarterbacking."

Depth is surely one thing that grid coaches must concern themselves with during spring and pre-campaign drills. Mr. Fusia was queried as to where on the Redman squad would one find the most depth and he quipped, "Well, that's our problem. We don't have depth at the moment."

Afte such a stirring statement, Fusia pointed out, "We're looking to some of these younger people to solve this depth problem. Our success depends upon the quality of our depth."

The problem of depth, or the lack of it, results in part from the graduation of senior lettermen, and the Redmen graduated some fine ones last year, among them, Jerry Grasso, Tom York, Steve Rogers, Tim Adams, Ed Sarno, John MacLean, Andy Guarino, Paul Toner and Steve Parnell.

Fusia talked a little about a few of these fine players. He spoke of Grasso, York and Rogers and would have liked to continue but time was at a minimum.

When asked to comment on the team's spirit thus far, the coach quickly emitted adjectives like "excellent" and "remarkable", labelling enthusiasm as "one of the strong points."

On the subject of injuries, cautiously happy coach Fusia announced, "We've had the customary rash of bumps and bruises, nothing major."

The 1970 Redmen have set up a couple of goals, rather expected ones. They want first to win the Yankee Conference crown and secondly to knock off as many out-of-league opponents as possible.

The coach commented that the league title was important, "this year more than ever", but would not elaborate. It's not difficult to rationalize this statement, however, as UMass will have a score to settle with Maine for not moving its playing date so that the Redmen could face BC on television and pull in a large sum of money and a score to settle with Connecticut for blowing the whistle on McGarry and Marchando.

Fusia emphasized the verb "concerned" when the subject of UMass matching up against potent outsiders Dartmouth, Buffalo and BC was mentioned. Among Yan-Con teams, Fusia and the Redmen have the most respect for UConn and Rhode Island. Maine is also on the UMass list of important Conference tussles because it is the opener, a game which can often sway a season one way or the other.

No comment was forwarded by the Redman leader in regard to the loss of McGarry and Marchando, just the obvious fact that their absense leaves the team with two giant holes to fill.

Captain John Farrelly, along with his fellow seniors, was cited for his leadership as a big boost to the team's spirit. Fusia made it clear that McGarry is still considered by the team to be its other captain. Each week, a new player will be selected to represent the lost end, to stand as Farrelly's co-captain for the game.

Presently, several Redmen are sporting real-Redman-type haircuts, with just a patch of hair in the middle of the head; in some cases, no hair at all. Fusia's explanation: "This is a protest against our opponents. Everything is a symbol nowadays. This is their symbol."

Fusia offered a summary of the 1970 Redman grid prospects when he said, "If we stay free of injury, and the ball bounces right, this could be a fine football team."

Offensive Machine Has Good Parts . . .

Each and every time a football is snapped from a UMass center this fall into the waiting hands of a Redman quarterback, a psychological switch will be flicked that turns to on the football machine, a machine whose parts are young human male beings who must all work together if the machine is to achieve its end, which is the advancement of an oblong pigskin across a white line marked with a G. The following is a rundown of many of the key parts whose whole is the UMass football offense.

JOHN HULECKI

QUARTERBACK

KEN HUGHES-Senior-5'11-180-No. 15: Hughes is the most experienced quarterback in the Redman camp, having shared much of the leadership duties with Tim Adams a year ago. His completion percentage in '69 was 44% and he has looked very fine in pre-season drills.

MIKE MARCHEV-Senior-6'-185 No. 11: Marchev could very well take charge of the QB position if things break his way. Injuries have bothered him over the years but he possesses the necessary tools to have a big year with UMass.

HALFBACKS

PAT SCAVONE-Senior-5'11-187 No. 20: Scavone is durable, dependable and often spectacular and has lettered at halfback for the last two years. He was '69's leading ground-gainer and scorer, a year which saw him average 5.4 yards per carry. He also nabbed 13 passes for an average plus of 11 yards.

MARK RUSSELL-Senior -5'11-180-No. 22: Russell performed extremely well in a reserve role in a few late-season games last autumn. He knocked off 4.7 yards-a-try and notched three touchdowns.

MIKE SAWYER-Junior-6'1-205-No. 25: Sawyer has had injury trouble during his two-year Redman career but look for a healthy 210 halfback to carry a good deal of the UMass running load this fall. He gained a letter last spring for his play on the varsity baseball squad.

ART CORSALETTI-Senior-5'10 190-No. 44: Corsaletti averaged five yards a carry in '69 as a reserve runner and will be depended upon more in this campaign.

FULLBACK

DICK CUMMINGS-Junior-6'230 No. 30: Cummings earned a letter last year after his solid, and often outstanding, work out of the fullback slot. He lugged the ball 77 times in '69 at a 5.5 yard clip. He was the leading rusher in the spring intrasquad tilt and could develop into one of the best fullbacks in Redman history.

DICK HEAVEY - Senior 6'-210 No. 32: Heavey ran with the ball 20 times last fall in a reserve role; however, he gained 145 yards, an excellent 7.5-yard average.

CENTER

DAVID LEVINE-Junior-6'1-230 No. 57: Levine produced an excellent soph campaign in '69, playing well enough to be selected to the All-Yankee Conference first team. He is one of UMass' very best offensive linemen.

RON MARINO-Junior-6'2-225-No. 56: Marino's ability makes center one of the strongest positions on the entire squad. He earned a letter last fall while alternating with Levine.

GUARDS

BOB PENA-Senior-6'2-250-No. 68: Pena had a solid season last autumn as a junior transferred from Dean Junior College. He could well mould himself into one of the finest of all Redman guards.

DANIEL KELLEY-Junior-5'11-211-No. 60: Kelley missed his entire sophomore year due to surgery on a knee injury but, should he be fully recovered, his presense on the offensive line may be felt.

VIC MORENO-Sophomore-5'11-210-No. 62: Moreno looked fine during spring practice and is capable of seeing a great deal of action this autumn.

JAMES QUEENEY-Sophomore-6'3-186-No. 61: Queeney is an excellent prospect up from the frosh squad and should see valuable service in this, his soph season.

TACKLES

BOB DONLIN Junior 6'3-230-No. 73: Donlin earned a selection to the All-Yan-Con first unit after a great sophomore year in '69. Very strong, he can do it all, pass blocking efficiently and blocking downfield superbly.

DICK DONLIN Senior 6'7 290-No.70: Donlin, Bob's older brother, also was named to the All-Yan-Con first team and his steady play will help anchor the starting UMass line.

BOB PENA

DAVE LEVINE

DICK ETNA Junior 5'11 200 No.63: Etna garnered a letter last fall for his reserve role at tackle and his experience will be valuable as a backup to the Donlins.

DENNIS CUNNINGHAM Sophomore-6'2-215-No.65: Cunningham looked fine during spring practice and will add depth to the present tackle picture.

ENDS

JOHN HULECKI Junior-6'4-228-No. 85: Hulecki has abundant talent and will see all kinds of action this year as both an offensive tight end and defensive end. He notched All-Yan-Con first team consideration for his play at defensive end last year. On offense, he was the Redmen's second best receiver and he should be even better as a junior.

. . . Which Must Work Efficiently and Together

JOE LAND-Junior 6'1 210 No.81: Lang has been switched to a tight end position from a halfback post that he worked out of last year. Although inexperienced, he could see a great deal of varsity action this year.

STEVE SHUBERT-Sophomore-5'10-180-No.80:Shubert was a star for '69's frosh and is respected for his versatility. He will be performing as: a split end, a punt returner and a kickoff returner. He has fine speed.

WALTER O'MALLEY- Junior 6'-185-No.88; O'Malley is one of UMass' best speed-burners who could garner the starting split end slot. He impressed many during spring drills.

TIBB ROCKWELL-Sophomore-6'2-220-No. 87: Rockwell had an impressive year as the frosh's fullback. However, he has been shifted to tight end and should catch lots of valuable playing time.

KICKING SPECIALIST

DENIS GAGNON-Junior-6'-185-No. 8: Gagnon converted 35 of 38 points-after-touchdown in '69 and wound up as the second leading Redman scorer. With a year of experience behind him, he could become one of the most talented toes in the area.

(Of course, more people than the above mentioned players go into the working of the Redman offense; however, various factors lead to the exclusion of some, the inclusion of others.)

Exciting '69 Redmen Carved Out Comeback

UM Rang Up 6-3 Mark, Copped Title

After a disasterous 1968 season, the 1969 campaign was looked upon as a return to greatness. Coach Vic Fusia led his Redmen to a very successful 6-3 year in which UMass was undefeated in the Yankee Conference and winners of five in a row at one point in the season.

This '69 squad played some of the most exciting football ever seen in Alumni Stadium and provided some great thrills as well as surprises for a lot of people. The high-scoring Redmen averaged almost thirty points a game and, in six games, the defense allowed an average of only a single touchdown. Led by an awesome ground attack, UMass rolled over many of its weaker Conference rivals as well as providing some unexpected results against some of the stronger reams in the area.

But let us look again and see what happened.

UMASS 49 - MAINE 7

Playing against traditional first-game rival Maine, UMass demonstrated from the opening gun that it had returned as a football power. Moving behind the superb running of Ed Sarno, Jerry Grasso, Pat Scavone and Dick Heavey, and the accurate arm of senior quarterback Tim Adams, the Redmen played almost flawlessly against the improving Black Bears.

Heavey, playing as a third string fullback behind Sarno and sophomore Dick Cummings, was the game's leading ground gainer as he carried for 67 yards. Adams, starting his second season at the controls of the UMass offense, mixed his plays well and completed eight of ten passes for 154 yards.

After Adams had led the Redmen to five scores, reserve quarterback Ken Hughes took over and the machine-like offense continued to roll as Hughes hit senior John Decembrele from the six and junior Art Corsaletti completed the scoring with a 20-yard jaunt. Placekicker Dennis Gagnon connected on his seventh consecutive conversion and UMass was off to an auspicious start to the '69 season. However, although things looked rosy for the Redmen at this point, there were still a lot of tough football games to be played.

UMass was brought back down to earth, however, the next Saturday, as Buffalo spoiled the Redman's home opener by grinding out a 16-6 victory. After a very even first half in which UMass trailed by three, 9-6, the well-disciplined Bulls controlled the ball in the second half and scored one touchdown in the fourth quarter to put the game away.

The Redmen scored first as Adams threw to Grasso who made an over-the-head grab and scampered 30 yards to pay dirt. Gagnon missed the point after following an illegal procedure penalty. Buffalo pulled ahead in the second quarter, however, as the Bull's fine signal caller, Mick Murtha, completed an 18-yardpass to end Paul Lang. The conversion put Buffalo ahead, 7-6.

Late in the second half, UMass took over on its own one-yard line after the Redman defense had masterfully stopped the Bulls on two running plays from that spot. But on the first offensive play, Adams fumbled the ball and was tackled in his own end zone for a safety.

It was a disappointing loss for the Redmen and for the fans who had high hopes after the Maine game.

DELAWARE 33 - UMASS 21

After holding a 21-20 lead for most of the game, UMass lost its second game in succession at Alumni Stadium, to the Blue Hens of Delaware, 33-21. This was a game that had more than its share of thrills and the 10,500 fans enjoyed everything but the outcome.

After the highly-touted Blue Hens had scored eight plays after the opening kickoff, Pat Scavone brought the Redmen back with a 66-yard gallop on UMass' first play from scrimmage. The junior back took the handoff from Adams and swept left behind good blocking in the line. He got a good block from Sarno about 25 yards from pay dirt and was home free after that.

Scavone was not yet finished. Seven minutes later he came back with a fourteen yard run to put UMass on top, 14-7. Ken Hughes replaced Adams in the second period and directed the offense to their third TD on a 13-yard run by Grasso. Unfortunately for the Redmen, there was still another half to play and Delaware just proved to be too strong.

So after having begun the season so well, things looked bleak for UMass football as fans began to have visions of 1968. But the best was yet to come.

UMASS 14 - BOSTON U. 9

Playing defense as if it had invented the term, UMass stung then unbeaten BU, 14-9, as the Redmen scored a touchdown with only 40 seconds left in what was an exciting, hard-hitting football game.

The UMass defense, after having a bad game against Delaware, came back with what must be rated its finest effort of the season in this one. The BU offense could not score a single point against the UMass defense, their nine points resulting from a return of a missed field goal attempt and a safety.

The missed field goal turned into disaster as the ever-dangerous Bruce Taylor returned it 104 yards for the Terrier's only touchdown amidst the cheers of the BU fans. But the real excitement, for UMass anyway, was yet to come.

It all started when Bill Sroka recovered a Terrier fumble on the BU 41-yard line. UMass then moved the ball on the ground and were left with a fourth-and-one on the BU 19. In unorthodox fashion, Adams sent Scavone around left end for nine yards to the ten for a first down. Soph bulldozer Dick Cummings took the ball down to the one on the next play and halfback Craig Lovell got the privilege of scoring the game-winning TD as he swept around right end for the score.

From the depths of depression after the Delaware loss, the Redmen were raised to the heights of glory with this their finest win.

UMASS 21 - RHODE ISLAND 9

A letdown was in order against URI but the Redmen still had more than enough to soundly defeat the struggling Rams. It turned out to be a good workout for the UMass backs as the Redmen amassed 397 yards on the unbelievable total of 70 attempts. As far as statistics go, Scavone had 118 yards on 14 carries, Cummings had 124 yards on 24 carries, and Sarno had 77 yards on 11 carries.

Once again the defense came through with a splendid effort. The game, however, served more as a warm-up for the big Conference game with UConn than anything else.

UMASS 28 - UCONN 7

The defense, which has played splendidly since the BU victory, once again proved the deciding factor in this crucial Yankee Conference battle. Holding an offense as powerful as UConn's to only 37 net yards on the ground and 115 in the air as well as intercepting five Rick Robustelli aerials is some chore and the defense certainly deserved the credit for this victory. Coming in for special praise were tackles Bill DeFlavio and Andy Guarino, ends Paul Toner and Curt Bristol, linebackers Joe Sabulis and Tom York, and safetyman Steve Rogers who picked off two passes.

However, even though the defense played so well, the offense had a hard time getting untracked. It wasn't until 3:37 had elapsed in the third period that UMass was able to score on a one-yard Cummings run. That touchdown tied the score at seven.

Three last quarter TD's by Nick McGarry, Lovell, and Sarno put the game away for the Redmen and gave them a firm grasp on the Beanpot trophy, symbolic of Yankee Conference supremacy. A win over Vermont would clinch the award for UMass.

UMASS 48 - VERMONT 7

In a contest very reminiscent of the season opener against Maine, the Redmen simply demolished Vermont to win the Yankee Conference football championship, climaxing a return to grid prominence after a season of despair. It was a combination of stellar defense and overpowering offense which carried the Redmen to their fourth straight victory.

UP AND RUNNING - UMass got a tremendous jump on the '69 season when it bounded past Maine, 49-7, at Crono, Me. Hauling in an aerial is now departed halfback Jerry Grasso.

Senior Hughes started the game, but all three signal callers, including sophomore Mike Marchev, saw plenty of action. Adams led the offense to three scores while Hughes and Marchev had two apiece.

Although the contest may have seemed just like any ordinary game to most people, it meant a lot to UMass football coach Vic Fusia. This was the game that UMass won the Beanpot trophy and Fusia proved to all his critics that he had not lost the winning habit.

This was also the last home game for the seniors on the squad and every one of them saw some action. In fact, 62 of the 64 men on the team got into the game at one time or another.

UMASS 48 - NEW HAMPSHIRE 7

Rolling to their fifth win in a row, UMass once again had no trouble at all in trouncing one of its Yankee Conference rivals. About the only thing worth saying about this one was the fact that the 48 points gave UMass a new Yankee Conference scoring record of 194 points, beating the precious mark of 181 set by the Redmen in 1963.

The touchdowns were scored by Scavone, two, Mark Russell, two, McGarry, Grasso, and Hughes. Also deserving of praise were guard Pierre Marchando, fullback Heavey, and the entire defense as usual.

The next game was to be the toughest challenge of the season for it was against Boston College, the game that was pointed for all season. After winning five straight, UMass looked ready.

B. C. 35 - UMASS 30

In what had to be the most disappointing loss in a long time, UMass fought bravely and gave everything it had only to fall short and lose to BC, 35-30. This had to be also the most emotional game of the year as tears were evident on the sidelines and in the morgue that served as a dressing room. This was the one that UMass wanted. Sure, winning the Yankee Conference means a lot but BC is big time football and the Eagles beating them means just a little bit extra.

Because the Redmen wanted to win so badly, there was a great deal of pressure on them from the start. The pressure caused mistakes and mistakes probably cost UMass the game. But the Redmen never let the mistakes get them down and made up for them by just not quitting. Only a last minute interception which killed all hope for a UMass win could still the spirit of the Redmen.

As far as the game itself goes, it was all offense. BC amassed 394 total offensive yards while UMass had 320. The highlight of the game was an 82-yard run by Jerry Grasso on the first play of the second half and although he was stopped at the one, Lovell went in for the score on the next play. This seemed to give UMass even more of a lift as it trailed by 28-21 with a full half to play. But things just weren't to be.

But that game, more than anything else, has got to give the returning players a spirit and desire for the coming season. Perhaps this year they can get that victory which has eluded them for so long. It would sure be nice on top of another Beanpot trophy.

A BIG WIN - One of the Redmen's proudest '69 moments came when they bounced back from two straight losses to upset tough Boston University, 14-9. Quarterback Ken Hughes directs the offense under the pressure of a fierce BU pass rush.

Tougher'70Schedule Faces Redmen

Dartmouth, BC, Buffalo Highlight New Season

When one takes his first glance at a 1970 UMass football schedule, he first realizes that, oh yeh, there's the five Yankee Conference opponents, Maine, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Vermont and New Hampshire. He mulls over this fact for two or three seconds and thinks that, yup, UConn will probably be the toughest.

But he's more interested in the out-of-league opponents and, to his heart's delight, he finds that the fighting Redmen will challenge three of the tougher colleges in the East in the names of Dartmouth, Buffalo and Boston College. Can UMass beat one or possibly two of these big three? He's hopeful, quick to add that Boston University, the fourth outsider, is no slouch either.

He approves of the schedule and is looking forward to those home games against B.U., UConn and B.C. After reading the capsule reports of the Redmen's ten opponents, provided below, his excitement runs to fever pitch as he anxiously awaits Sept. 19 and the home opener against Maine.

Game 1-MAINE(Yankee Conference). Date: Sept. 19. Place: Alumni Stadium. Coach: Walt Abbott (4th year-W8-L 17). Nickname: Black Bears. Last year's record: 5-4. Returning lettermen: 22. Lettermen lost: 24.

Capsule Comment: Fourth-year coach Walt Abbott brought Maine its first winning season since 1965 last year when his high-spirited Black Bears recorded a 5-4 mark. With an experienced offensive line, plus some fine runners, Abbott is hoping to continue the winning trend.

Gone is the famous pass-completion duo of quarterback Dave Wing and All-Yan-Con end Gene Benner. Bob Hamilton, senior co-captain, will switch from his halfback slot to replace Wing while three veteran backs will carry the mail for him.

Maine has some fine players starring on the defensive line and at linebacker; they are tackles Arnie James (co-captain) and Dick Todd, ends Stan Maddock and Mike Landry and middle guard John Rhodes. Basically this looks like another pesky Black Bear grid squad; what it lacks in size and talent is usually made up for in spirit and determination.

Schedule: at UMass (Sept. 19), Hofstra (26), Rhode Island (Oct.3), at New Hampshire (10), at Connecticut (17), C.W. Post (24), at Northeastern (31) and Vermont (Nov. 7).

Game 2-DARTMOUTH. Date: Sept. 26. Place: Hanover, N.H. (Memorial Field-capacity 21,416) Coach: Bob Blackman (16th year W 95-L 37-T 3). Nickname: Indians, Big Green. Last year;s record: 8-1. Returning lettermen: 24. Lettermen lost: 19.

Capsule Comment: It will be tough for the Indians to match last season's 8-1 mark that saw them tie with Yale and Princeton for the Ivy League crown; Dartmouth's opponents in the Ivy should be even stronger.

The Big Green defense, which was second in forward pass defense, tenth in scoring defense and ninth in total defense nationally last fall, should feel hindering effects from the loss of seven starters although Dartmouth's replacement prospects are very bright.

On offense, much depends on the quarterbacking status of Jim Chasey, a senior who suffered a shoulder separation during Dartmouth's final game lost against Princeton last year. A fine team leader, he has since undergone two operations to correct the damage done to his throwing arm.

The starting backfield and the two starting ends are strong but depth in these departments is lacking. The offensive line shapes up well. Going into pre-season practice, Dartmouth had no player on its squad who had ever punted or kicked conversions in a varsity game and thus the kicking game is an Indian problem area.

Schedule: UMass (Sept. 26), at Holy Cross (Oct. 3), Princeton (10), Brown (17), at Harvard (24), at Yale (31), Columbia (Nov. 7), at Cornell (14) and at Pennsylvania (21).

Game 3-BUFFALO. Date: Oct. 3. Place: Buffalo, N.Y. (Rotary Field-capacity 13,000). Coach: Bob Deming (2nd year-W 6-L 3). Nickname: Bulls. Last year's record: 6-3. Returning lettermen: 22. Lettermen lost: 18.

Capsule Comment: Buffalo is looking to improve on its 6-3 mark of a year ago and seeks to do so with a defense that will welcome back eight starters. A look at the defensive line validates Buffalo's trust in this unit. That unit features ends Tom Vigneau (212) and Prentis Henley (236) as two of the best anywhere.

The tackles are no slouches either; they're 260-pound Rovel Jones and 266-pound Barry Atkinson. These four guys plus the remainder of the Bull defense finished sixth in pass defense, fourth in defense against scoring and eighth in total defense nationally in 1969.

The Bulls are proud of their "1" offense, which will feature sophomore Kirk Barton at quarterback, a person whose job it will be to fill the big shoes of departed star Mike Murtha. The rest of the backfield is experienced. The offensive line is good but lacks depth.

Schedule: Ball State (Sept. 12), Toledo (19), at Kent State (26), UMass (Oct. 3), Villanova (10), at Dayton (17), at Virginia Tech. (24), Holy Cross (31), at Boston College (Nov.7), at Temple (14) and at Northern Illinois (21).

Game 4-BOSTON UNIVERSITY. Date: Oct. 10. Place: Alumni Stadium. Coach: Larry Naviaux (2nd year-W 9-L 2). Nickname: Terriers. Last year's record: 9-2. Returning lettermen: 24 Lettermen lost: 21.

VERMONT'S BOB ROGER

FRED WILLIS FRANK HARRIS

BC's exciting double threat

Capsule Comment: New England's and the nation's top-rated coach of 1969, Larry Naviaux, is leading his second Terrier squad, one which has nine starters back on offense but which has lost eight starters on defense.

Although so many are back on offense, this unit is not very deep. The whole backfield is back; junior Sam Hollo at quarterback and halfbacks Gary Capehart and Pat Diamond are very dependable performers in this vital area. Depth is most needed in the interior of the offensive line, but the two end posts have four very good candidates vying for starting positions.

The 49'ers, Chiefs, Giants and Falcons of the National Football League have snatched BU defensive graduates Bruce Taylor, Fred Barry, Pat Hughes and Gil Holloway respectively. Adequately replacing these four stalwarts is going to be Naviaux's toughest assignment. To add another facet to the defensive problem, only five veterans are back from the '69 squad that surrendered but 131 points in 11 games.

UMass was one of the only two teams to beat the Terriers last year and that came on Oct. 11, 1969 by a 14-9 tally; the other team that outpointed BU was San Diego State, 28-7, in the Pasadena Bowl.

Schedule: Colgate (Sept. 19), at Vermont (26), Temple (Oct. 3), at UMass (10), Holy Cross (17), at Rhode Island (24), at Connecticut (31), Rutgers (Nov. 7) and at Delaware (14).

Game 5 - RHODE ISLAND (Yankee Conference). Date: Oct. 17. Place: Kingston, R. I. (Meade Field-capacity 10,000). Coach: Jack Gregory (1st year). Nickname: Rams. Last year's record; 2-7. Returning lettermen: 26. Lettermen lost: 10.

Capsule Comment: First-year coach Jack Gregory faces a tough initial campaign with the Rhody football Rams. Over the last 11 seasons, URI has produced but one winning football team and it will be Gregory's task to start a reversal of this trend.

For the entire squad, the main problem is depth, or a lack of it. On defense, Rhode Island lacks not only depth but is also inexperienced. Two-year fullback Tom Wheeler has been switched to linebacker in hopes of shoring up this weaker of the two Ram units.

URI is more optimistic about its offense, but still hopes to develope here greater attacking strength and improved ball control. Junior halfback Warren Houston stars for the offense. Other notables here include split end Chris Hess and tackle John Gregg. The blocking line is fine but the overall offense lacks speed.

Gregory is not looking for an instant winner in this Ram squad. His main goal will be to perpetrate his football philosophies to the Rhody players.

Schedule: at Brown (Sept. 26), at Maine (Oct. 3), Vermont (10), UMass (17), Boston U.(24), at New Hampshire (31), at Temple (Nov. 7), and at Connecticut (14).

Game 6-CONNECTICUT (Yankee Conference). Date: Oct. 24. Place: Alumni Stadium. Coach: John Toner (5th year-W 16-L 20-T 1). Nickname: Huskies. Last year's record: 5-4. Returning lettermen: 27. Letermen lost: 9.

Capsule Comment: Twelve seniors among 27 returning lettermen should make John Toner's fifth year at the Huskie helm his most successful. He coaches an experienced football team, both offensively and defensively.

UConn's most outstanding performer is senior halfback Vin Clements. He holds numerous Huskie records, was ECAC Sophomore of the Year in 1968 and was All-ECAC first team last year, a season that saw him amass

ROVELL JONES

KIRK BARTON

2,000 total offensive yards (running, passing and returning kicks). The rest of the backfield is strong; quarterback is veteran senior Rick Robustelli. The offensive line is also in fine shape.

The Connecticut defense has all the earmarks of a solid unit. There is lack of experience at both defensive end posts but the tackles, linebackers and secondarymen look fine. Overall the Huskies present UMass with its biggest challenge enroute to another Yankee Conference title.

Schedule: Vermont (Sept. 19), at Yale (26), at New Hampshire (Oct. 3), at Temple (10), Maine (17), at UMass (24), Boston U. (31), at William & Mary (Nov. 7), Rhode Island (14) and at Holy Cross (21).

Game 7 - VERMONT (Yankee Conference). Date: Oct. 31. Place: Burlington, Vt. (Centennial Field-capacity 8,500). Coach: Joseph Scannella (1st year). Nickname: Catamounts. Last year's record: 3-6. Returning lettermen: 21. Lettermen lost: 20.

Capsule Comment: The 1970 University of Vermont Football Fact Book prints the following: "With a former Little All-American quarterback at the helm of the Catamounts this fall, opponents might take heed and beef up the defensive secondary, because Vermont will throw-in fact, will throw a great deal."

Doing the throwing for new head coach Joseph Scannella will be junior Bruce Roeck; most of the receiving will be handled by junior Bob Sadowski and transfer-student Tim Sullivan.

It will be a pro-style offense and its key will be junior halfback Bob Rodger, a potential Little All-American. With opponents' defenses geared on this guy, Roeck will be able to bomb away with abandon.

Both lines are solid; Vermont is particularly proud of its defensive line, looked upon as the heart of the team. The team's biggest weakness is its secondary; the Catamounts surrendered 1,5116 yards through the air last year and this mark must be lowered if Vermont hopes to make a chase for the Conference crown.

Schedule: at Connecticut (Sept. 19), Boston U. (26), at Northeastern (Oct. 3), at Rhode Island (10), New Hampshire (17), Hofstra (24), UMass (31), at Maine (Nov. 7) and at Lafayette (14).

Game 8-HOLY CROSS. Date: Nov. 7. Place: Worcester (Fitton Field-capacity 25,000). Coach: Bill Whitton (2nd year-W 0-L 2). Nickname: Crusaders. Last year's record: 0-2. Returning lettermen: 11. Lettermen lost: 13.

Capsule COMMENT: When the Crusaders notch their first victory this year, they will already have bettered last season's win record. Of course autumn '69 saw an outbreak of hepatitis abbreviate Holy Cross' campaign after only its second game, at which time it was 0-2; the eight remaining games, including one against UMass, were cancelled.

Spirit in abundance after last fall's misfortune, may well be the outstanding characteristic of this 1970 Crusader squad. Head coach Bill Whitton has been quoted thusly: "We're lacking for experience and lacking for depth, but we're not lacking for spirit, enthusiasm, dedication and guts. It was a bitter blow to our young men

Redman Defense to Play Key Role . . .

BILL DEFLAVIO

The Defense

A winning football formula usually starts with a solid defense and 1969's winning UMass football team certainly had a stellar defense that it could count on. Some defensive greats are gone from that unit-Steve Rogers, John MacLean, Andy Guarino, Mark Toner and Tom York. Some greats return. Who are they? And who will replace the departed stars? Read on! Read on!

ENDS

CURT BRISTOL-Junior-6'-215-No. 82: Bristol started every game as a sophomore last year and played often enough and well enough to earn a letter. He rushes opposing quarterbacks with audacity.

JAMES KELLIHER-Senior-6'1-218-No. 89: Kelliher has put in long hours helping the Redman football cause although he has never started. Such an answer to the call of duty may yet be rewarded with a starting assignment in 1970.

DAVID FLYNN-Sophomore-6'2-195-No. 84: Flynn was a freshman regular last fall and saw a lot of action in spring drills. He will add depth to the defensive end position.

TACKLES

BILL SROKA-Senior-6'2-228-No. 77: Sroka has certainly made his presence felt as a top-notch Redman performer at defensive tackle and linebacker over the past two campaigns. A real bulwark, he'll be one of the anchors of the 1970 defensive front four.

BILL DEFLAVIO-Junior-5'9-230-No. 76: Deflavio's size is deceiving, he is the other key anchor of the front four and has proved so by his play. He was selected to the All-Yan-Con first when the hepatitis hit last fall, but never once did any young man ever complain. And their dedication to Holy Cross and what HC and football means to them was evident in spring practice when 70 young men showed up. Spring ball was optional....they could have all gone home to jobs, the beaches or somewhere....but they made it mandatory. This is the proudest group of young men I've ever been associated with." Welcome back to college football action, Crusaders!

Several strong candidates are making bids these days for starting jobs in the Cross backfield. Quarterbacking duties will probably go to senior Mark Mowatt, but he will have to prove himself capable over two fine pressing sophomores. The offensive line needs more depth but should prove adequate.

The defensive line and linebackers present coach Whitton with his least experienced area of performers. Co-captain and three-year fullback Tom Lamb has been converted to linebacker to help alleviate this area of concern. The defensive backfield ranks with the offensive backfield as a Crusader strongpoint, deep and experienced.

Coach Whitton has summed up Holy Cross thusly: "If we can stay healthy, we'll surprise some people. But we must get the most out of everyone we have. I know we will."

Game 9 - NEW HAMPSHIRE (Yankee Conference). Date: Nov. 14. Place: Alumni Stadium. Coach: Jim Root (3rd year - W 9-L 7). Nickname: Wildcats. Last year's record: 3-5. Returning lettermen: 22 Lettermen lost: 18.

Capsule Comment: Two juniors, backed by vital experience gained as performing sophs, will share the leadership of New Hampshire as its quarterbacks. Bob Hopkins will play the starting role, Bill Murdock the backup role.

A couple of veteran running backs and some solid newcomers help shape up the ground attack. Strong is the offensive line, anchored by stellar center Mike Burlage. The receiving corps is deep and experienced.

Only two consistent performers return to the defensive line, making that a problem area for coach Jim Root. The remainder of the defense is not much stronger, with only a slight sprinkling of spicy veterans. Basically, UNH's offense should fare well, but their inexperienced defense will hinder the Wildcats from Beanpot contention.

Schedule: at Delaware (Sept. 26), UConn (Oct. 3), Maine (10), at Vermont (17), at Northeastern (24), Rhode Island (31), Springfield (Nov. 7) and at UMass (14).

Game 10-BOSTON COLLEGE. Date: Nov. 21. Place: Alumni Stadium. Coach: Joe Yukica (3rd year-W 11-L 7). Nickname; Eagles. Last year's record: 5-4. Returning lettermen: 31. Lettermen lost: 19.

Capsule Comment: Boston College, which has beaten UMass four years in succession, ranks a notch over Dartmouth and Buffalo as the best football squad the Redmen will match up against all season.

In the Eagle fold are no less than 31 lettermen (16 seniors and 15 juniors) and 30 frisky sophomores up from a strong 3-1 freshman unit who are battling to replace 19 departed lettermen.

Frank "Red" Harris. Fred Willis. BC's two biggest names and the keys to a big Eagle season against a tough schedule that includes Villanova, Navy, Air Force, Army, Penn State and Buffalo.

Harris quarterbacks BC and, on the brink of his senior year, has passed for 2960 yards and 32 touchdowns. Willis is BC's glittering halfback; also a senior, his two-year marks include 1108 yards rushing at a 5.6 yards-per-carry clip.

It is no surprise therefore, that Boston College's strength lies in its offense, which will also feature two solid ends in the persons of John Bonistalli and Jim O'Shea, plus a fine blocking line.

On defense, the Eagles have experience in the secondary and at the ends; tackle and linebacker have been the main areas of concentration in pre-season by third-year coach Joe Yukica and his staff.

Schedule: at Villanova (Sept. 19), at Navy (26), Virginia Military (Oct. 3), Penn State (10), at Air Force (24), Army (31), Buffalo (Nov. 7), at Pittsburgh (14), at UMass (21) and Holy Cross (28).

team in '69 and is feared for his great pass-rushing ability. He is also very quick.

MARTY SCHERALIS-Senior-6'4-235-No. 72: Scheralis has earned two UMass varsity football letters but a chronic shoulder injury prevented him from playing his senior year. Now he's back and his experience should add depth to the tackle spots. He kicks in a soccer fashion and may be used as the Redman kickoff man.

LINEBACKERS

JOHN FARRELLY-Senior and UMASS' captain-6'1-218-No. 54: Farrelly has been a dependable Redman linebacker for two years now. UMass' captain, he may nab All-Conference honors if he can avoid the injury ward.

DENNIS COLLINS - Junior-6'190-No. 43: Collins comes to play ball as is evidenced by his earned-letter as a soph last autumn despite a lack of great size. He's wirery and quick and a sure tackler.

JOE SABULIS-Junior- 6'3-210 No. 59: Sabulis wracked up an All-Yan-Con first team rating as a sophomore last year and should be outstanding this fall. He has quick reactions and blocked two extra-point attempts in '69.

DICK DYER-Senior-6'-210-No. 58: Dyer has lettered for two years now and his experience should help to bolster the linebacking corps. He also works on the specialty squads, kickoff and punt.

DOUG WINSLOW- Sophomore-6'3-215-No. 35: Winslow had a stellar frosh season as an outstanding lineman. He had a fine spring practice and should gain valuable playing time as a linbacker this year.

HALFBACK

BOB CABRELLI-Junior- 5'10 170-No. 86: Cabrelli had a memorable soph year, carving himself out a spot on the All-Conference first team. A fine defensive back, he picked off two of the opponents' aerials in '69.

BILL BUSH-Junior-5'11-185-No. 24: Bush was a freshman quarterback but turned his talents to defense last year and started every game. He intercepted three passes and recovered a couple of fumbles in '69.

DENNIS KEATING-Junior-6'3-212-No. 41: Keating can alternate between defensive halfback and safety. Although hampered slightly by injuries, he lettered as a soph, intercepting three passes.

SAFETY

JOHN O'NEILL-Junior-6'2-190-No. 18: O'Neill was a reserve as a sophomore but he is expected to develope this time around. He will probably be UMass' punter this fall.

(Of course, more people than the above mentioned players go into the working of the Redman defense; however, various factors lead to the exclusion of some, the inclusion of others.)

Reps, Senators Receive Illegal Campaign Funds

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secret Justice Department files show two ship lines gave nearly $6,000 in illegal campaign contributions for key members of Senate and House committees that control a rich flow of federal subsidies for the firms.

The largest contributions total

The largest contributions totaling $1,500 went for Rep. Edward A. Garmatz, D Md., chairman of the House Merchant Marine Committee. Another $1,000 was given for Sen. Warren G. Magnuson, D Wash., chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee.

In addition, both House Republican Leader Gerald R. Ford and Democratic power Hale Boggs were among 15 congressmen and senators to whose campaigns the shipping firms have pleaded guilty to giving illegal donations.

The Garmatz and Magnuson committees approve subsidy programs which pay $200 million a year in federal aid to American cargo and passenger ships. A House appropriations subcommittee actually votes the subsidy funds, and other checks went for the top four members of this panel.

The legislators' names were kept secret when the two firms, American President Lines and Pacific Far East Lines, were fined $50,000 each - the maximum penalty - in federal court Feb.6. They were charged under the Corrupt Practices Act, which forbids campaign donations by corporations.

Among those identified in the closely guarded files is Rep. L. Mendel Rivers, D S.C., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, who is listed as getting a $300 campaign check, although it was left out of the court case.

The Justice Department had shielded the names of the congressmen and senators because, government attorneys said, there was no indication they knew the contributions they received were illegal.

The checks were funneled from a special bank account through a public relations man and two lobbyists.

Asked about the checks, most of the various congressmen told The Associated Press they were unaware of accepting any unlawful contributions.

One check for $500 went for Rep. Robert L. F. Sikes, D-Fla., when he was unopposed for re-election in 1966.

The check, payable to Sikes' campaign committee, appears to have been endorsed by Sikes when it was cashed through Congress' own bank in the Capitol.

The $500 did not show up that year in a list, published in the Congressional Quarterly, of the campaign contributions reported by candidates in sworn statements to the House.

Arabs Hijack BOAC Plane

The number of Middle East hijack attacks this week grew to five Wednesday when Arab commandos seized a British Overseas Airways Corp. plane near the Persian Gulf.

The BOAC VC10 joined two other captive planes on a guerrilla held Jordan desert airstrip and its 113 passengers and crewmen raised the number of hostages to more than 300.

The pro-Marxist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, which assumed responsibility for the rash of hijackings, had threatened to blow up the first two planes, a Swissair DC8 and a Trans World Airlines Boeing 707. The dead line was late Wednesday night, but Swiss officials expressed belief this would be extended.

The latest PFLP seizure fueled tension at airports around the world. It also appeared to widen the breach between the pro Peking group and major Arab capitals.

Release Hijacker

LONDON (AP) – Police cars streamed out of a suburban police station Wednesday night heading in the direction of London Airport. Observers said they believed an Arab girl hijacker was being taken to the airport for release to the Arab world.

The Israeli state radio said Wednesday that Leila Khaled, the girl guerrilla captured Sunday after an unsuccessful attempt to hijack an Israeli El Al jetliner, apparently boarded the plane with two hand grenades hidden in her brassiere.

U.S. Promises To Sell Israel More Planes

WASHINGTON(AP) - The United States has promised to sell Israel 18 more F4E Phantom fighter bombers as part of its commitment to maintain the military bases in the Mideast, administration sources confirmed Wednesday.

Deliveries of the first of the supersonic planes, each capable of carrying more than 15,000 pounds of bombs and missiles, is expected to begin later this month with completion of the deal by the end of the year, sources said.

The Nixon administration has not made any public announcement of the agreement, reportedly worked out over the weekend during discussions at the Pentagon and State Department.

When details of the agreement leaked to the press, one source expressed concern that it would complicate the negotiations to free hijacked airline passengers held captive by Palestinian guerrillas in Jordan.

As the semester opens, an increasing number of UMass students find themselves lost in the often cold and usually confusing stream of University life. Reporter Brian White examines some of the causes of student alienation and looks at two proposed solutions to the lact of community at UMass in this MCD feature.

The Search For A Meaning In Education

By BRIAN WHITE
Staff Reporter

Political protest. communitarianism, and psychedelic movements are the visible signs of unrest. To a very great extent the students who have found their place in one of these activities are indeed the fortunate ones. The great majority of students at UMass have lost themselves in an environment in which no reliable support is provided to help them cope with issues and ideas. Indistinguishable issues and ideas begin not to matter--God is dead and everything is relative, therefore do your own thing. How damnably familiar are these ideas. Our entire society is increasingly beset with a sense of nihilism.

An interview with one of our new swing-shift freshmen appeared recently in the summer. In effect, the interview indicated that there was nothing for the student to do but get smashed or smoke dope. The implication was that there are not enough activities to keep idle fingers busy. What is astonishing about this naive freshman's comment is that it neglects entirely to mention her supposed prime purpose here. Many students have 25 hours a week in the classroom and traditionally two hours of preparation are necessary for one hour of class time--50 hours. She is not doing that study, nor are her peers--and recall that these are naive freshmen.

One does what is necessary to pass and that is woefully little and the process of education be damned. Good conversation, exposure to differences in opinion, some reading, and a little writing all in their good time are lost in a semester --long searches for action are hardly regained in the insane rush at semester's end. The search for action results in refrigerators thrown out of 19th floor windows or crazed assaults on women's dorms or dorm damages in the thousands or, perhaps even more costly, the loss of 50 student dropouts per week.

The lack of concern for learning and destructive anti-social begavior are but two sides of one coin. The first because learning hardly matters, only the degree; its fun and vitality are lost among IBM cards and large classes. Alienation is the word sociologists use. The second because anti-social behavior is calling for help, for recognition, for identification. UMass, perhaps more than most comparable state institutions, has many students representing their family in college for the first time. The transitional pressures to conform, to decide, to change are exceptionally great in an environment that is unable either through formal classroom work or through anonymous living in large multicellular units to provide students with personal support and encouragement during those pressures.

We might as well be writing about the national political scene as the University. Indeed, many of the arguments for decentralization that now transcend partisan politics remain the same. Give people the sense of control; take them off the assembly-line ; let them see the fruits of their labor; let them make their own mistakes.

Dorm Reorganizes

Butterfield House has answers to the problem of alienation. They may not be panaceas, but they help 150 people survive.

Butterfield has acted vigorously toward decentralization. Two years ago the dorm voted against depositing its funds with R.S.O.; in that case it would have to ask that their own money be released so that they could use it. The dorm had decided to eliminate the middleman, and stopped handling matters through R.S.O.

Last year an eager young politician asked that the dorm be brought to court for breaking off with R.S.O. The entire dorm prepared to stand trial. The Student Senate finally agreed to drop the charges.

Butterfield's residents have built the dorm a dark room, created dance and art groups, built a skating rink, maintained a dorm newspaper, and held a dinner for 300 people; they are building a true common library.

The dorm opened on September 3 this year, for several reasons. For instance, Butterfield wanted to complete working arrangements for the dining commons it will have in its basement. Residents also wanted to finish signing up for the courses the dorm will offer this semester. Perhaps most important, Butterfield was taking on some fifty new members, all of the other sex, and people wanted to meet each other.

Butterfield is a community. People are there because they want to be there. The community is secure enough that it does not try to make people subordinate their identity to its: Butterfield encourages each person to be himself. Butterfield is loving, but not jealous.

Butterfield is not a solution for everyone in the University, but it gives some people an alternative. To quote the Butterfield Dining Commons Proposal again:

"We acknowledge that our proposal is a unique opportunity for the residents of Butterfield and that it provides the University with another alternative in undergraduate education that will take its place among those developing in Project 10, Orchard Hill, and Greenough."

The School of Ed. Expands

Walter Thomas, in the education newsletter EDVANCE, made these points:

The emphasis in today's schools is on facts, skills, concepts, and lastly affect (values and feelings). If education is to be humanized, the affective areas of living and learning must be given priority in the schools.

The basic difference among people is not in what they know or what they can do, but in what their commitments are. Any important difference between given people lies in their values and feelings, not in their knowledge or their skills. A businessman and a racketeer know how to do the same things; it is what they decide to do that differentiates them.

To humanize the schools requires that experiences for value development and value formation be provided. Values are what make individuals distinctly human. The underlying assumption of humanistic education is that we should stop asking people to do what machines can do better.

That, basically, is the rationale of the Center for Humanistic Education at UMass. The Ford Foundation has granted the UMass Center $200,000 (and a UCal, Santa Barbara, Center $300,000) in order to fund university centers "experimenting with ways of counteracting the alienation of students."

The Center tries to give its students a taste of these things -- experience in how values are formed, rather than a merely theoretical grounding.

The student learns to communicate effectively, to create the emotions he plans to in a classroom, to lead in a non-threatening way.

The Center now gives priority to teacher education. It supports interested schools and teachers in the area (dealing mainly with elementary and secondary schools). As of yet, it is not directed towards the non-teaching students of the university, if only because it is great understaffed just now. (500 students have signed up for 120 places in the curriculum.)

Campus Center Launches Features During Grand Opening Week

The eleven story, $16,000,000 Murray D. Lincoln Center is open for touring now. By September 15 the building is expected to be ready for full occupation.

Major features of the center are an attached 900-car parking garage, 220 overnight accomodations for those attending conferences and for other guests of the University, conference and seminar rooms for 1500 people, dining facilities that include a restaurant with a view of the campus of the top floor, a ballroom a book store and several meeting rooms and offices for student activities.

The design is by the New York architectural firm of Marcel Breuer and Herbert Beckhard. The firm's founder, Breuer, is known for the design of such buildings as the Whitney Museum in New York City and the UNESCO World Headquarters buildings in Paris.

The building is named for the late Murray D. Lincoln, University alumnus who founded the Nationwide Insurance Co. and was president of CARE for its first 12 years.

Construction of the center has been underway for over three years through University of Massachusetts Building Authority at no cost to Massachusetts taxpayers. Financing is on a self-amortizing basis, using income from student, continuing education and other activities. The prime contractor is Daniel O'Connell's Sons of Holyoke.

The center is headquarters for the University's new Division of Continuing Education. In addition to its continuing education and student activities role, the facility is designed to serve a laboratory function for the Department of Hotel and Restaurant Administration. The building is connected to the Student Union.

The Campus Center is constructed of architectural concrete of contrasting textures. A spacious stone terrace covers the lower two floors; the remainder of the building is a nine-story tower.

The first floor includes a student activities area with offices and meeting rooms, a student lounge and a ballroom with a stage, cinema facilities and a seating capacity of 660. On the next floor is a large mall area with a bookshop, coffeeshop, barber shop and an automatic post office. There are also sign and printing shops, plus a cafeteria with seating for 500 and a stereo listening room for students.

Floors three through seven are in the tower portion and contain overnight accomodations for 220 people in 116 rooms. All rooms have private bath and color TV. Floor eight has meeting rooms and the administrative offices of the center; floor nine has more meeting rooms and the head-quarters of the Division of Continuing Education.

The 10th floor has dining rooms and function rooms and the 11th floor houses the Top of the Campus Restaurant--a large dining room for 150 persons, smaller dining rooms, a cocktail lounge and an outdoor terrace. The Top of the Campus will be open to the University community and guests.

New Program

Computers Explored

The University's electrical engineering department has annouced the first undergraduate program at the Amherst campus devoted to modern computer technology, a four-year undergraduate program leading to a Bachelor of Science Degree in computer systems engineering.

This program begins this semester and is available to all students in the class of 1974 and engineering students in the classes of 1972 and 1973.

The goal is to develop capability in all aspects of computer technology from logic and computer design to programming and software systems. To this end, the core courses include several taught by the computer science department as well as theory and laboratory courses taught by the computer systems faculty of the electrical engineering department.

The program has been designed with enough flexibility so that students can specialize in the mathematical, hardware, or software aspects of computer systems design.

A grant of $25,000 from the National Science Foundation with a matching grant of $25,000 from the University will finance laboratory development for this new degree program.

MDC Distribution Set

The Daily Collegian will be distributed to the campus community at several locations around campus. These include the Student Union Lobby, the Campus Center concourse level to the right of the bookstore, all dining commons, the lobbies of the Boyden building and the School of Education, and in Whitmore through the Whitmore mail room.

In addition the Collegian will be available at two in town locations, Augie's and Hastings', for ten cents.

Hampshire College Opens To 263 Students

Ideas Take Shape

By CLAUDIA HAMBERG
News Editor

Conceived 12 years ago by a joint faculty committee from Amherst, Mount Holyoke, Smith, and UMass, supported by private contributions and foundation grants, and born through the labor of innovative educators--Hampshire College is a reality.

A coeducational, liberal arts institution, Hampshire will open its doors to its first students Saturday. But this baby of the five-college community is not the typical small private college. Hampshire has its own set of goals.

Its aim is "to serve as a model for innovations in liberal arts education." The Hampshire experimenting project is based on the assumption that students can manage their own educations. In the words of Richard C. Lyon, Dean of the College of Humanities and Arts "Our intention is to educate students into self-education."

Hampshire will be a testing ground for new forms educational technology, allowing students to learn through a variety of media. Hampshire will also attempt to relate to the larger community, to provide its students with a chance to feel both input and output through such projects as local cable television and the Holyoke Model Cities plan.

Hampshire's organization, or perhaps lack of it, will rely heavily on the ideas of its first class of 263 students. The entire institution, from its building layout to its curriculum are innovative. As one enthusiastic student put it, "Hampshire will be a college for the twentieth century."

Selecting Students

Hampshire College received 2000 applications for 263 places this first year. Eighteen "fellows" transferred from other colleges and 245 are beginning college students. To choose the students best fitted to manage their own educations at Hampshire, admissions personnel asked every student to visit the campus for interviews, group and private. Hampshire president Franklin Patterson explained that in addition each student was invited to "submit anything that the student had done of which he was proud and would like us to see."

When it came to the actual accepting and rejecting of students, Hampshire choose students with a wide range of backgrounds and abilities and a mixture of SAT scores." We want students who will be doers instead of talkers," commented Patterson.

Tuition and fees for the 1970-71 academic year at Hampshire total $3685 per student. Seventy per cent of the entering students paid the full amount, while $120,000 of direct scholarships were given to "absolute need" students, most of minority backgrounds.

Stiles House has been the administrative headquarters of Hampshire College since September, 1966. The house is named in honor of the Stiles family whose farms now constitute much of the 550-acre campus. Beginning next month (October, 1970), Hampshire's administrative offices will be on the new campus.

Study Through Divisions

The following explanation of Hampshire's academic arrangement is from the fall, 1970 Hampshire College Course Announcement.

Students at Hampshire College progress in their studies through three consecutive Divisions: the Divisions of Basic Studies, School Studies, and Advanced Studies. The traditional designations for the four years of college, the freshman, sophomore, junior, and senior years--are put aside. Work in the first Division will normally be completed by the end of the student's second year, though the time required may be longer or shorter in individual cases.

From Basic Studies the student will progress to the Division of School Studies, and his undergraduate work will in every case be completed by studies in the third Division, the Division of Advanced Studies. Each of these Divisions marks a stage in the student's progress toward understanding and mastery of the subjects he chooses for study, and each of them has its own distinctive purposes and procedures.

A major purpose of these first Division courses is to give the student limited but direct and intense experience with the diverse modes of inquiry of Hampshire's three Schools: the School of Social Science, the School of Natural Science and Mathematics, and the School of Social Science, the School of Natural Science and Mathematics, and the School of Humanities and Arts. Two common courses in the first year, "Human Development" and "Language and Communication," will introduce all students to two subjects of great importance to the student's understanding of himself and of the world in which he lives. Each will involve common core readings and lectures as well as individual seminars taught by faculty members of the Program in Language and Communication and of the three Schools.

The lectures, seminars, and workshops of this Division will not be the customary introductory survey courses. Students will come to close quarters with particular topics which bring to focus the characteristic concerns and procedures of thinkers and artists in various fields. Basic Studies are concerned not only with the variety of ways in which men may understand the world, but are designed also to acquaint the student with the skills of self-directed 16 students. Frequent provision will be made for small discussion or workshop groups and for individual faculty-student conferences. Members of the faculty will select among these and other arrangements, singly or in combination , those which are best suited to the purposes of particular courses. Seminars and small group tutorials will be the preferred mode of instruction in the Division of Basic Studies.

At the end of each school year a one-week reading period and a two-week examination period bring faculty and students together in a variety of ways for evaluation of the student's progress in his studies. The examinations assess the student's readiness for more advanced work, enabling his instructors to determine the kinds of study he might best pursue to shore up his weaknesses and develop his strengths. A student's performance during this period determines his advance from one Division to the next.

Inquiry. Development of the desire and capacity for independent study constitutes a major objective of all work in Division I.

In the Fall Term and the Spring Term, each about twelve weeks in length, the student enrolls in three courses . Hampshire's departure from the practice of requiring enrollments in four or five courses reflects its conviction that the study of fewer subjects, by allowing the student to give more time to each, permits a closer acquaintance and a deeper engagement with each. (The average course will made a demand on the student's time of roughly fifteen hours per week.) Between the Fall and Spring Terms, the student engages in a single January Term project or course, to which he devotes all his time during the month.

Hampshire's curriculum will make provision for a wide variety of teaching-learning arrangements. In some courses lectures will be the chief mode of instruction. Others are organized as seminars, enrolling no more than

Campus Design

Four nearly-completed buildings comprise the nucleus of Hampshire's campus, situated three miles south of Amherst on Route 116. Campus construction is continuing according to a plan of expansion providing for 1500 students.

A library, which could be called a complete communication center, will house research material, a bookstore, a computer center, a film-sound studio, a record collection, a post office, and a display gallery. This communication center has lines running to every room on campus - dorm rooms, classrooms, and offices - and it is hoped that audio-video information of all kinds will be available upon request in all rooms in the foreseeable future.

Incoming students will be housed in one three-section dormitory, with 80% of the rooms singles.

Furniture is a modular style with small separate pieces that can be arranged and rearranged as the student chooses. A faculty master and his family will live in a separate unit near the dorm. A dining hall to be used by students and faculty is also near completion.

One academic building will house course meetings for Hampshire's first year. Classrooms are small and informal as fits the predominantly seminar organization of study. Each two classrooms share an audio-visual room, permitting extensive use of new methods in learning.

William Baird, shown with a UMass co-ed, protested commercial contraceptive distribution in this area 2-1/2 years ago.

Baird To Address Hillel On Birth Control, Religion

Independant senatorial candidate and birth control crusader Bill Baird will speak at the semester's first Hillel brunch Sunday morning at 11:00, in the Student Union ballroom.

Baird, who last visited UMass in June when he picketed the Democratic State convention to protest an election law which prevents his name from appearing on the fall ballot, will speak on the topic of religous aspects of birth control Sunday.

Baird is challenging the Massachusetts State election law in Federal court, claiming that it unconstitutional to keep a man off an election ballot because he does not have the proscribed number of signatures on nomination papers.

Two and a half years ago, Baird made state-wide headlines as he lead a UMass student sponsored attempt to repeal the State's birth control laws. During that protest, Baird organized a picket line outside of the Hadley Zayre's, protesting the fact that department stores sell contraceptive devices, but family councellors cannot distribute them.

Recently, he served three weeks of a two month prison sentence for displaying a birth control device in public at a rally in Boston two years ago.

Student Loan Funds Released In D.C.

WASHINGTON--In the wake of congressional criticism, the Nixon administration announced yesterday allocation of the full $243 million appropriated by Congress for low cost loans to needy college students.

Less than a week ago, the Office of Education said it would use only $176.9 million of the funds contained in a bill which President Nixon had vetoed only to have Congress over-ride him.

Acting Education Commr. Terrel H. Bell announced yesterday that all the appropriated funds were now being released because they "apply entirely to the current school year and need to be allotted immediately if they are to have maximum effect."

After last week's announcement of a $170.4 million allocation, Chairman Carl D. Perkins (D-Ky.) of the House Education Committee protested to the White House and urged that the administration use all the loan money.

Students are able to obtain loans for their education under the program, the National Defense Student Loan Program, and Perkins and Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.) chairman of the Senate Public Welfare Committee, said the cut from a $195.6 million fund last year would prevent thousands of students from going to school this fall.

Bell's brief announcement through the Health, Education and Welfare Department said that each school would be informed within five days how much money it would get of the $66.1 million additional that he allocated.

The government sends money directly to the colleges under the act, in turn, they provide matching funds equal to 10 per cent of the allocation and then make loans to students on the basis of economic need at an interest rate of only three percent.

Black Studies Head Detained By Complications With U.S. Visa

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

Acting Director of the UMass Black Studies Department, Michael Telwell, has been stranded in Jamaica, his native land, awaiting action on his visa to enter the U.S.

Thelwell, who was supposed to arrive on campus September 1, has been delayed by what Randolph Bromery, assistant to the Chancellor, described as a "technical snag". According to Bromery, the UMass Administration has been "working closely with Senator Kennedy's office" in an effort to speed up the bureaucratic red tape delaying the visa. The Administration expects to hear from Kennedy within a day.

During Thelwell's absence, Esther Terry has been named by the department's executive committee to act as chairman of the committee performing the duties of Department Director. The department, according to Mrs. Terry, is "in the dark" about the details of the delay.

Dr. Bromery gave the following account of circumstances to date:

The University discovered that the visa which they had originally tried to obtain for Thelwell was to take about a year to process. With the advise of Senator Kennedy's office, the University filed an "H-1" visa in the middle of July. The H-1 visa is the "quickest way" of entering the country on a "short term basis." Even the H-1 visa takes longer to process than was required for Thelwell to return to campus on schedule.

The visa had to be filed with the Boston Immigration Office for approval and then sent to the U.S. Consulate in Jamaica for final processing and approval.

The University has been making all efforts possible, working through both Senator Brook and Kennedy's offices, to bring Thelwell to the states as soon as possible. Thelwell has been in contact with the University by phone and letter.

Further details will be available after Kennedy's office reports back to the University, before the week-end is over.

Creation Of A Department

Black Studies. Two Years Of Planning

By DENISE MAGNELL
Issue Editor

(Editor's note - The establishment of the W.E.B. Dubois department of Black Studies was a two year project, coordinated for the most part by Mike Thelwell. In coming editions, we will highlight some of the course offering in this, the school's full semester.)

The Committee on Afro-American Studies presented its first formal proposal for a Black Studies Department at the outset of the Spring semester last year.

In the February issue of that term's Collegian the entire text of the Black Studies proposal appeared. Briefly, the five recommendations of the proposal were:

---That the department be concerned with the entire political and cultural history of the black man and its relation to the present situation and future of Black America.

---That an international scope be reflected by studying black communities of Africa and parts of the Western Hemisphere other than the U. S.

---That the department offer work-study projects in order to bring the student in direct contact with black problems as well as implementing traditional research methods.

---That a black cultural center be established to offer courses of instruction in the literary and performing arts.

The W.E.B. Dubois Department of Afro-American Studies, named for the "intellectual father of Pan-Africanism," called for, in this initial report, an undergraduate major in Afro-American Studies as well as non-major courses in the areas of history, social sciences, literature, the arts, and languages. A requirement of at least 24 credits within one discipline along with a minimum of 24 within the other disciplines of the department will constitute a major.

Soon after the CAS proposal, Mills House was converted into a Black Cultural Center, partially providing needed space for the program, mainly for the performing arts.

Amherst College became the first institution in the Valley to establish a formal department in Black Studies the next month (March). The Five-College program is designed to reduce the competition among the Valley schools for scarce black faculty members and also to enable any student in the program to draw upon the resources of all five (eventual) departments.

The Interim Executive Five-College Black Studies Committee, composed of a faculty member and a student from each of the schools, will function as an advisory body of the entire program until chairmen are located for the department of each institution.

On March 4, the Student Senate supported the Black Studies program and the conversion of Mills into a Black Cultural Center. The Faculty Senate offered its endorsement of the department in the College of Arts and Sciences several days later.

Final approval for the W.E.B. Dubois Afro-American Studies Department was given by the Board of Trustees at their April meeting. The unanimous decision was sparked with praise for the planning committee's thorough research, with the Board singling out faculty member Michael Thelwell for "his exceptional and devoted work."

Thelwell has been named as Acting Director of the Black Studies Department, open to students for the first time this semester.

WMUA Coming

WMUA, the UMass student radio station, has announced it will return to the air on or about September 19. The delay is due to the installation of new equipment for its upcoming power increase.

The first football game, September 19 vs. Maine, will be broadcast.

UM Offers Night Courses Across Western Mass.

The University of Massachusetts Division of Continuing Education will offer 61 courses in 23 different subject areas this fall, Dr. William C. Venman, the program's director, announced recently. Courses will be given in Amherst, Greenfield, Holyoke, Pittsfield, and Springfield, with most of the courses scheduled to meet one evening a week throughout the semester.

High school graduates or those who have a certificate of General Educational Development are entitled to enroll in courses offered by the UMass Division of Continuing Education. Students may elect to take credit courses either on a credit or audit basis, but enrollment in Continuing Education courses does not mean they are regularly enrolled University students or candidates for a degree. However, they may make application to be admitted as graduate or undergraduate students if they meet normal entrance requirements.

The fee for a three-credit course offered on the Amherst campus is $75, in addition to a five dollar registration fee and, for certain courses, a laboratory fee to cover the expense of field trips, computer time, or special materials. Three-credit courses offered outside of Amherst will cost $84 in addition to the registration fee and laboratory fees where applicable.

A catalog with information about the program and a complete listing of course descriptions is available from the Division of Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, 01002.

Chrysler's Newest Contract Offer Leaves UAW Far From Satisfied

DETROIT (AP) - Chrysler Corp. made the United Auto Workers a second, but undisclosed, economic offer yesterday in auto industry contract bargaining, but the union's president said it "leaves us a long, long way from home."

Leonard Woodcock, the UAW leader, did not immediately reject the offer. He said later, however, he believed the industry had made a decision "to take a strike" and that General Motors had dictated the decision.

Asked if he thought GM would be building its new minicar, the Vega 2300, next week, Woodcock replied:

"It doesn't look like it." Asked at a news conference later in the General Motors Building which company appeared to have made the decision "to take a strike," the UAW chief replied:

"You wouldn't have to reach far to touch their property." Woodcock said General Motors had told the union, which asked if it would have a second offer Thursday, that it would "answer later."

Neither side would disclose details of the Chrysler offer, which came only four days ahead of a Monday strike dead line at Chrysler or General Motors, or both, when current three year contracts expire.

It was agreed, however, the Chrysler proposal topped initial and parallel offers made a week ago last Tuesday by Chrysler, GM and Ford.

The companies said that one included first year wage increases ranging from 26 cents to 48 cents hourly and represented a 7 1/2 per cent boost across the board in the first year, plus an additional 3 per cent in the second and third years.

Limited Debate Expected On Voting Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) - Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield said yesterday he may try next week to cut off debate on a constitutional amendment providing for direct election of the president.

Such a move, requiring a two thirds majority of senators voting, would provide a crucial test for the proposal to abolish the Electoral College system.

Mansfield told newsmen he didn't know what his chances would be. "I haven't made any polls," he said, "and I won't."

Republican leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania said, meanwhile, that President Nixon wholeheartedly supports the proposed amendment which was approved by the House a year ago by a 339 70 vote.

"I'm his spokesman in this regard," said Scott. He told news men he had seen a White House memorandum Wednesday stating firmly that Nixon favors the direct election plan.

"Any attempt to depict the President as not wholeheartedly for it is in error," he said.

Mansfield, asked what he would do if a move to limit debate fails, said only that "I will take the next step."

This could mean a second attempt to cut off debate, if the first vote was close, or could signal a move to lay the proposed amendment aside.

Approval of the amendment would take a two thirds majority in the Senate and its supporters, including its chief sponsor, Sen. Birch Bayh, D Ind., have not yet claimed they have the necessary margin.

Sen. Roman L. Hruska, R Neb., a leader of the opposition, said he does not expect the amendment's backers to get two thirds.

However, Scott predicted the amendment would be approved, if it could be brought to a vote and if alternative proposals for overhauling the electoral college system are rejected.

Senate leaders are trying to clean up the legislative schedule and adjourn by mid October but, in the absence of a unanimous agreement to limit debate, the only way they could force a showdown on the direct election amendment would be to apply cloture.

Nixon Endorses Rights Of Dissenting Groups

WASHINGTON (AP) - Nixon administration backing for repeal of the Emergency Detention Act to allay dissenters, fears it could be used to herd them into concentration camps was criticized yesterday by two House Internal Security Committee members.

Asst. Atty. Gen. J. Walter Yeagley said repeal of the law aimed against potential saboteurs would quell unfounded rumors that it might be used against Black Panthers and radicals - and would not prevent action against subversives in time of war.

But Chairman Richard H. Ichord, D. Me., of the House committee suggested the law is needed, though it might need revision. He said if the opposition to it is unfounded the answer is to educate the public on what it really does.

"We've witnessed a number of acts of bombings in recent months-some of them by members of organizations that advocate the overthrow of the government," Ichord said. "Where is the law that protects the government against these people in time of war?"

Yeagley cited 14 laws that would still be on the books against saboteurs and espionage agents but Ichord said they permit the government to act only after subversive acts have been committed.

Rep. John M. Ashbroro, R-Ohio, said Yeagley's arguments for repeal of the act "almost convince me" that the act should not be repealed.

"You refer to them the fears as alarmist, unfounded, unwarranted," Ashbrook said "and then turn right around and recommend the act be repealed."

Both Ichord and Ashbrook contended the act's safeguards under which suspected sabeteurs must be formally accused and given hearings would be wiped out by repeal and the president would be left with the same power former President Franklin D. Roosevelt used during World War II to put 112,000 Japanese Americans into detention camps.

Yeagley said the act of Congress would be useful but he said the president can act without it.

He said also he knows "no way" the act could be used against Black Panthers or any other dissenters unless they were individually charged with subversive acts in support of a foreign government in time of national crisis.

Ichord said he is considering amendments that would keep the act on the books but clarify that it cannot be used against dissenters and strengthen its safeguards for accused sabeteurs.

Television Series Join Drug Crusade

NEW YORK (AP) - The growing menace of drug abuse among the young will come in for extensive exposure on television entertainment programs in the fall season beginning Sunday.

Virtually every dramatic program will have at least one story dealing with smuggling, selling or addiction to drugs.

Even some situation comedies, such as "Headmaster," "Room 222" and "Love American Style" will have episodes on the subject.

Most of the stories are a result of a conference of television producers and executives called in Washington last April by President Nixon. At the conference Nixon asked the producers to help combat the use of drugs among young people through their shows and siad the "power in this room can make the difference on dope."

In the season premiere of "Name of the Game" next Friday, presidential adviser Robert H. Finch appears in a 1 1/2 minute segment, welcoming journalists to a symposium on the juvenile drug problem. Robert Stack, who plays a magazine editor is among the newsmen.

Finch tells the journalists that the problem has developed into the dimensions of a "crisis" and asks their help in "educating all Americans about the drug scene and what it's doing to our most important natural resource, our youth."

All phases of the problem are covered by the various series.

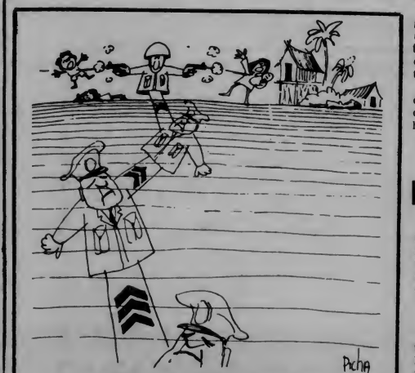
"The FBI" tells about a smuggler who bungles a border run and robs a syndicate narcotics distributor in retaliation when he is demoted. His own addiction leads to his capture.

"Dan August" tracks down a peddler supplying heroin to a number of high school pupils, two of whom have died from overdoses.

Memorial To Lombardi

NEW YORK(AP)- The National Football League championship game trophy was renamed the Vince Lombardi Trophy yesterday by Commissioner Pete Rozelle.

"It is appropriate that the trophy that is symbolic of team excellence in football should carry the name of a man whose career and character were so identified with the pursuit of excellence," Rozelle said.



Lombardi, the former coach of the Green Bay Packers and Washington Redskin, died of cancer at the age of 57 on Sept. 3.

Agnew Labels Democratic Congress "Caterwauling Critics"

Vice President Spiro T. Agnew went campaigning yesterday against the "caterwauling critics" and "bitter men" in a Democratic Congress he described as reactionary, derelict and dominated by trogledytic-cave dwelling-leftists.

And Agnew said he doesn't care a bit what "the liberal Eastern press" says about his rhetoric. "Let them run right up the wall," he said. "We are going to be out with the other happy warriors on the campaign trail this fall-roasting marshmallows along the way."

With a White House sendoff from President Nixon, Agnew embarked on a campaign route that will cover at least 20 states before the Nov. 3 elections, seeking votes and campaign dollars for Republicans.

"My purpose is to carry the Nixon message to the people," the vice president said.

The first installment of the Agnew campaign is a week's travel through six states-all electing senators in November-aboard a jet airliner chartered by the Republican National Committee.

Springfield and Casper, Wyo., were the opening day targets.

And the first beneficiary of an Agnew plug was Sen. Ralph T. Smith, appointed to his Illinois seat, who said the vice presidential visit would be a help in his race against a formidable Democratic rival, Adalai E. Stevenson,III.

At a rally on the steps of the Illinois Capitol, Agnew said he was campaigning "to replace those who moan endlessly about what is wrong with their country with men and women of the wit and will to stand up and speak out for what is right about America."

In a speech that drew intermittent applause from a crown in the Illinois capital plaza, Agnew came up with a new contraction for the "radical liberals," he denounced.

"Icall them the radicllbs," he said.

Sheriff Edward Ryan, a republican, estimated the Springfield crown at 8,000 to 10,000 persons.

As he headed for Illinois aboard a campaign plane christened Michelle Ann II, after his granddaughter, Agnew said the principal issue facing the voters is whether America's decisions are to be made by elected officials or in the streets.

In Springfield, he said,"Ultraliberalism today translates into a whimpering isolationism in foreign policy, a mulish constructionism in domestic policy, and pusillanimous pussyfooting on the critical issue of law and order."

Sirhan In Isolation For Rebelliousness

Sirhan B. Sirhan, convicted assassin of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, was subdued by tear gas in his Death Row cell at San Quentin Prison for throwing food at a guard and refusing to give up a metal tray, Warden Louis S. Nelson said yesterday.

The warden said the 26 year old Arab born Sirhan was given a sedative after the incident Wednesday afternoon and placed in an isolation cell without access to newspapers, radio and television.

Associate Warden James Park said Sirhan was apparently disturbed over his mother's attempt to go to the Mideast in connection with the Palestinian guerrilla airliner hijackings.

He said Sirhan had been"on edge" since the refusal of prison officials to allow him to send a telegram to one of his attorneys over his mother's proposed trip.

At one point, the hijackers reportedly demanded Sirhan's freedom for release of more than 200 passengers held hostages on planes in Jordan.

His mother, Mary, attempted to fly to Amman, Jordan,earlier this week to press for release of the hostages.

The U.S. State Department, however, detained her in New York CIty and revoked the passports of two attorneys traveling with her, Luke McKissack and Michael McGowan.

The decision will be made Friday how long Sirhan should be kept in isolation, Nelson said. The maximum is 30 days.

Sirhan was sentenced to die in the California gas chamber for the June 1968 assassination of Kennedy in a Los Angeles hotel.

Red Cross Intervention Limited

(BEIRUT)-Arab guerrillas said Thursday they would give the Red Cross negotiators until 10 p.m. EDT Saturday to work out a swap of nearly 300 captive air travelers for seven imprisoned Arab commandos. But they said all Israelis on three hi-jacked airliners would be held for separate trading with Israel.

Teacher Strikes Continue As New School Year Begins

Teachers' strikes in seven states kept schools closed yesterday for thousands of youngsters, but volunteers in some areas, including parts of Philadelphia, conducted make shift classes.

There were teacher disputes mostly over money-in Pennsylvania, New York, Michigan, New Hampshire, Illinois, Connecticut and Indiana. Some schools in Oregon and Missouri delayed their opening dates because of taxpayers' refusals to approve budgets or levies.

The largest school district affected was Philadelphia, the nation's fifth largest, with 291,000 pupils. The teachers struck Wednesday, the opening day of school, and stayed off the job Thursday in a wage dispute.

Makeshift classes, manned by parents, administrators and some regular teachers working without pay, were set up in more than 100 prekindergarten centers, churches, labor union halls and other facilities.

Teachers and the school board are about $7 million apart on a first year package. The board has offered $17 million and the teachers' requests total $24.3 million.

Teachers in two more New York State districts-Griffith Institute and Central School, both near Buffalo-struck Thursday, making a total of five school systems affected by walkouts.

Striking teachers threw up picket lines at a bus company garage in Niagara Falls, N.Y., Thursday and cut off transportation for pupils who had been attending classes staffed by volunteers. School officials broadcast appeals to parents to keep their children home or bring them to school themselves. The district has about 17,500 pupils and 1,750 teachers. The teachers struck despite a court injunction issued Wednesday against the walkout.

Hammond, Ind., teachers also said they would ignore a court order to return to schools. About half the city's 1,150 teachers failed to report to work Thursday. School board officials said pupils at all elementary schools and one middle school were sent home after one hour of class. Two middle schools and five high schools were reported open, staffed by nonstriking teachers, administrators and volunteers.

Fifteen Michigan school districts with almost 100,000 pupils were closed because of teachers' strikes. One district-the Detroit suburb of Westwood-fired 200 striking teachers and hired more than 100 regular substitutes, reopening the schools. About 50 of the striking teachers decided to return to work.

First New Haven Sentence Given

The first adult Black Panther to be sentenced in connection with the torture murder of Panther member Alex Rackley was given a suspended jail term in Superior Court here yesterday.

Loretta Luckas, 22, of Bridgeport, who pleaded guilty to a charge of conspiracy to kidnap and turned state's evidence, was given a suspended two to three year sentence by Judge Harold M. Mulvey.

The suspended sentence was recommended by State's Atty. Arnold Markle, who noted that Miss Luckes testified for the state at the recent trial of Black Panther Lennie McLucas.

McLucas was convicted Aug. 31 of conspiracy to murder in connection with the death of Rackley in May 1969. Judge Mulvey said he would impose sentence on McLucas Sept. 18..

Two other Panthers - Warren Kimbro and George Sams, JR.- have pleaded guilty to second degree murder in the Rackley slaying and testified for the state in the McLucas trial. The charge carries a mandatory life term but Kimbro and Sams have not yet been sentenced.

Miss Luckes testified under questioning by McLucas' attorney during the trial in July that the prosecution had promised to recommend a sentence of 18 months to seven years as a result of her guilty plea.

Challenges Of A Newspaper

Last Wednesday we talked about challenges to universities and to risk being provincial we'd like to say something about the challenges facing this newspaper.

Not many people realize the growth that the Daily Collegian has enjoyed the past three years as a daily paper. It has risen to become the ninth largest college daily in the nation, the largest college newspaper in New England and one of the largest newspapers of any sort in Western Massachusetts.

The job of continuing this growth is not an easy one. Nor is it an easy job mustering the working force and energy to be on campus at 8 a.m. every morning.

For , though a full time job, the Collegian is a student activity, done in the spare time of those involved. Perhaps this is the greatest challenge of all, trying to have the job end and college begin.

But frankly, the editors welcome the task of trying to inform and influence this community of over 20,000. It is a task that cannot be accomplished every day, and this must be our first concern. The responsibility of being the first news source each day for this community is one which is taken seriously and one which must influence any undertaking assumed on these pages.

The above can not be done without help. And the Collegian, to continue to improve (as it has improved to the extent that it is now rated as one of the leading college papers anywhere) annually needs new talent, new ideas, new members. To change along with everything else, including our image, we need some of those who have thought the Collegian either small-time or too establishment. For we are not small-time and are apart from the student organization power complex, or any outside influence other than the mood of the community.

And we need people who are interested in a valuable educational and personal experience. For that is what the Daily Collegian is in essence.

Course Change. An Outrage!

It was a day to commit suicide with a friend.

Something has got to be done about Course Change Day. Hundreds of students begin classes tomorrow with twelve or fewer credits. Upperclassmen find themselves shut out of courses in their majors. Waiting lists of up to fifty people are common. Anyone visiting Boyden yesterday had to be struck by the situation. Sadness, frustration, rage, frustration, and more frustration.

The problems are obvious enough. The University is forced to admit more and more students each year. If they did not the legislature would slash budgets even more severely than they do now. But the funds necessary to accomodate more students are not provided. Hence there are too many freshmen and sophomores, not enough faculty, course overcrowding, and exclusion from courses. The real solution to the problem is more money for the University. Legislators should be invited to come to Course Change Day so they could see the fruits of their frugality. That's what should be done.

Even given the present situation, there are solutions. The current method of adding and dropping is arbitrarily unfair, despite the school's claim that change times (ID numbers with first digit eight first, then 9-0-1-2-3-4-5-6-7) are equally good. The fact is that no one drops anything until he has what he wants; if your student number begins with 7, then yesterday you didn't have a chance. Getting there first is the name of the game, which is unjust. It is also discriminatory to freshmen, who have not yet learned to beat the bureaucracy at its own game. (Cagy veterans of previous course-change days WERE able to get what they wanted. That strikes me as sad.)

Admittedly the situation is poor, but it can be improved. Herewith:

Firstly the University should either send out Correct Course Verification Data cards or send no cards at all. Usually incorrect these cards are misleading, one might even say counter-productive.

Secondly, either allow students to attend courses for a week before registering for them, or allow more time for Course Change. There should be a day to add, where all vacancies can be filled. Then a Drop day. No one drops courses until he is sure he has what he wants, and many students are kept out of courses others haven't bothered to drop yet. Then a second add day, or a University-wide bulletin listing vacancies.

The present system is terrible. It could be easily changed.

With A Little Help

The best key to the kind of future we can expect is the university-the first victim of the clash between the two cultures. The university is a remarkably vulnerable institution, since it lies in the path of the rapidly swelling ranks of the new culture yet bears a poorly concealed parasitic relation to the old. It is thus caught in the vise-it cannot ignore the new culture as the rest of society attempts to do, yet it cannot accommodate to it without losing old culture support and going bankrupt. No solutions will be found to this dilemna until some of the institutions on which the university depends begin to yield and change, and many will go under before this happens. If the universities-notoriously rigid and archaic institutions-can find a way to absorb the new culture this augurs well for the society as a whole. If, on the other hand, the campus becomes a police state, as many are suggesting, it seems likely that the nation as a whole will follow the same path."

Migration

In his shop on South Ashland Ave., Carlo the Barber sits and watches the people go by. Once their faces had been nearly all white. Now more and more of them are black.

Two doors down, the Lerners have closed their grocery. Once, twice , Nate Lerner was held up. The druggist down the street wasn't quite as lucky; he was beaten near death.

Marty the mailman delivers the mail for Ashland as he has for years. He is a bachelor, writes poetry, paints, and tells the funniest stories. He sports quite a belly ("beer," he says) and golfs in the seventies. "I only wanted to make it the two more years to my retirement," he says. "The way things are going, I hope I make it."

Marty owns a house just west of Ashland. "I can't understand it," he says. "Must be over a hundred families moved in the last year. and where are they going to find what they've left? The suburbs - that's no life. And where is there to run?"

George drives home a student working with him as a meatcutter. The student is white; George is black, also the cooler-boss. "Do you like my house?" he asks. "Some painting to do, but I really like living in a house. My first one." He leaves the student on the corner, at Ashland.

The white people congregate for breakfast each morning at Chuck's A-OK grill. The owners of the small businesses which occupy the long, flat buildings of Ashland Ave, the mechanics and the clerks and the secretaries talk over coffee with the neighborhood people on their way to work. The conversation never seems to change much. More friends pulling out, churches hurting for money and members. Where you gonna go? Where you gonna go?

In the afternoons, they amble accross the street to Papp's tavern for a short one and a glimpse at the ball game. They stare out the window at those walking by; it's a rare black face that appears at Papp's.

Sometimes on weekends, one or two better restaurants can be seen filled with suburbanites and northsiders. "Looking over the old neighborhood, Marty. When you comin' out our way? Why did it happen, Mart? Why?"

Some observers call it the clash of two cultures. Sam Lubell in THE FUTURE OF AMERICAN POLITICS calls it the last, great American migration. The outward movement of the black masses from the center of the city Lubell sees as the safety-valve of American urban life.

Carlo doesn't know quite what to call it. He walks to the room in the back where he lives and pours himself a cup of coffee. They should need haircuts, too, shouldn't they, he thinks.

Cadre: Program of Study in Education

CADRE AND YOUR PROGRAM OF STUDY IN EDUCATION

CADRE is the result of a lot of hard work by some doctoral students in the School of Education, and it appears to be paying some dividends. It stands for the Committee for Alternative Designs for Reform in Education. And a new design for instruction at the University is clearly their intent.

A basic tenet of CADRE's educational philosophy is that there is a very wide range of legitimate learning experiences, and that the traditional course arrangement precludes many and limits other worthwhile experiences. CADRE would not officially do away with courses, but would include them, along with a variety of other learning modes, within a single instructional system.

In other words, your program of study might consist of a combination of independent study, course work, course audits, travel, short term internships, informal reading and discussion with student and faculty groups, involvment in community organizations, etc. You would register for the full load (or a part of it) through CADRE, and eliminate the credit and course hassle. CADRE advisors will assist you to set up a program of study, and help you to take full advantage of the numerous and diverse campus resources. Rather than building a program around "courses," a program is built around your needs and your potential. Where or if courses fit the program, fine-take them.

Last year, CADRE was set up primarily for graduate students in the School of Education. This year things are a little different. Five faculty members, including Deans Allen and Woodbury, have given a 3 credit equivalent of time to the program. And a large number of doctoral students are forming a "resource pool" as well as a mechanism whereby undergraduates and graduates alike can be advised and assisted throughout the year.

Entitled "Development of Leadership in Educational Innovations," Ed. 254/534, your program of study can be as structured (or non structured) as is appropriate for you, and as extensive (1-15 credits) as you wish. Responsibility rests with you-where it belongs. The CADRE directors believe that the student should provide initiative and a sense of direction. The School of Education and the University at large is the resource bank, with CADRE providing one mechanism whereby students can find and utilize appropriate resources.

This past year the School of Education implemented the modular credit idea (remember Something '70?), and modular offerings will continue thi s year. CADRE, however, may diminish the necessity of filling out forms, gathering signatures, etc., since modular experiences can simply be a part of your program of study, credit for which is a part of Ed 234/534. An added advantage is that, through the advising and program request process, a great variety of modular experiences can be created and tailored to your needs.

Stop in at room 227 in the School of Ed and see Fred Obrien or Joe Hardy for more information. In any case, a general meeting for all CADRE enrollees will be called within a week or so.

Student Unrest Is A Global Trend

By FRED HETCHINGER
N. Y. Times

MONTREAL - "Student unrest is now a global movement. It is part of a social upheaval that envelops all countries - those which suffer from the crisis of poverty and those which suffer from the crisis of affluence."

This is how a vice chancellor of one of India's universities summed up the flood tide of student demands across the world. The tide even swept across the meeting here of the International Association of Universities, a meeting that at first had threatened to bog down in administrators' talk about good intentions and bad finances. It was the question of students demands to take part in running the universities that aroused the world's academic leaders.

The I. A. U. was founded in 1950, and is financed chiefly by dues from its members-more than 500 universities in over 100 countries-with some help from UNESCO. Its headquarters is in Paris, and it meets only once every five years for a week long, top-level discussion of international problems in higher education.

To Americans who consider their own students' disaffection entirely in the context of national problems, this global view may offer company to their misery. But it also underscores the fact that there is no easy answer or strictly local cure.

For example, while most of the debates here and abroad still center on the extent of student participation-the number to be included on councils and committees-a far more radical push is on in many parts of the world for a "democratic" campus of "one man, one vote." In other words, students, faculty, administrators and employes would have an equal vote on all issues.

This, a representative from Finland reported, was the actual proposal by the Minister of Education there last year. After hot parliamentary debate, the proposal was defeated, but in Finland and elsewhere it remains a live demand.

In the Netherlands, after extensive student participation was proposed, radical students, too turned their backs on it and demanded the equal vote for all.

What the discussions here also underscored is that it is misleading to talk about "the universities" apart from the societies in which they function. The following examples serve as illustrations:

Exceptions

Although there are exceptions the mood tends to be conservative. Dr. A. A. Kwapong, vice chancellor of the University of Ghana, conceded that students ought to be heard, but rejected current demands for participatory rule as something "that is not new, but rediscovered and exported by TV."

"Remember that a university is both a democratic and an aristocratic institution that must give special weight to the voice of experience and knowledge," he said. In private discussion, he added that a country that desperately needs the product of university training cannot afford to allow disrupters to remain on campus. "You see, we don't have your guilt feelings," he said.

The Western World - Countries with a longer tradition both of university affairs and political freedoms were less categorical in their conclusions.

Father Felipe E. MacGregor, rector of Peru's Catholic University, told the assembly: "Do not believe that students' participation will solve the problem of student unrest. We have had 50 years of participation, and we still have many problems."

But the trend toward participation is clear and politically inevitable. Prof. H. Janne of the Free University of Brussels warned the delegates that "it is impossible not to have participation at all...Young people across the world want it."

Most of those representing the established institutions admitted that they had long erred on the side of conservatism. "A decade ago, we tended, each in his own tradition, to have fixed answers; now we are less certain," said James M. Hester, president of New York University.

The re-establishment of academic peace, it was held, calls for a return of mutual trust and respect, and a de-escalation of rhetoric, both the traditional and the new kind.

Catch PHRASES

A student from Australia, attending the meeting as an invited participant, said: "You already have your jobs, but your poor teaching can jeopardize our chance. One day, we students will believe you if you continue to use such catch phrases as 'community of scholars.' All members of a community participate in the decision-making."

But then, he, too, added: "There must be trust rather than confrontation."

Dr. J. A. L. Matheson, vice chancellor of Monash University in Australia, dealt with trust in a different fashion.

"When a student kicks me," he said, "I don't object because it's improper for a student to kick a vice chancellor, but because it is wrong for one human being so to treat another." Then he added: "When a university does something (in response to student demands), we ought to ask not is it efficient, but is it right?"

None of this offers generally applicable rules of procedure. It offers only the hint that the immediate future will see students represented on the policy-making councils of universities in most parts of the world. Some of these students, as in the Soviet countries, will speak for the establishment; others may help reform the establishment, while at the same time being subjected to radical students' charges that they have been co-opted.

The removal of specific grievances - national or educational - is not likely to still the protest. An end to the period of testing and skirmishing, of uncertainty of aims and rights, both on the part of the students and their academic elders, is not yet in sight.

Married Student Apts. Ready In November

North Village, the 240-unit apartment complex for married students at the University, will be ready for partial occupancy this fall.

Eighty apartments will be ready for tenants by Nov.1. The rest will be completed on a gradual basis throughout the year.

At the request of the Board of Trustees, construction of the apartments was voted by the University of Massachusetts Building Authority in November 1969. Because of the need for housing for married students, the University moved to have North Village ready this year.

Construction of the complex, which was scheduled for September completion, has been delayed by the problems involved in the new type of unit construction--delays in securing electrical equipment, and lack of manpower to handle concrete pouring during the initial phases of construction.

The site design for North Village was done by Per Nylen, landscape architect of Northampton. The builder is Fontaine Modular Structures (FMS) Inc., also of Northampton. The apartment units are being constructed at the FMS plant in Northampton, and the first units were moved onto concrete foundations at the site last month.

North Village is located on University property on the west side of North Pleasant Street in Amherst between the Presidential and Puffton Apartments, both privately owned. Each apartment will have a living-dining area, kitchenette, bath, and storage room. Half of the apartments will have one bedroom, the other half will have two. Rental rates of $135 for single-bedroom apartments and $155 for two bedrooms were established by the Board of Trustees at its August meeting.

The four million dollar project is being financed by the University of Massachusetts Building Authority on a self-liquidating basis at no cost to the taxpayer. The funding arrangements are the same as those used for University residence halls, dining commons, the stadium, the Student Union, and the Campus Center.

Married students will occupy 95% of the 240 apartments. Those with dependent children will be given first consideration. The remaining 5% of the apartments will be reserved by the University for short-term tenancies to house, for example, distinguished visiting faculty and their families.

Tenant application forms for North Village may be obtained from Mr. Donald J. Pelkey, Off-Campus Housing Office, 236 Whitmore.

At the site of North Village are: Donald J. Pelkey, UMass Director of Married Student Housing; Per Nylen, landscape architect; and Edward C. Heinz, general superintendent for Fontaine Modular Structures, Inc.

Orzell Leads Theater Group Appearing Now In Bartlett

Two off-off Broadway plays will be performed this week on campus as the first events sponsored by the University's Fine Arts Council. Performances of Sam Shepard's "Red Cross" and Leonard Melfi's "Birdbath" will be performed by a distinguished trio of actors under the direction of Nick Orzel, well-known actor and director.

NICK ORZELL

Performances Friday and Saturday evenings, September 11-12th in Bartlett Theatre at 8:00 p.m. by the Independent Theatre Group will provide a unique opportunity for the University community to become acquainted with the work of two of the country's most popular, young playwrights. For this engagement the Fine Arts Council has announced that student tickets will be $1 and others at $1.50 and may be purchased at the Council's Box Office, 125 Herter Hall Friday from 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. and also at Bartlett Box Office one hour before curtain-time.

Mr. Orzell studied acting with Joseph Chaikin, Jeff Corey and Peter Kass. He has directed and acted in original scripts under a Federal grant at Theatre Genesis, St. Mark's Church-in the Bouwerie as well as the Open Theatre in New York.

In 1969 Mr. Orzell formed the Independent Theatre Group so that he could produce outstanding plays, many of them original scripts, outside of New York with its tight financial and artistic restrictions. In this area, Mr. Orzel has worked with Chico Garvin, of the Buffalo Meat Company, in the production of plays at the Leverett Arts & Crafts Center, Cafe La Mama and over public radio WFCR in Amherst.

Several Deferments Explained

(Editor's note - Beginning next week, this column will appear each Tuesday and Thursday in the MDC)

As more and more young Americans become concerned about the cancerous growth of militarism in the United States, the question of alternatives to serving in the armed forces assumes greater and greater importance. Men are seeking ways to avoid supporting the abhorrent war against Vietnam, and both men and women are disturbed by the disruption and channeling of their lives caused by the Selective Service Draft Counselor's Corner will provide information about alternatives through general information and by answering questions submitted by readers. Note: We recognize that the draft does as much to disrupt the lives of women as it does the lives of men. Therefore, a special effort will be made to provide information for women also.

STUDENT - At best a temporary deferment. As long as you are regularly enrolled as a full-time student and making satisfactory progress, you qualify for a I-S(H) for high school students or a II-S for college students deferment. You may retain this deferment until you either graduate, withdraw, or fall behind in your studies. Generally speaking, graduate students are no longer eligible for II-S deferments.

MEDICAL AND PSYCHOLOGICAL - There are two deferment classifications, L-Y and IV-F. The IV-F is a nearly permanent classification meaning that you are not qualified for any service. It is becoming increasingly difficult to obtain a IV-F. The I-Y means qualified for service only in time of war or national emergency. It is usually given subject to a six-month or annual review. Many people with medical histories which do not interfere with their daily lives qualify for I-Y because the rigors of military training and duty may aggravate the condition. If you think you may qualify for a I-Y consult your doctor and a qualified draft counselor. Many people have been able to "arrange" physical or psychological reasons for disqualification. This works, but it's not a good idea to rely on such outs without adequate preparation.

HARDSHIP - If being drafted would cause extreme economic, physical, or emotional hardship on dependents or other members of your family, you may qualify for a III-A. The fact that this deferment is not requested more frequently than it is points up the blatant racism of the SS in practice. I would guess that a large majority of corecity draftees qualify for III-A deferments. Draft boards, required by law to place a registrant in the lowest classification for which he qualifies, never follow proper procedure in determining hardship when it is indicated on the classification questionnaire.

SOLE SURVIVING SON - If you are the sole surviving son in your family, and your father or one of your brothers died as a result of military-related injuries, you are IV-A and may not be drafted.

MINISTERS AND MINISTERIAL STUDENTS - If you are a full-time divinity student or a practicing clergyman, you qualify for a IV-D. Some legal interpretations as to who qualifies for a IV-D are yet to be made. (The law requires that a minister must spend at least 100 hours a month practicing to qualify. As yet, the law does not believe, apparently, that one can serve God unless one is wearing a collar.) This is an area still open to challenge in the higher courts.

OVER AGE - If you're over 35, you are V-A, over age. To all practical purposes, you are over age once you have your 26th birthday. There are some exceptions, but, in general, life begins at 26.

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTOR - This is not a religious or pacifist deferment. People with religious and/or pacifist backgrounds are of course eligible for the I-O or I-A-O classifications, but others may also qualify. The law provides CO status for those opposed to participation in war (Note: it does not say opposed to war) for religious, moral, philosophical, or ethical reasons. My experience is that nearly everyone who takes the time to think about it is a conscientious objector. (In fact, it seems to me that the Selective Service attacks the problem backwards. Those who want to serve in the military should be asked to request status as conscientious participators, and made to prove that their conscience and training require that they kill people.) The I-A-O classification is for those willing to serve as noncombatants in the military, usually as medics; the I-O is not required to serve in the military, but must work for two years "in the national health, safety, or interest." Never request CO status without first consulting a draft counselor.

These are the major legal alternatives provided by the SSS. If you want more information, or if you don't qualify for any of these deferments, see a qualified draft counselor. You may also want to consider some extra-legal alternatives.

NON-REGISTRATION - Legally, you should register with the SSS within five days after your eighteenth birthday. Failure to do so carries a maximum sentence of 5 years, but in practice you are usually given the alternative of registering late. The advantage, of course, is that the SS does not have your name. Consider, however, that most schools automatically report your academic status to your local board, and if the board finds that you're not registered it could be a hassle. The complications are similar if you get busted for anything. Generally, non-registration is not a viable alternative for people moving within middle class institutions.

RESISTANCE - This includes resigning from the SSS by returning your draft card, refusing to report for induction, ripping off or trashing local and state boards and similar methods of non-cooperation and interference. You should expect to get busted and sentences can range up to 5 years, so you should have a clear idea of exactly what you hope to accomplish, whether the resistance method you choose will achieve your goal, and whether it's worth trading time in jail for.

EMIGRATION - Canada and other countries have been reasonably friendly to American political refugees seeking escape from the draft or the armed forces. The moral, emotional, and financial questions raised by emigration are very complex, and we will devote considerable space to this in the future. However, one simple fact is that emigrating before you must report for induction is not a crime, and it leaves you free to return openly to the States to visit friends and family.

Day Care Center Set For Northampton

NORTHAMPTON - A $97,414 year-round, experimental laboratory school day-care center in connectionwith the University preschool children will be started in Hampshire County Oct. 5 if final approval is given by Hampshire Community Action Commission, Inc. board of trustees, Frank R. Llamas associate director of HCAC said.

The center will be financed by federal funds from the office of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare under the Title 4 act for $78,520 with the difference of $8894 from "in kind services" provided by the local agency.

A total of 45 children between the ages of 2 3/4 and five years of age will utilize three classrooms, two of which will be in the Methodist Church on Elm Street in Northampton and the other in Easthampton's St. Philip's Episcopal Church.

A group consisting of 32 welfare children will be paid for by the federal government and the state welfare office while 13 non-welfare children's fee amounting to $25 per week will be paid by the parent.

The purpose of the daycare center, according to Llamas, is to provide for the care and education of preschool children Monday through Friday from 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. in order that the children can be given the kind of experimental background which will enable them to improve their learning competency.

Also, the center will allow the welfare mother to be freed to receive the kind of training that will enable her to develop salable skills or directly go to work, he said.

"This is more than a custodial-care center. It is a laboratory school in conjunction with "e University of Massachusetts ..nool of Education," Llamas said.

Prof. Daniel Jordan of the university has agreed to help implement and test an educational model devised by him to teach learning competency, he said.

The model for which Prof. Jordan is responsible is described by Llamas as an aesthetic approach to education stressing language development and involving the active participation of the children through different media including dance, drama and art which will result in teaching abstract concepts.

The purpose being, according to the associate director, to help children to learn by improving their ability to learn.

According to federal requirements, classes will be on a ratio of one teacher per five pupils; thus it will be possible to provide strong fundamentals in education with a goal oriented program, he said.

A staff has yet to be hired, Llamas said, but it will consist of a director, an education specialist, three head teachers, who will each have two aides, and a cook, who will provide hot lunches in addition to a small breakfast and snacks.

Also, a parent-health aide will be employed who will divide her time between the classroom and the home to assure adequate health care and active parent involvement, according to Llamas.

Limited transportation to bring the children in from the outlying areas of the county will be provided.

Astronomy Club Shoots For The Skies This Year

Beginning this semester, U-Mass. Astronomy Club will sponsor a series of open houses at observatories in the five college area. The first one of these will be September 18th at the UMass. Observatory on Orchard Hill beginning at sunset and lasting until about twelve midnight. After this, there will be an open house every other week.

For the time and place check the bulletin board outside of Room 20 in Hasbrouck Laboratory. In place of the open houses during the winter, planetarium shows will be given at Amherst College.

In addition to these, the Astronomy Club is offering a program in observational astronomy which will include basic instruction in the areas of lunar and planetary astronomy and variable stars observation, as well as numerous projects.

A tutorial project will be run in conjunction with the Astronomy Department and will offer extra help for students taking elementary astronomy courses. Details of all these programs will be discussed at the first Astronomy Club meeting Wednesday evening September 16th, at 7:30 PM in Room 134 Hasbrouck Laboratory. A movie EAGLE HAS LANDED is also scheduled for this meeting.

Second Largest Class Ever Enters Amherst College

Three hundred and twenty-two freshmen, comprising the second largest class in its history, are entering Amherst College this fall. Although it is somewhat smaller than the first post-war class in 1946 which numbered 430, it surpasses in size the class of 1970, which graduated in June (318), and the present sophomores (313). It is the tenth entering class to number over 300.

Completed applications this year were received from 2,584 candidates of whom 509 (20%) were accepted; 322(63% of those accepted) are expected to matriculate this month. Nearly two-thirds (198) are from public and the remainder (124) from private schools. Among them will be 34 sons of alumni, 41 of whom were accepted from 72 applicants. Approximately half of the class (162) was given early admission.

New York state provides the most freshmen (63), followed by Connecticut (40), Massachusetts (37), Pennsylvania (21), New Jersey (20), Illinois (15), and Ohio (14). Forty percent from the Middle Atlantic states (124), 30% from New England (95), 16% from the Middle West (52), and the balance from 17 other states and six foreign countries.

As careers, the largest number of freshmen (64) chose law; next in popularity are teaching (53), medicine (35), research (15), government and psychology (14 each), and engineering (11). For the first time ecology was given as an occupational goal (8). Twenty-two are undecided.

Career choices, however, do not closely reflect the students' academic interests. The largest number intend to major in the natural sciences (119), the next largest in the social sciences (114), and the fewest in the humanities (78). Only eleven are undecided.

Eighty-nine freshmen have been awarded $180,150 in scholarships and loans by Amherst College and 41 will receive aid amounting to $33,360 from other sources. Altogether, one-third of the class will receive financial assistance.

School of Business Ads Two For Environmental Group

Peter D'Errico and Ethan Katsh, both graduates of the Yale Law School, have joined the law and environment group of the School of Business.

Since his graduation in 1968, D'Errico has served as a lawyer for the Navajo Indians in a project funded through DEO. His work included the representation of Indians and the establishment of a system for judicial review of tribal decisions. He will retain his position on the Board of Directors of PLEA, a national organization of lawyers who work with the poor.

Katsh, during his student days, was co-founder of a legislative service program in which Yale Law students could assist state legislatures in research and legislative drafting in such areas as youth services, public health, gun control and marijuana.

Both men will teach introduction to law and in courses on law and contemporary problems.

UM's Erving Romps Through Europe

Redman Star Sparkles For U.S.; Baseball, Rugby Candidates Wanted

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Some time back, a few months, Julius Erving, UMass' and New England's top basketball player, got a letter asking him if he'd be interested in training in the Olympic Basketball Development Camp for a possible spot on a United States team that would tour Europe to play 13 games against foreign competition. 499 other hoopsters received similar letters.

Mr. Erving made that squad alright and led it to a fine 10-3 record, scoring at an average of 11 points and averaging 11 rebounds, both marks tops on the team.

Mr. Erving wasn't among the 44 original players invited to Colorado when training camp first opened at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs in July.

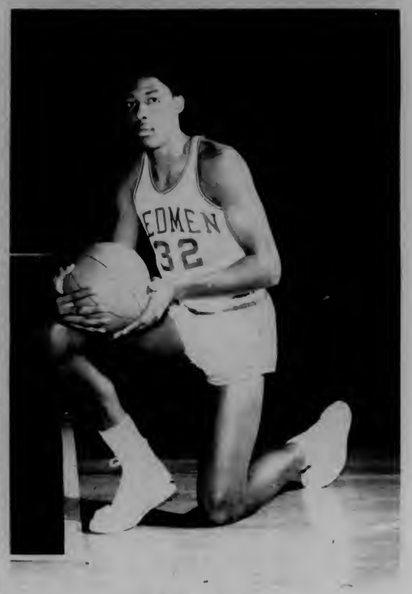
Doesn't sound right? Well, it didn't sound right to Redman basketball coach Jack Leaman when he first got the word that Erving had been passed up by the selection committee. Leaman got right on the phone, got in touch with Olympic Basketball Chairman Bill Summers and convinced him to make Erving his number one alternate, to be called to camp should a regular player drop out.

A regular player dropped out. Leaman was contacted at 1:15 one bright July morning. Leaman contacted Erving fifteen minutes later. Before he had much of a chance to breath, Erving was on a plane bound for Colorado.

The rest of the history was made by Mr. Erving.

In excellent physical condition, Erving lit up the Air Force hoop courts and out-rebounded such people as Elmore Smith, a seven-foot performer from Kentucky State and Tom McMillan, 6'11, a freshman at North Carolina and the most highly-touted high school basketball player in the country last year, named to the all-tourney team. As He earned one of the 12 touring berths and was on his way to Europe. First stop was Finland where the team won three. Two more victories came in the next stop, Warsaw, Poland. The Americans were then scheduled to enter a tournament in Moscow, the Soviet Union.

The Russians had a superior squad and dominated the tourney. The U.S. finished behind them; Erving was tapped as the best American player in one of the contests. The team then made it to Kiev where it lost to the Ukranian Nationals and defeated the Soviet Juveniles.



In Estonia, the final destination, another tourney faced the traveling cagers; they won it; Erving was a regular forward, he saw an average of about one half a game of action as did all the starters.

OLYMPIC OLDIES - Jim Gudger, head hoop coach at East Texas State University, headed the U.S. Olympic all-stars...In a UPI press release from Commerce, Texas, Gudger single out Erving as one of the squad's players who showed the most potential...13,000 was the biggest crowd that the team played before...The Russians were rated as being better than they ever were...The American team averaged 18 years in age... The U.S. hoopsters and the Soviet Juveniles, who averaged 21 years in age, became quite friendly, the latters giving out rubles to Erving and his mates for spending money in Moscow...Erving was without his passport for a segment of the trip, having mailed it to Washington, D.C. for State Department verifiction, and didn't get it back until the team reached Poland...Had he been without it, he wouldn't have been able to play in the Soviet Union...New England placed two players on this Olympic squad, the other being sophomore James Brown of Dartmouth.

UMass basketball announced its captains for the 1970-71 season early this summer. They are senior Ken Mathias and junior Julius Erving. Mathias, a two-year letterman from Lodi, N.J., will probably play at center for the Redmen this year. Last winter he grabbed 138 rebounds and averaged 7.5 points. What more can be said here about Mr. Erving, a native of Roosevelt, N.Y.; he can just do it all.

Chancellor Commends School of Ed Progressiveness

By DON GLICKSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Speaking to more than 500 faculty graduate students, and undergraduates at the 1970 School of Education convocation last Friday, Chancellor Oswald Tippo commended the School's growing national reputation and its "fine spirit of adventure", and announced that a feasibility study for a new School of Education building would begin soon.

Tippo prefaced his remarks by saying that school had begun with some "eye brow raising" experiences: a bomb scare on Thursday, and the death of a girl from an illegal abortion performed by a UMass microbiology student.

The Chancellor then cited what he felt were some of the weaknesses of the School of Education. "Too many courses are offered in the School of Ed", he said, but added that this was a "disease of most schools of education". Tippo urged greater cooperation and involvement of the School with the rest of the University so as to avoid course and program duplication. Some members of the University community, he said, felt that the School of Education was "apparently trying to duplicate the College of Arts and Sciences".

For the last two years, since Dr. Dwight Allen became Dean, the School of Education had been concentrating on building up the State's only public graduate school of education. Dr. Tippo urged that the School now turn its resources towards the development of undergraduate teacher training, not "peripheral" areas. As a final suggestion to repair some of the School's weaknesses, Tippo called attention to the fact that the University and the State has rules and policies, and he humorously warned, "You cannot continue to ignore ALL of them."

The School's good points were then outlined by Chancellor Tippo. The School, he said, has "challenged the past, challenged all traditions" and was "in the forefront of educational experimentation". Tippo praised the School for the "absolute phenomenal success that you have had in obtaining outside support" (in the way of financial grants). Finally, Tippo congratulated the School for the quality of its faculty and for the support given the School by its students. The Chancellor was given a spirited ovation.

The Convocation proceeded with a slide presentation of an impressionistic collage of the School of Education by two of the School's grad students, Pat Davis and Demian.

Dean Dwight Allen, sporting noticeably longer side burns than last year, then introduced the Assistant Deans of the School and more than twenty-five new faculty members. Among the new faculty are Peter Schrag, Editor at Large of the SATURDAY REVIEW, Redge Davoran, the Madison Avenue media specialist who originated the "Mother, I can do it myself!" commercial, Nat Rutstein, formerly of NBC, and Rhody McCoy, former administrator of the Ocean Hill-Brownsville School District.

Dr. Allen closed the convocation by stating that the UMass School of Education "can succeed in doing something other schools have not" and would continue to try to "solve the onerous problems of society" and "the problems of destiny, personal, social, national".

"We indeed do lead the nation in schools of education", Dr. Allen said, but he issued notice to all for "the risk-taking to continue."

Southern School Integration Proceeds Smoothly

How are Southern cities, long the center of the country's segregation controversies, facing up to a new school year under the desegregation directive?

From the viewpoint of many observers, most school systems are taking the court order in stride and doing it peacefully.

More than 57,000 Negro and white students sat side by side in schools designated for their Federal Court-ordered attendance zones. The number of blacks and whites in each school actually attending mixed classrooms for the first time will be known by week's end. The number is expected to be considerable.

"Everything's peaceful in Dixie," reported Dixie County Supervisor W. A. Rains, last week in Tallahassee, Fla. He summed up the situation as 41 of Florida's 67 counties opened schools, many under the new desegregation plans.

"Smoothest opening day in five years," was the report from Pensacola in Florida's Panhandle, where opposition to integration has been the strongest.

In Manatee County, where Gov. Claude Kirk earlier this year tossed out the entire school board and appointed himself superintendent in a futile attempt to block a court integration plan requiring more busing of students, Supt. Jack Davidson said:

"Everything seems to be getting off to a very good start under the circumstances. It's very quiet right now."

It was quiet almost everywhere. There were minor demonstrations in Miami and Fort Lauderdale and some scattered boycotts, but police said the only act of violence--the shooting of a Cuban by a black--had no relation to school problems.

In North Carolina, counties like Harnett, where blacks make up less than one-half the population, school desegregation crises have largely passed.

And most resistance has ended.

"I don't think either blacks or whites were happy with (desegregation) but we are basically a law-abiding country," Grey said. "The judge ordered that we integrate. We developed a plan and explained it to the public. We've had a smooth, effective program."

The lack of overt resistance does not necessarily mask more sophisticated means of subverting the desegregation order in North Carolina.

All-white private schools, whose support appears to have peaked when they siphoned from the public systems the most determined segregationists during the initial years of "token" desegregation, have not shown substantial growth this year.

One private school near Durham reportedly closed down this year after it lost its Federal tax exemptions.

An all-white "academy" operated by the Citizens Council, once the bastion of Southern defiance, was advertising for new students in a local newspaper in the same county a couple of Sundays ago.

Some new private schools have opened in Durham this year, so the score may be about even. School officials consider that encouraging, given the fact that 55 percent of the city's pupils are black and a plan adopted only a month ago pairs some ghetto schools with suburban schools and requires nearly one fourth of Durham's youngsters to ride busses to assure desegregation.

Classes started Wednesday in Durham. The same issues to which citizens there appear to have adjusted - busing and an end to the "neighborhood schools," - have caused great trauma in Charlotte.

Ironically, Charlotte, the state's largest city, has held a reputation much like Atlanta for paving the way toward racial moderation in the South.

The head of the Southern Regional Council, the South's oldest and most respected civil rights research organization, lives in Charlotte, as does author Harry Golden a Southern pioneer in the advocacy of racial justice and integration.

Nevertheless, when the real test came to Charlotte, much of the white middle class and many of the white officials balked.

Suburban whites organized a politically potent organization to oppose "forced busing" and to fight for "neighborhood schools."

The opening of schools has been delayed a week in the turmoil.

Outside Charlotte, the beginning of school has been relatively quiet in North Carolina this year.

About one-third of the state's 152 school districts began classes three weeks ago. Most of the remainder began the first week of September.

In Birmingham, the effects of teacher desegregation are already known. More than 600 teachers this year were transferred to new schools-usually as crossover teachers in schools attended primarily by another race. Some 300 teachers had already been working in crossover positions. And 200 teachers hired for the first time this year received crossover jobs.

Of the 600 newly assigned crossover teachers, 100 asked for reconsideration--usually in hopes of getting a post nearer home for the sake of transportation. Of that figure, 12 resigned outright.

About 30 parents at one school insisted on enrolling their children outside their zone. Officials politely but firmly said "no."

Birmingham school Supt. Raymond Christian and his staff are pleased and proud of a city that has "come around." Dr. Christian and his assistants know if they can carry the court compliance off, Birmingham will be the largest Alabama city--and one of the largest in the south--to accept this new role.

"There was a time only six or seven years ago when this thing could not have been done in Birmingham," said one of his aides.

In Florida, the massive pupil holdout threatened by members of United Stand for America, Inc. in response to the court order, never materialized.

The Miami-based organization claims 50,000 members.

Education officials concede there has been a sharp increase in both the number and enrollment of private schools. (In Florida, private schools can be formed without any accreditation by the state; the process is so simple that three capital newsmen chartered their own school last year at a total cost of $37.50)

Gov. Kirk, after his earlier trip into Manatee County (which drew him a $10,000-a-day contempt threat), has steered away from inciting parents to violate court orders.

"We are asking everyone to be calm, to obey the laws of the land, because we are winning in the courts," he says again and again.

Abortion Information Highlights Birth Control Advocate Baird's Talk

Hillel-Sponsored Bill Baird displays abortive devices during his lecture yesterday to illustrate a point.

By DENISE MAGNELL
Monday Issue Editor

"Birth Control and Religion" was the official theme of a lecture given by Bill Baird, independent candidate for the Massachusetts' US Senate seat, at the first Hillel Brunch of the semester, held yesterday in the Student Union Ballroom.

Mr. Baird, however, gave as much information concerning abortion methods and laws during the course of his speech as he did birth control.

To illustrate his talk, he displayed two boards. One showed the various instruments (knitting needles, hangers, syringes) used by women trying to abort their own pregnancies.

"These illegal devices' are actually nothing more than household items," he added.

His detailed descriptions of illegal abortions caused many in the audience to cringe. Mr. Baird noted that "to cringe (at these hideous facts) shows me that you are alive."

The other board, labelled "Parents Aid Society", showed most of the birth control devices and jells that are available to the public, either commercially or through their doctor. He discussed the appropriate methods of using these products, since their misuse can lead to harming the individual.

He strongly discourages using the rhythym method of birth control, which he lightly referred to as "Vatican Roulette", for its high degree of uncertainty.

Citing the Roman Catholic Church as the single most powerful force against his work, he said that 62% of the people he had assisted last year with either birth control or abortion advice had been Roman Catholics. This, he feels, should prove many people's non-acceptance of the Church's position.

Mr. Baird spoke of his campaign right now for the repeal of Massachusetts laws concerning homosexuality (for which a person may be sentenced from 5-15 years), fornication, and "crimes against nature" (individual sexual patterns), as well as legalizing abortion.

"It is amazing that our government has laws that say no to birth control help and no to abortion help. If I can enlist your support in fighting for the right to control your own life, we can repeal these laws," he maintains.

His goal is to collect enough signatures to put these questions on referendum during the upcoming elections.

In his final remarks, the speaker asked that "if in your moral judgement you plan to engage in intercourse, I plead with you to be responsible to each other."

During the question period that followed, Mr. Baird was asked what type of response he had received in the black community. He replied that he finds most black, married males against the work since many of them want to increase the black population for political reasons. However, black women have been extremely receptive and "while it is the woman who bears the risks of pregnancy, she should be the one with the final say."

A student interested in Mr. Baird's "platform" for the senate seat, asked for his views in other areas.

Baird is a strong advocate of a nation-wide sex education program, starting on the elementary education levels and directed towards both male and female problems.

He urges immediate withdrawal from Vietnam, noting that "it can be done if it was done in Normandy and Dunkirk."

He also believes that religious organizations, buildings and holdings should be taxable. Taking a case in point, "When a church burns, it is the fire department, supported by the tax payers, not the church personnel who put out the fire."

Having been in jail in four different states for his birth control advocacy, Baird lists prison reform as one of his main concerns. He recently served several weeks of a three-month prison term given him for displaying birth control devices two years ago at a Boston rally.

WMUA will broadcast the lecture sometime next week, to be announced later.

Anyone interested in getting signatures to put the aforementioned laws on referendum this fall, can contact Hillel Vice-President Elliott Margolis at 6-9742 (114 MacKimmie).

Thelwell Visa Snag Prompts D.C. Meeting

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

Representatives from UMass will meet with State department officials today in Washington D.C. in an effort to speed the entry into the U. S. of UMass Black Studies Chairman, Michael Thelwell.

Dr. Randolph Bromery, Asst. to the Chancellor and Dean Seymour Shapiro will fly to Washington early today to meet with aides from the Senator Kennedy and Brooke's offices. Later in the afternoon, they will huddle with people from the State Department's Passport Bureau.

Thelwell, who was supposed to arrive on campus September 1 from his native Jamaica, is having difficulty acquiring the type of visa which would allow him to enter the country as soon as possible. The University has been working through channels for the last two weeks in an effort to clear Thelwell for entrance. The "snag" according to Bromery, lies in the type of visa available to Thelwell.

Originally, the UMass administration had applied for a regular immigration visa for Theiwell. This would have taken upwards to a year to obtain. With the advice of Senator Kennedy's staff the Administration applied for an "H-1" visa, which would have allowed for quick entry, had the Administration applied for it earlier.

The meeting with State department officials might produce an aggreement which would over-ride the "technicalities" now preventing Thelwell's entrance. There are several other visas which could be obtained for Theiwell, according to Bromery.

Thelwell, a Graduate of Howard University, came to UMass to complete his Graduate work and has been instrumental in creating the new W.E.B. Dubois Black Studies Department. He was named last Spring by the Board of Trustees to chair the department.

Hijackers Release 250, Press Surrender Demands

(AP) More than 250 airplane hijack victims flew out of Jordan Sunday but Arab guerrillas still held 55 hostages and insisted on "unconditional surrender" by Western governments and Israel to their demands.

A communique issued in Beirut by the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine PFLP did not list the "surrender" terms. The Marxist guerrilla group previously demanded the release of three guerrillas jailed in West Germany, three more held in Switzerland, a female guerrilla detailed in Britain and an unspecified number of guerrillas imprisoned in Israel.

For the 257 former hostages who flew out of Amman, it was, for some, the end of an eight day ordeal during which they had been cooped up under armed guard inside the sweltering cabins of the ill fated airliners.

In Nicosia, Cyprus, where they stopped off en route to London and Zurich, most expressed relief that their period of captivity was over.

But for others, there remained fear and consternation for relatives still in guerrilla hands.

Carol Harrari Raful of Brooklyn, N. Y., said her husband was among the hostages, and Annette Potts of Yorkshire, England, said her father was detained.

Mrs. Harari Raful said she felt the guerrillas "couldn't wait to get rid of us. They seemed to be angry on Friday when they told us negotiations were not going according to their expectations."

Bernard Le Sevre of LeHavre, France, said they were allowed off the planes only three times in three days.

Although there was no breakdown of the hostages' nationalities, Gerritt H., who was freed, said a number of American Jews and a young U. S. veteran were among them.

The young soldier was suffering "fainting spells," he said, adding: "They took him to a hospital somewhere, and I'm terribly, terribly worried about him."

American sources in Amman identified the soldier as Kenneth Hubler, and airline officials confirmed that a soldier who hoarded a Trans World Airlines plane at Frankfurt had not been freed.

In Beirut, the three airlines said eight persons were still unaccounted for from a British Overseas Airways Corp. VC10, 34 from the TWA Boeing 707, and five from the Swissair DC 8.

White House Panel Finds UN Weak, Forsees New Role As Peacekeeper

WASHINGTON (AP) - A White House commission reports deep seated weaknesses in the United Nations and recommends steps to strengthen it in peacekeeping, in discouraging aerial piracy, in narcotics control, and in protection of the environment.

In an interim report submitted Sunday, Chairman Henry Cabot Lodge-a former chief U.S. delegate to the United Nations-sets forth for President Nixon preliminary findings of a presidential commission for observance of the world organization's 25th birthday. A final report is expected in April.

Getting into specific problem areas, the commission says stronger peacekeeping machinery and conciliation procedures clearly are needed.

"The critical importance of United Nations mediation in the Middle East conflict will, we hope, lead to suggestions for providing prompt procedures and impartial expert staff to limit, defuse and settle this kind of breach of international peace and security," Lodge writes.

He goes on: "We are especially concerned over the relatively new threat to world order created by armed groups, beyond the control of national governments, who menace and sabotage international cooperation by criminal acts of kidnapping and destruction."

The Lodge panel, complaining about "the disparity between voting power and financial responsibility" among U. N. members, urges also a reform of U. N. institutions, "such as weighted voting in the United Nations system, that will more adequately reflect power and responsibility in the world and seek arrangements for more reliable and equitable methods of financing the organization."

The commission envisages also a broader U. N. role in dealing with global environmental problems, saying there may be a need for "new international rules and possibly new institutions to protect the air and the waters from pollution."

The veteran diplomat says the commission's initial finding "is not that the U. N. is in danger of immediate collapse, but that it is becoming increasingly incapable of dealing with the grave issues troubling the world."

Agnew Warns Republicans to Behave

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) - Vice President Spiro T. Agnew has sent up a political warning to dissident Republicans: The administration can spurn the GOP dissenter at campaign time just as it rewards the faithful.

The case at hand is Sen. Charles E. Goodell of New York, about whom Agnew said he will be making some campaign judgements later.

The vice president left open the possibility that he might wind up supporting James Buckley, the Conservative party candidate in a three way New York race.

"That's a question that would have to be determined by the future course of events and it's far too early to make any predictions of that type," Agnew said.

Goodell, an appointed senator seeking his first elected term, faces Democratic Rep. Richard Ottinger and conservative Buckley, who is likely to pry into the Republican vote.

Counted among the most liberal of Republican senators, Goodell was a chief sponsor of legislation that would have compelled U. S. military withdrawal from Southeast Asia next year. That measure was rejected by the Senate.

Campaigning for Western Republican candidates with acid denunciations of "radical liberals" in Congress, Agnew said there are some GOP members in their ranks. He refused to identify anyone.

Asked whether Goodell fit his definition of a radical liberal, Agnew replied: "Well, I'll designate in the course of the campaign who I am talking about when I walk about radical liberals... I probably will make some judgement about that particular senator somewhere along the campaign trail, but it's a little early for that."

The vice president spent Saturday and Sunday in Palm Springs, golfing and relaxing after two days of campaigning in Illinois, Wyoming and California.

He was to return to the circuit Monday with a television appearance in San Diego and a vote hunting mission to Las Vegas in behalf of William Raggie, the Washoe County Reno district attorney whom he helped recruit to Senate candidacy against Democratic Sen. Howard W. Cannon.

At a Saturday news conference Agnew described his prime campaign targets this way: "A radical liberal seems to find a great necessity for applauding our enemies, castigating our friends, running down the processes of American government...people who never look to the reasonable, representative system for the answers to their questions but always to some very dramatic, theatrical attention getting device which they say will solve the problem but which we know only provides good copy."

Agnew charged in Casper, Wyo., Friday that "radical liberals have taken over the Democratic party in Congress."

But he said in Palm Springs, "I don't think that the Senate has a majority of radical liberals by any stretch of the imagination. I think they're a fairly compact group of probably somewhere in the area of 10 to 15 senators who can qualify for the designation from time to time."

"I think there may be a Republican or two in there."

But he steadfastly refused to say who in his judgment they are.

General Motors Threatened By Walk-Out

DETROIT (AP) - The United Auto Workers will strike General Motors Corp. but will leave Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. operating if new contracts with the Big Three automakers are not reached by midnight Monday, the union said Sunday.

The UAW's decision to zero in on GM as its only strike target followed a meeting by the union's 25 member International Executive Board. The union had said earlier that it would not strike Ford but would strike either GM or Chrysler, or both, if new labor agreements covering 713,000 Big Three workers were not reached by midnight Monday when current three year pacts expire.

Leonard Woodcock, UAW president, said that Chrysler had indicated it was not a "free agent" in bargaining and appeared it would be exploitation of Chrysler employees to strike there when he said GM held the final answer.

The UAW leader said the strike would be at General Motors in both the United States and Canada if no contract is reached by the deadline. He said it was an unanimous decision of the UAW's Board.

He said the board seriously considered strikes at both locations, but discarded Chrysler.

Woodcock said Chrysler has showed every indication to solve one of the major issues-retirement after 30 years service, regardless of age-but late Saturday "We had the door summarily pushed in our face."

He said it was obvious GM was calling the shots on new contract bargaining.

Woodcock said earlier the negotiating atmosphere seemed better at Chrysler, but did not elaborate. He said arrogance seemed to permeate the entire GM headquarters building.

Both Woodcock and GM's top negotiator, Earl Bramblett, expressed concern that chances for a settlement without a strike appeared slim. But both insisted their positions were flexible.

The top officers of the union met early Sunday at the Chrysler bargaining site in a strategy session before talks were scheduled to resume with negotiators for Chrysler and GM.

GM department director Irving Bluestone later returned to GM headquarters where he was expected to discuss a revised and lower-union wage demand made Saturday.

The pace of negotiations on Sunday - within hours of the 12:01 a.m. Tuesday strike deadline was slower than anticipated.

Important settlements have been reached on the local level at more than 20 Ford plants including several key assembly facilities.

Only half a dozen such local settlements-involving no assembly have been reached at Chrysler and none at GM. Local level working agreements supplement the national contract.

Woodcock has said that if either Chrysler or GM or both is struck nationally the men will not return to their jobs until all local issues are settled. Among the local issues are controversy over the amount of time a man is allowed to spend washing up assembly line speed and ventilation.

If a strike is called at GM, nearly 340,000 UAW members would be involved. A Chrysler walkout would affect some 115,000.

Seven facilities at Chrysler and 27 at GM would not be struck, the union said, because they supply key parts to other auto makers and their closing could shut down the entire industry.

The union disclosed late Saturday that it had lowered its demand for an average first year pay hike from $1 an hour to 63 cents. However, GM's Bramblett said 63 cents was still too much and added that the two sides were still "far, far apart." Chrysler officials had no comment on the latest union proposal.

The two companies have offered a first year wage increase averaging 38 cents an hour. The current average hourly wage among Big Three union members is $4.02 and the company estimate fringe benefits are worth another $1.75. No price tag has been offered on either the union or company fringe benefit proposals.

Goldberg Hints At Rockefeller Deal

NEW YORK (AP) - Arthur J. Goldberg, Democratic candidate for governor, elaborated Sunday on his contention that there is an alliance between Republican Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller and James Buckley, the Conservative party candidate for the U. S. Senate.

"I wasn't present in any hotel-room when any handshake took place," Goldberg said in a television interview but something has happened. The Republican governor controls the state party machinery.

"He has been very absent and silent when his leaders through out the state are supporting Mr. Buckley. I'm a lawyer, and in law you create circumstantial evidence along with direct evidence."

A number of upstate GOP committeeman and one congressional candidate have endorsed Buckley over the Republican Sen. Charles E. Goodell, who was appointed in 1968 by Rockefeller to succeed the late Robert F. Kennedy's and now seeks a full term.

Rockefeller has endorsed Goodell and Buckley has endorsed the conservative party's candidate for governor, Paul Adams.

Goldberg, however, called Adams a "token candidate" and said he thought Rockefeller is "going to the right."

"He thinks the American people are going to the right. I don't think so," Goldberg said.

When asked if he was going to the left, Goldberg replied: "I have never been to the left. But I have been a progressive all my life."

When an interviewer noted that he was wearing an American flag-lapel button, Goldberg said he had started wearing it a few days ago because Conservatives had started wearing them. "I don't yield my patriotism to any Conservative candidate," Goldberg said.

Buckley uses the flag on his political literature.

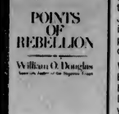
Kennedy Says Campus No Place For Violence

BOSTON (AP) - Sen. Edward M. Kennedy said Sunday night there is no room for violence at the nation's colleges and "apostles of force and destruction on campus...are producing fear and outrage and reaction."

In a speech at Boston University inaugurating the new academic year's Distinguished Lecture Series at the univeristy, Kennedy said, "Turmoil on the campus lends itself to the wildest and basest forms of political rhetoric.

The kind of demagoguery we hear from our vice president and others provides a thick smoke screen behind which some elements in our society can hide what they themselves are really doing to this nation.

"For those who pander to public emotion and perplexity at events on campus are also those who allow the war to continue, and who disorder our national priorities so that we invest in SST's and ABM's instead of teachers and health care for our sick.



"And so, in large party because mainstream America is preoccupied with concern about the campus, we all suffer.

Guns on Campus

The University took half a step toward ending the long standing "guns on campus" controversy this fall by declaring that no students can keep firearms on campus. But the administration did not take the key step toward making this an "un-armed" community; they did not take guns away from the campus police.

Several campaigns against armed campus police have been run, off and on, for the past two years, and several "resolutions" have passed the Student Senate, calling for the immediate disarming of police. But, as so often happens to Student Senate resolutions, they were ignored.

This year, Chancellor Tippo banned the storage of any guns on campus, but allowed that the campus police should be able to continue to use fire arms in their daily duties.

All of this seems odd. One wonders what every day duties the campus police perform which makes wearing guns a necessity. Certainly guarding the door to Campus Center dances and setting up speed traps on University Drive are not duties which cannot be carried on without guns.

There are, of course, instances when the campus police would need guns, such as an armed robbery in the Student Union. But most situations in which the campus police find themselves, ranging from building occupations to students sneaking into a dining commons, can all be handled without the use of guns.

But more importantly, very sight of of a campus policeman, armed, walking around campus, is undesirable, and can only lead to increasing tensions on campus.

A great number of students believe that they should be protected from the campus police, and that the existence of an armed campus police force is a threat to them. This feeling could be easily ended by disarming the campus police, or by allowing them to keep guns only in the police station, but preventing them from carrying firearms while performing their "everyday duties."

What We Owe Joe

Enter here the humble, middle class living room of one humble, middle aged man who we'll call Joe. Joe is snoozing now in his smooth, almost comfortable leatherette covered lounge chair, so we'll not disturb him.

Joe, like maybe a quarter of his social-economic class, keeps himself informed on a daily basis. But today, things were a little different.

Joe read only the first two and a half pages of the rumpled morning N. Y. Times. And he just now before relapsing, cut Walter Cronkite off after giving the reporter only 15 some odd minutes to come up with some less than tragic news.

Joe is sleeping soundly now, his snores barely penetrating his dreary room of life or living room. But Joe will enjoy moments of sound sleep this evening, because he has discovered something about himself, something that he has been evolving into for the past couple of years. For tonight Joe has discovered the fact that he is afraid.

But, Joe's latest discovery hasn't seemed to have disturbed his slumber as of yet, so let's feel ourselves safe to linger and probe our unconcious host a little longer.

Joe is what most snobbish, liberal, educated people would call your average Joe American. He lives in the close-in suburbs, has a wife and two grown kids, and he has a white collar job with a not quite removed blue tint.

Joe reads a lot, tries to keep himself informed. But today Joe decided all of a sudden to stop. He feels now that he knows too much, and he's scared.

Joe's favorite year was 1960, the year that all Americans were supposedly full of hope and promise all riding on the shoulders of a young, handsome Catholic Christ image. But unlike many, Joe retained most of this hope and promise in and for America, even after those strong young shoulders were swept out from under him.

But, it has taken till now for America to defeat Joe, and we must give him credit for forbearance, if for nothing else.

We must keep in mind that Joe was not defeated by any single incident, but by a combination of single, unrelated incidents that have, all totaled, torn Joe's very soul apart.

Yes, Joe is a scared man, but even more than scared, Joe is tired, deathly tired. He is tired of war, racism, radicalism, of a president that packages and sells his foreign and domestic policies like a reconditioned Edsel, and of a vice president whose character and methods resemble all too closely that of a man whom he had marched half way across Europe to defeat close to thirty years ago.

Well, we had better leave Joe now for he is beginning to experience the first episode of what he will inevitable be experiencing for the rest of his life---insomnia. We should leave, because now we know that Joe isn't important to us any more.?! Our efforts have to be concentrated now on those persons who are not scared and tired, but who are scared and activated, for they are the dangerous ones-the destroyers. And, as for Joe, just mark him down as another in that growing group of Forgotten Americans.

Joe is forgotten now, because he himself is trying desperately to forget--to forget the past, to keep out the present, and to never know the future.

Joe has lived a life in service to America as a soldier, a taxpayer, and as a government servant, and now he is tired and scared. And it is to this man, this former liberal Democrat turned conservative Republican, this man who, as the perverbial monkey statue, sees, hears, and has never spoken evil; it is to this man that we, his children, owe an America that he can once again, if he dares, carefully place his hope and promise in, and not again come up a loser.

OPEN LETTER TO THE CHAIRMAN, FACULTY SENATE COMMITTEE ON COMMITTEES:

One is intrigued by the process of logic which resulted in the appointment to the 1970 Student Communications Board of an assistant professor of Hotel and Restaurant Management and an associate professor of Business Administration.

The appointments are all the more interesting because there are UMass faculty available with international reputations in the area of the campus press.

OPEN LETTER - 3 TO THE CHANCELLOR:

What ever happened to the 60-page report submitted to you by an 11-man committee which studied the future of education in the mass communication media at UMass?

The study took a year and involved some high-powered people, including a highly-paid consultant from UOregon.

The silence is golden.

PETER PASCARELLI

Boys Will Be Boys

It's the first weekend of a new semester, and in the last four years they haven't been noted for very much excitement. That first weekend seems to be one of priming for chauvinist onslaughts upon UMass' women, or seeing how blatantly obnoxious you can be drinking in the Southwest Mall.

Last Saturday was no exception. Southwest was filled with the usual cadre of beer-swilling high school extension children, who were getting thrills at such entertainment as throwing bottles or making clumsy attempts upon passing coeds.

After four years, you'd think this place would change, and on the surface, of course, it has. . There are ugly new buildings, ugly (and not so ugly) new people, new interests, new activism (however infantile), etc., etc. But the concrete-performances of that always awful first Saturday, reinforces the belief that good old Umie hasn't changed a helluva lot.

Except for some longer hair, and those unlivable towers, it could have been 1955 all over again. The cultural revolution still has a long way to go. The broken bottles and cans, some humiliated girls, a noisy sleepless night for most on-campus residents are graphic proof that Woodstock Nation wasn't built in a day.

Actually, this writer was sort of smug this year on that first Saturday. He lived off-campus and kept telling himself that he would leave this noisy menagerie and return to the peace and quiet of the hovel that he calls home and Amherst landlords call a "deluxe apartment".

But, alas, it is just the same. The night wasn't bad but at around 9:30 on Sunday morning a strange sound arose over the area. At first it sounded like a Campfire Girl Easter egg hunt, but after rubbing the interrupted sleep from your eyes, behold, Sorority Rush.

And again it is 1955, with gaily dressed cheerleaders singing about the merits of such and such, while their targets are led dutifully around trying to decide which sang the best and which were the coolest.

A fine time was had by all, except for any resident trying to sleep, and anyone who really has no interest in a full throated rendition of the Alpha Chi theme song, sung with 55 piece harmony to the background of clapping hands.

Traditions are traditions, but this is a little too much.

There oughta be a law against the first weekend. Maybe classes should be scheduled. Anything is better than what went on Saturday.

Life at the University

A Place to Gather, A Person to Guide

by BRIAN WHITE
Staff Reporter

About 97 percent of us were taught to look to religion for our values. A large proportion of us continue to look for meaning in life in religious terms; others, although not theistic, find religious services worthwhile on human terms.

The Newman Center represents much of what religion has to offer. Founded April 1, 1963, as a Catholic cultural center, it is a pioneer project. Few campuses have anything to compare with it physically. A million-dollar investment, it is an object of controversy among churchmen: some think it a white elephant, too wild, too expensive, while many think the investment justified.

The Center was designed to meet the religious and human needs of Catholics. It functions as a focus for cultural activities, a location for services and as a place for Catholics to meet other Catholics.

Besides providing facilities for Mass and confession, the Center provides counseling services, classrooms and intellectual programs. A lounge where people could meet each other and share music is to be built. There is a pool room, and a snackbar--the Center tries to keep its prices low, whatever the difficulties.

Five men reside in the Newman Center--not enough staff for its needs. In theory, the Center is self-contained, providing spiritually, mentally and physically for the men who live there.

Rev. J. Joseph Quigley, Chaplain for UMass and Amherst College, has been with the Newman Center since it was founded. He was a corporal in the U. S. Army, is active in many organizations, including: member, National Newman Chaplains Association; Senator, Diocese of Springfield, Mass.; President of the World Fathers Association; Chairman, Amherst Town Committee for International Students; President-elect, Western Mass Branch of the National Academy of Religion and Mental Health; Treasurer, Operation Friendship (Migrant Workers) for the Pioneer Valley; Director of the Amherst Kiwanis; Chaplain of American Legion Post #148, Amherst.

Father Quigley's office is full of small things with words on them. "An Irish Toast: May you be in Heaven before the Devil knows you're dead," reads a plaque on his desk. There is a poster: "Whoever makes himself bigger, freer, and more human in his own existence is doing his part towards peace." Somewhere there is a cartoon of Linus, from 'Peanuts': "Neatness is man's greatest fallacy." On the wall is a crucifix.

Father Quigley is intelligent, intense, down-to-earth. He is especially concerned with the breakdown of family roles as a disturbing influence on the development of the individual.

He sees the mother's role as being a disciplinarian in a simple way -- in the time of its greatest influence, not demanding much in the way of independent thought of the child. The father should become dominant after about age thirteen -- exerting a positive influence, expecting self-reliance, giving support.

In our society, Father Quigley believes the majority of institutions are too often mother-like when the individual should no longer be faced with such a relationship. (When -- as is now common -- the family is small and badly unified, such influences become more important.) Father Quigley intends to give substance to the role he is expected to fill--that of spiritual father.

This is reflected in his sermons. Whereas religious services too often seem to try to take responsibility away from the individual -- MAN is evil, MAN must atone for his sins -- Father Quigley places an emphasis on what each person must do, for his own good as well as others'. Father Quigley himself seems to be a very tough man, although he does not lack sensitivity; he encourages this resilience of character in others.

Father Quigley has qualities which go beyond doctrine------ religious or sociological. Whether or not one accepts what he believes regarding God or the family is not really that important. He affirms life, and one can always learn something from that.

Computer Aids Inventorying Of Campus Center Equipment

UMass is breaking new ground in the computer field this fall as it furnishes and equips the new Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center.

The mountain of paperwork involved in ordering and installing over $1 million in equipment has been turned over to the computer. The system is called PECAM--Program for Equipment Control and Management--and is the work of George R. Conrade, computer specialist in the UMass department of hotel and restaurant administration, and Donald E. Lacombe, equipment control manager for the Campus Center.

In its equipment control job, the computer steps in after the standard bidding procedure has been followed and a purchase order has been issued. Into the computer goes such information as number of items, in the order, description, unit price and unit definition. "This information goes on tape and serves as a due-in record," Conrade explained.

When the item is delivered a new set of facts goes into the computer--such things as warranty information, maintenance agreements, date of delivery, location and others. The computer also prints out labels for attaching to the delivered items.

At the end of each week, these temporary tapes are "dumped" onto permanent discs or tapes. The total number of items is probably around 10,000, Conrade estimates. The total is divided into accountable, installed and expendable categories, the first being the most critical as far as paperwork goes.

The accountable equipment is divided into 13 classes--furniture, food service, store, audio-visual, tools and so on, including an unclassified category for works of art, antiques and other miscellany.

The system uses the CDC 3600 of the UMass Research Computing Center via a keyboard at the Lincoln Center. This keyboard gives direct and rapid access to the computer for such input as the updating, correcting and adding of items and for output than can be printed out in a choice of ways.

It is in the output that the system proves itself, according to Conrade. It can print out a list of equipment by area, for example, or by class, by stock number or alphabetically. "We can take what amounts to an instan inventory at any time with this system," Conrade said.

The system has two major advantages, he added. One is the elimination of much paperwork and the other is that it provides management with ready information. "If you want to know how much it cost to furnish a certain room the computer can have the information for you within an hour," Conrade said.

With a little modification the system could be adapted to a number of other hotel and restaurant operations, the UMass instructor said. It could be used to reserve and assign rooms, and to systemize a number of housekeeping and maintenance schedules.

Graduate Dean, Chemistry Professor Published in Professional Journals

University of Massachusetts Graduate School Dean Mortimer H. Appley is the guest editor of a recent special issue of "American Psychologist," a journal published monthly by the American Psychological Association, Inc.

In an article entitled "The Place of Psychology in the University: Implications for Graduate Education" Dean Appley discusses the problem of reconciling the theoretical and applied branches of psychology, and suggests the need for new organizational structures within the university to accomplish these ends.

Prior to his appointment as chairman of the UMass psychology department in 1967, Dr. Appley was the Dean of the Faculty of Graduate Studies at York University, Toronto, Canada, and acting director of the Institute for Behavioural Research. In 1969 he was named Dean of the Graduate School at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

The author of many books and articles in psychology, Dr. Appley received his bachelor's degree from the City College of New york, his M.A. from the University of Denver, and his Ph.D. from the University of Michigan.

"How Do Plastics Stretch?" is the title of an article published by chemistry professor Richard S. Stein of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

The article appeared in the August issue of "The Chemist," the official publication of the American Institute of Chemists.

Prof. Stein, who is the head of the UMass Polymer Research Institute, is active in the study of the breakdown of polymers which has revealed that the long molecules of polymers may be stretched as much as ten-fold before breaking.

Last year Prof. Stein received the International Award in Plastics Science and Engineering from the Society of Plastics Engineers. He holds a B.S. degree from the Polytechnic Institute of Brooklyn, and a Ph.D degree from Princeton.

Editor Appointed Lecturer At School of Education

Peter Schrag, editor of Change magazine and editor-at-large of the Saturday Review, has been appointed a visiting lecturer at the School of Education at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Mr. Schrag has written extensively on the subject of American education and is considered by many to be a leading spokesman in this area. He is the author of "Voices in the Classroom" and "Village School Downtown," which are concerned with the way schools are presently responding to the educational needs of American society.

A 1953 cum laude graduate of Amherst College, he has worked as a newspaper reporter and as assistant secretary, assistant publications director, and instructor in American studies at Amherst College. He has also been associate education editor and executive editor of the Saturday Review.

Earl Seidman, assistant dean for academic affairs at the School of Education, called Schrag "an outstanding commentator on American society who is concerned with the changing social fabric and the ability of schools to meet these changing needs."

Auto Registration Deadline Removed

Motor Vehicles Registrar Richard E. McLaughlin announced that the Registry is eliminating the usual deadline dates by which registration renewal applications must be received at the Registry.

Formerly, the reserved 4 digit numberplate renewal applications had to be received by September 30 and all other reserved annual basis registrations, including "vanity plates" were required to be in by October 15. These deadlines are eliminated for the current year by the Registrar's action.

McLaughlin said, "Governor Sargent suggested this action because of the large number of motorists who are not yet sure that their insurance will be renewed for 1971 in time to meet the customary closing dates. We both feel confident that these renewal problems will have been resolved well in advance of December 31, but, meantime, there is no point in trying to maintain administrative schedules which are, in the circumstances, quite impracticable."

McLaughlin pointed out that the new staggered system of registrations which began in January, 1970 is proving to be tremendously helpful in reducing the impact of the insurance renewal problem.

Influence of Artists On Each Other Examined

The question of how modern painters influence each other is one focus of a new book by UMass art historian Mark Roskill.

He examines this in part through the famed two months that the impressionist painters Van Gogh and Gauguin spent at Arles in 1888, at the end of which Van Gogh had a mental breakdown and cut off his ear.

The book is "Van Gogh, Gauguin and the Impressionist Circle," with 206 illustrations, and published by the New York Graphic Society. According to the author, the book is meant as "a contribution to the running debate today...as to what the term 'influence' implies: what artists get out of personal contact with one another, and how far the late 19th and 20th century situation differs in this respect from the patterns of earlier periods."

Dr. Roskill's detailed examination of Van Gogh and Gauguin at Arles is the basis for a fresh look at the whole question of how artists affect one another and need one another, he explained. The volume also examines what happened to impressionism after 1880, the period's use of Japanese prints as a source of ideas and how symbolism developed during the period.

The author is an associate professor who teaches modern art history at UMass and has been a faculty member at Princeton and Harvard Universities. He traveled extensively in Europe preparing the book, written with support of an American Council of Learned Societies Fellowship. Previously, he edited and wrote the introduction for "Letters of Vincent Van Gogh," and is the author of many articles of modern art.

UMass Gridmen Scrimmage Cornell, Bowing 21-7

Defense Copes With Marinaro; Passing Needs Zip Before Maine

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

While most UMass campus persons were completing their first day of classes on Friday after season by scrimmaging Cornell University, an Ivy League toughie from Ithaca, N. Y., in an event that got under way at 2:30 p.m.

Unlike most scrimmages, where there are no kickoffs or field goals and touchdowns are only worth one point, this one took on all the characteristics of a regular-season game. UMass lost this one, 21-7, There were kickoffs, there was a field goal attempt and each touchdown was worth its full six points.

It served as a good test for the Redmen, particularly for their defense, which had to cope with one Ed Marinaro. Marinaro is a junior who, in his sophomore season, ranked second in the nation in yards gained rushing. A guy named Steve Owens was first.

Marinaro plied up 1409 yards on the ground in nine contests for Cornell last fall. Owens played one more game than Marinaro; his yardage total was 1523.

This guy Marinaro carries the pigskin at least 30 times a game. When he carries it, he runs with reckless abandon. So, from the outset, the UMass defense knew what its job was and did it as well as can be expected.

Although Marinaro picked up 48 yards in ten carries on Cornell's initial drive, a band of sturdy Redmen stopped him twice inside their own ten-yard line, forcing Cornell's fine quarterback, Dick Furbush, to go up the middle on a sneak for the first visitor score.

The defense tightened up for a while, giving the offense time and space to get untracked. It didn't untrack itself very well, and went scoreless for the rest of the half. In spurts, it looked fine, but those spurts usually came along the ground.

Senior Pat Scavone reeled off a couple of sizable gains. Angelo DiNardo found a hole once and sped for 23 yards, shortly after which, a Redman scoring threat went by the boards as a Denis Gagnon field goal attempt of 31 yards had the legs but wasn't on target.

UMass started a backfield of Scavone and Mike Sawyer at halfbacks, Dick Heavey at fullback and Ken Hughes at quarterback. Five minutes into the second quarter, a new set of backfielders came in; Art Corsaletti in place of Scavone, Dick Cummings for Heavey and Mike Marchev for Hughes.

This offense stalled and punted. The Redman defense entered the fray again and, in short time, was befuddled by a 73-yard gallop by Furbush who took the ball on a rollout and just kept right on rolling.

Hughes re-entered the tilt, and the rest of the half gave one an opportunity of watching Corsaletti and Cummings do some fine running. At one point, UMass was faced with a third-down-and-three situation. Cummings took the ball and was virtually snubbed after advancing one yard only to push and push and push again until he could go no further. He got the first down.

The defense played very steady ball for the remainder of the affair, and the offense looked better in the second half. Some fine outside maneuvering by Scavone on a sweep produced a thirty-yard gain for the Redmen early in the third period.

With the second half kickoff, the UMass attack was able to advance the ball all the way down to the Cornell eight wheter it missed a first down by a nose and had to give up the ball. In spite of Marinaro and Furbush, the Redman defense got the ball back for its offensive cohorts, setting up the solo home team score.

A fine catch inside the ten by end John Hulecki set up the tally, which came on a one-yard plunge by Sawyer. 14-7. The next score was Cornell's but it was nullified by a penalty. Furbush lofted a beautiful aerial into the waiting arms of a lone receiver-Frank Daniel-who crossed the goal line trailed by 21 players, a couple of officials and one penalty flag.

The rest of the play-by-play was back-and-forth, Cornell got seven more points on a three-yard jaunt by, guess who, Furbush; UMass got none.

SCRIMMAGE SIZZLERS-Though the Redmen lost, it was generally agreed that the experience was a worthwhile one..The offense, particularly the passing game, needs more spark before Saturday's opener against Maine (Sept. 19)...Barring any lapses that caused Furbush's 73-yard romp and the bomb to Daniel, the defense should fair well...Marinaro, who waas taken out of the tilt with 4:23 showing on the fourth-quarter clock, was physically done in, after having lugged that thing 36 times for 196 yards...Furbush, who excels on the rollout, picked up 142 yards rushing in 18 attempts...These two guys together carried Cornell's mail 54 times and they got their message across.. However, only two other Cornell guys ran with the ball and each of them took but one turn....Scavone, in seven rushing tries gained 50 yards...Cummings got 46 yards in 13 goes and DiNardo got 40 in four...It was a closed scrimmage per request of the opposing coach... UMass captain John Farrelly was the center of attention for the few who were there when he walked to midfield for the coin-toss displaying his Redman haircut... UMass employed four quarterbacks, Hughes, Marchev, Tom Holmes and Len Matuza, which is more than can be said of Cornell, whose season starts a week later than does UMass', yet who worked the entire game with Furbush at the controls...Redman coach Vic Fusia, playing this thing as a testing ground for the upcoming campaign, used various backfield combos and wasn't hesistant to give another quarterback a chance, even though the team was behind and the season is only a week away...Hughes completed four of his six passes for 26 yards, Marchev was one for four, Matuza was one for three, but showed fine passing style, while Holmes didn't throw...What more need be said about a scrimmage; all those empty seats can bore one very easily, especially when he is reminded again that Friday was also the first day of classes...Two of UMass opponents for 1970 opened their seasons on Saturday, Sept. 12...One, of course was Holy Cross, which gamely bowed to a tough Army team, 26-0...Mistakes make the score one-sided than it may appear...Another foe, Buffalo, also dropped its opener, 14-7, to Ball State.

PREPPING FOR THE SEASON'S OPENER - Pat Scavone, UMass halfback, carries the ball for the Redmen as they entertained Cornell in a pre-season scrimmage Friday afternoon as one of their important preparations before 1970's opener, Sept 19 at home against Maine. Trailing the play is guard Bob Pena.

Attorney Will Give Advice To Students

By DENNIS DESMOND
Staff Reporter

In an effort to provide UMass students and student organizations with legal advice not connected with the Administration or faculty, the Student Senate recently hired Attorney Richard Howland to serve as "resident councel".

Howland, a graduate of Amherst College and the Columbia School of Law will provide assistance to any undergraduate student group or individual with a legal problem.

The Student Senate has commissioned Howland to initiate legal action on behalf of students and will recommend to students requesting "in court assistance" competent legal counsel.

Any student requiring advice on a legal matter, be it civil or criminal, campus related or not, may make an appointment to confer with Howland.

Howland noted that the legal service his position will offer is unique at this University in that his office is in no way related to the University faculty or administration.

Students wishing to contact Howland may call 545-0341 or may come in person to Room 111 in the Campus Center (near the R.S.O. offices) or, at night and on weekends people needing help can call 549-6817.

Jury Views Kent State

RAVENA, Ohio (AP) - A special grand jury convened Monday and viewed the Kent State University campus where four students died May 4 in a confrontation with National Guardsmen.

Twelve men and three women, mostly middle aged Portage County residents, were selected Monday to serve on the jury. Headed by Ravenna insurance man Robert Hastings, 50, as foreman, it is to start hearing testimony Tuesday from the first of more than 260 witnesses.

Gov. James A. Rhodes had ordered the grand jury probe.

Robert L. Balyeat, chief counsel for the senate, said the investigation probably would take about four weeks.

Balyeat, his assistants, and Ohio Atty. Gen. Paul Brown accompanied jurors on their trip from Ravenna, the Portage County seat, to Kent, six miles away.

Jurors spent about 20 minutes on the campus, some fingering an apparent bullet hole in a statue which stood between troops and students when the May 4 shootings took place.

The jury was sworn to secrecy Monday under tight security regulations imposed by Common Pleas Judge Edwin W. Jones. Jones ordered jurors, witnesses, court officials and attorneys connected with the case not to discuss it with newsmen. He also banned news photographers from taking any pictures of witnesses or jurors.

Kent State President Robert I. White and Ohio Adj. Gen. Sylvester T. Del Corse, commander of Ohio's National Guard forces, are among those subpoenaed to testify.

Others included at least 102 students, 20 Ohio National Guardsmen, 25 police and fire men and eight professors.

Evidence to be presented to the jury includes a 10,000 page report by FBI agents who investigated the violence, which followed an antiwar rally May 1 and the burning of an ROTC building on campus May 2.

A Justice Department summary of the FBI report is alleged to have named six National Guardsmen who could be criminally charged.

Fighting Closes Bogalusa Schools

BOGALUSA, La. AP - Authorities closed all schools in Bogalusa on Monday after fighting broke out between white and Negro pupils at one of the high schools.

City Schools Supt. M.J. Israel said the schools would be closed "until further notice."

Police and Washington Parish sheriff's deputies used tear gas to break up the fights at scattered spots on the sprawling campus of Bogalusa High School West, where about 1,100 pupils are enrolled.

The Bogalusa public safety commissioner, Elmer Smith, asked for additional state troopers to help keep order, but there was no word immediately on whether the request would be granted.

More than 5,000 students are enrolled at the city's two high schools, a junior high and eight elementary schools.

The fights Monday represented the first major campus violence at Bogalusa schools this year. However, authorities said pupils fought at the high school stadium during the season's first two football games.

All Bogalusa schools were closed early last spring after fights at the East and West high schools.

The city schools were totally desegregated at the start of the 1969-70 term under federal court orders.

Bogalusa West, formerly an all white school, is for pupils in grades 10, 11 and 12. Bogalusa East, formerly an all Negro school, is for ninth grade pupils only.

A sheriff's spokesman said there apparently were no arrests or serious injuries.

Robert Hicks, a local black leader, said he thought the campus fights stemmed from the black-white violence at the school football games.

Man Flies Many Flags, Not Just One

NEW YORK (AP) - Everyday when the weather is fair Robert Cathcart gets up at sunrise and raises the flag-not only the U.S. flag, but also the flag of whatever country or state happens to be in the news that day.

"I'm known as the flag man," says Cathcart who has several hundred flags, including those of "all the states except Rhode Island" and "all the important countries except Brazil, Spain and Nationalist China." He doesn't have a Red Chinese flag either, but he says he doesn't want one.

Cathcart began collecting flags in 1945. "I bought two bales of colored rags-I was in the painting business then-and I discovered they were residue of a fire in a flag store," he explained.

"You can't take a foreign flag and wipe up paint with it, so I built a 40 foot flag pole and started flying 'em."

The 40 foot pole in the front yard of the Cathcarts' Queens home since has been replaced by two staffs-one 50 feet tall, the other 70 feet.

The U. S. flag always is flown on the taller pole. Cathcart selects a flag for the other pole based on books of flag etiquette and news of the various countries and states.

Cathcart, president of New York Artcrafts Inc., estimates he has spent between $3,000 and $4,000 on flags. He purchased many of them at an auction following the New York World's Fair. He got all the state flags from the Fair except Rhode Island's, which had disappeared before he got there.

Cathcart said he doesn't know exactly how many flags he has -"I've never taken a census"- but his wife estimates there are between 300 and 400.

Are there any complaints?

Yes, said Cathcart. The neighbors complain the screeching of the flagpole pulleys wakes them up.

Rally Leader Claims Key Will Attend

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Rev. Carl McIntire said Monday Nguyen Cao Ky will attend the March for Victory rally in Washington and predicted the South Vietnamese vice president "will out-Agnew Agnew."

McIntire, speaking at a Washington news conference after a 45 minute visit with Ky in Saigon over the weekend said, "He has accepted our invitation" and he has never altered his opinion despite speculation to the contrary.

McIntire deplored what he said were attempts-he did not elaborate-by the White House and State Department to keep Ky away from the rally.

Meanwhile, McIntire said the Oct. 3 march and rally at the Washington Monument will be "a great gathering of the hawks. We're going to take out after the dogs." He did not elaborate this point.

McIntire said he favored a big push in Vietnam by U.S. and Vietnamese forces using everything short of nuclear weapons to achieve victory in eight weeks. Asked about the figure of eight weeks, McIntire said he was an ideologist and not a military man, but that the figure was given him by a South Vietnamese senator.

Ky will arrive in Washington Oct. 1, McIntire said, with his wife and a party of five to eight to attend a reception that night, visit with the House Armed Services Committee the next day, and march and speak that Saturday.

McIntire said he expected half a million people to attend his rally. At an earlier rally McIntire estimated that 100,000 attended compared with a police estimate of 50,000.

Trustees Meet, Wood "Full-Time President"

BRIAN WHITE
Staff Reporter

Boston-The UMass Board of Trustees met yesterday at the Statler Hilton Hotel in Boston for the regular monthly meeting.

President Robert Wood noted in his preliminary remarks that "UMass now had a full-time president"; Henry C. Lodge Jr. had been appointed to Chair the M. B. TA. Continuing his humorous remarks, Wood quipped that at the rate University presidents in Massachusetts were retiring, he might soon become the senior University President in the State.

The Board voted on these matters:

TRANSFER OF UNIVERSITY AND LINCOLN APARTMENTS TO THE UNIVERSITY AND ESTABLISHMENT OF RENT RATES.

Having consulted with the Married Students' Housing Committee, the Board voted two rent increases, of no more than $15-20 for Lincoln and University Apartments. The Board and the Housing Committee agreed that the Apartments should be self-liquidating, and increasing costs (including a 6% labor cost increase) dictate a rent hike. There will be two rent increases, on Nov. 1, 1970, and Sept. 1, 1971. The percentage of students in the Apartments will be increased to about 95%, the rest of the space to be occupied by visiting faculty.

THE CAMPUS CENTER PROPOSAL.

The Top of the Campus, Inc., will be permitted to sell liquor in the Campus Center.

While the Board was on the subject of the Campus Center, Trustee Shaler asked the Manager of the Center, Mr. Warren Grinnan, about the attitude of the students towards the Center. Trustee Shaler noted that students feel they are paying for a facility which they really cannot use, citing the Center's hotel rooms, its expensive restaurant, and its sale of liquor. He added that students are depressed by the size and impersonality of the Center, and feel excluded from its control.

Mr. Grinnan replied that the Center's garage, cafeteria, and hotel rooms are self-liquidating, and that the University has contributed $250,000 towards the maintenance of the rest of the Center: the students are not really paying for everything. He said that the Student Union Governance Board had been consulted all along, although he admitted that students were deliberately excluded from the running of the Top of the Campus, since continuity of government was desired, and since no one owning stock in liquor companies would be allowed control. ("Not too many students own liquor stock," Trustee Shaler observed.")

The Board of Trustees further voted to keep the Student Union and Campus Center separate, self-liquidating, entities, and separate fees will be charged for their use.

THE 1972 OPERATING BUDGET REQUEST.

The Board announced that the budget for 1972 will be cut nine million dollars because of a cut in transportation funds for Columbia Point.

It was noted that the University of Massachusetts faces almost unparalleled growth, comparable to the largest of state systems, such as California, Michigan, New York. The University faces a major system-wide management problem.

A System Office will be crested; it is not intended to be a "super-organization" or another organizing arm of the University. The System Office positions already had been authorized for individual campuses.

TRAVEL FEES.

The Board approved the increase of travel allowances from 8¢ to 10¢ per mile, revising University standards up to state standards.

THE COLUMBIA POINT ACTION COALITION.

The Board declined to move on the Student Senate Constitution.

Government Dept. Adapts "Princeton Plan" to UMass

By DAVID D. WILLIAMS
Issue Editor

To help student involvement in this year's election become a more meaningful and useful experience, the Department of Government has set up what it terms a project, "Elections '70."

The purpose of the program will be to acquaint all interested students with the possibilities for volunteer activity in the current election campaigns, and to provide them with some background which should make their involvement more useful.

The program came about as a result of faculty and Trustee meetings concerning the Princeton Plan. Originally, the plan calls for a two-week suspension of classes before the November elections so that students could campaign for candidates.

In a meeting last May, the Faculty Senate voted for an eight day recess but this plan was vetoed by the Trustees. The Trustees voted to have no recess but to leave the matter to the discretion of the individual faculty members. It was urged that no papers or tests be assigned or given during this period.

This compromise was sanctioned by President Wood and the official stand of the University is that the University has an obligation to "work to assure the effective functioning of the election process."

Various members of the Government Department found time hanging heavy on their hands this summer so they got together and "Election '70" was hatched.

The basic aim of the program is to make it easier for students to help the candidates. What is happening now is that letters are being sent to all candidates in a contested race in the state. This includes governor, lieutenant governor, attorney general, all state senators and all members of the House. The letters simply asks if each candidate is interested in having student help. When all reports are in, hopefully by the 29th of this month, all one has to do to find out if any particular candidate wants student help will be to go to the information clearinghouse that will be set up. The people there will know how one can get into contact with the candidates.

There will also be a series of workshops held on Tuesday nights starting the 29th of September and running through to Election Day.

The first of these Tuesday night meetings will deal with Election '70 and the major races in the states and how they will influence the nation.

On Election Night itself, the Department is sponsoring an "Election Night Coffee-Hour." A TV will be set up in the Student Union Lobby and refreshments will be served.

Also in the works are plans to get some of the people running for office in Massachusetts to visit the campus.

On Monday, November 9, Professor David Maynew of Yale University will chair a post-mortem on the results of the elections nationally.

Details on the first Tuesday meeting will be announced in these pages when final arrangements are made. For the time being, anyone interested in helping "Election '70" should contact John Howe in Thompson Tower, room 408.

Court Halts Rail Strike, UAW Walks Out

DETROIT (AP) - The United Auto Workers struck auto industry giant General Motors Corp. just after midnight Monday as negotiations for a new three year labor agreement ground to a halt.

Thousands of workers at GM plants in the Midwest, East and Canada walked off their jobs at 12:01 a.m. EDT, joining thousands of others who had jumped the gun with wildcat walkouts earlier in the day.

Company and union bargainers in Detroit, an hour behind the East Coast had planned to meet up until midnight.

Close to 344,000 workers at GM plants in 31 states and two Canadian provinces are involved in the strike, aimed at choking off all auto production by the world's largest industrial corporation.

The UAW left 72,750 of its members working at 27 GM plants supplying parts to Ford Motor Co., Chrysler Corp. and American Motors.

Three year contracts covering 713,000 Big Three Workers expired at midnight, but the UAW chose only GM to strike. Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. were granted immunity at least temporarily.

The two sides were at least 25 cents hourly apart on a proposed first year wage increase in a new three year pact. The disputed figure would cost GM an additional $216.3 million for its 416,000 U.S. and Canadian employes.

Both parties were widely divided on whether to remove the ceiling on the cost of living wage escalater and on voluntary retirement after 30 years of service, regardless of age.

GM was selected Sunday as the union's target for winning a pattern setting agreement for the Big Three automakers. Chrysler Corp. was removed as one of the twin strike targets Sunday and Ford Motor Co. was given strike immunity two weeks ago.

Restraining Order Issued, Strike Averted

WASHINGTON (AP) - A federal judge issued a temporary restraining order early Tuesday blocking a strike by four unions against three railroads just as picket lines were ordered.

The order was issued by Judge Howard F. Corcoran, in Washington. The order will be in effect until 1:45 p.m. Sept. 23.

Corcoran issued the order - barring "whipsaw" or selective strikes - after a brief hearing requested by lawyers for the railroads. He scheduled another hearing Sept. 22.

The judge acted less than an hour after the unions called the strike and just 30 minutes after members of the United Transportation Union picketed the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad at Huntington, W. Va.

President C. L. Dennis of the AFL CIO Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, said the strike was planned against the Soouthern Pacific and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, in addition to the C & O.

U Thant Urges Action on Mid-East

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) - Secretary General U Thant challenged the United States and the Soviet Union Nonday to take joint positive action in what he said could be a last chance to head off a new Middle East war.

Thant said it was of decisive importance that the two super powers, butressed by Britain and France, prevent failure of the Israeli Arab peace talks under U. N. special envoy Gunnar V. Jarring.

In an assessment of the big power role in the United Nations, he declared:

"This is, I firmly believe, the way the United Nations was and is intended to work on difficult and dangerous problems, and it will be a happy augury for the future if, in its 25th anniversary year, an impressive demonstration of this process could be given to the world."

He made clear that he believed the one hope for Middle East peace rested in resumption of the suspended Arab Israeli peace talks. Only then, he added, would it become clear whether Israel and the Arabs were prepared to accept compromises and take risks "which are the inescapable price for a peaceful settlement."

He said the current peace move demonstrated that the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain and France, working both within the United Nations, could provide a firm base upon which U.N. machinery can be effective.

Guerillas Hide Hostages, Warn Against Attacks

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Palestinian guerrillas in Jordan put American hostages in the same category as Israelis Monday and declared all would be detained until Israel agrees to a prisoner exchange.

The Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine also said 55 hostages remaining from last week's air hijackings had been divided into groups of three and scattered in several Jordanian hideouts.

"No one is going to see the hostages," a spokesman said in Amman. "They are dispersed, three in each place. Any attack on any of these places will endanger their lives."

In Washington, a State Department spokesman said as many as 38 of the remaining hijack victims may be American citizens, but the citizenship of only 23 had been confirmed.

There may be as many as 19 of the 38 with both Israeli and American passports, he said.

The Popular Front stiffened its negotiating position during a day of heightened tensions, all stemming from the events that began with the rash of guerrilla hijackings last week.

There were these developments.

-Israel freed 75 of 450 Arabs arrested during a mass roundup of Popular Front sympathizers over the weekend. An Arab emissary said he had relayed to Amman an Israeli warning that the remaining Arabs in custody might be executed if the hostages in Jordan were harmed.

-Radio Cairo assailed the Popular Front's activities, saying, "Egypt will not allow a Palestinian maverick group to jeopardize the peace seeking efforts of the Arabs and justify Israel's demand for additional arms to be used against the Arabs."

-The Swiss government took the abandoned by the Red Cross and began trying to negotiate with the Popular Front on behalf of Britain, the United States and West Germany.

Dr. Wazi Qamhawi of Nablus in Israeli held Jordan told in Tel Aviv he carried the warning to the Popular Front over the weekend at the behest of the Jerusalem government. There was no comment from the Israeli government on Qamhawi's report.

Besides imposing the death penalty on front sympathizers in Israel, he said, the Israelis also threatened to blow up houses of guerrillas convicted by Israeli courts and to confiscate their property.

In Bern, the Swiss government announced it had instructed its ambassadors in Beirut and Cairo to negotiate with Jordan, the Popular Front and other Arab groups to seek the release of the hostages.

Charles Dubois, the Swiss envoy in Beirut, was dispatched to Amman, and Ambassador Andre Parodi sought assistance in Cairo from representatives of the Arab League.

The International Red Cross withdrew from the negotiations Sunday and recalled its mediators to Geneva. A spokesman said talks with the Popular Front were stalemated over the guerrilla insistence on retaining Jewish hostages.

But the British and U. S. governments said the Red Cross was still mediating in Jordan.

In London, informants said Britain had begun a quiet campaign to persuade Israel to trade some of the 3,000 convicted Palestinian prisoners in Israeli jails for remaining hijack hostages.

Officials said Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas Home made a personal appeal to Israeli Ambassador Michael Comay seeking the concession by Israel.

At the same time, officials said, Sir Alec assured Israel that Britain would not free Leila Khaled, a woman hijacker held in London, until the Palestinians free all hostages, including Jews.

Baghdad radio broadcast a guerrilla claim Monday that Israel was massing troops and armer along the Jordan River as a prelude for a "U. S. backed invasion to wipe out" the guerrilla movement in Jordan. Israel denied a troop buildup.

Let Them Move

The red and white lights of the campus become streamers in the pond. A warm mist rains on the swans, and on a night like this even the new Lincoln Center appears pleasant. It is so peaceful, so easy to forget (especially if you're trying to) the anguish which envelops urban America.

In the cities, there is a crisis in housing. There is a shortage of housing in Amherst. But when a housing shortage is combined with the other problems of race conflict, crime, inadequate transportation - then a problem becomes a crisis.

Not enough housing is available, and the costs of what space there is are accelerating. The federal government has instituted several programs to "aid housing." Why aren't they working?

The problem in the housing market is one of rigidities in supply. Zoning ordanances restrict the construction of rental properties. Unions have kept their memberships small and elite their wages high and rapidly rising. The cost of land and materials has been rising.

The politically dangerous decision to tackle the unions must be made, so that more workers may find employment in the building trades, and the rate of increase of wages which are already high may be slowed.

Little can be done about the costs of land. But new technologies must be brought to bear on the construction process. This is labor-saving and again the unions can be expected to offer bitter opposition.

U.S. government policy has chosen the less politically painful route. It has also complicated the problem.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development has been offering subsidies on mortgage terms for low-income home buyers. The amount of the down payment has been reduced to about $200 "If you qualify."

On the edge of changing neighborhoods, real estate offices have sprung up with signs in the windows: $200 HOUSES. SEE US FOR 235 PROGRAM.

In other words, federal policy has contributed to the demand for housing without making a real effort to add to an insufficient supply. There is more money than ever chasing housing today. Little wonder that rents have been skyrocketing, house prices jumping.

But programs to help the poor and underprivileged sound good in the newspapers back home. Ironic that such programs may have priced many poor and not-so-poor out of the market for needed housing.

Amherst will survive. So will the rest of the country. In fact, I heard someone offer the solution to all of the ills of a city dweller: "Let them move."

Grow Your Own

Good morning, people. Well, a new year is here, new experiences, new joys, new wrinkles, new sorrows. Reflecting upon the past three years here, each with it's own distinctive character, but yet all sharing a common continuity, it seems to me that we should expect this year to be no more than what it is: this chapter in whatever novel you care to place it.

I suppose that we're going to have our share of anguish on this campus this year. Things haven't changed much since the celebrations of last spring, indeed, if anything, they've gotten worse. The people in positions of power are still doing a number on those with none. The seeds of fascism have long since germinated in this country, but have not, mercifully, as of now reached full flower. The repression of verbal, artistic, and most importantly, cultural dissent has continued increasing, if anything at a more acute increment than ever before in the preceeding few years. The Asian war of Corporate genocide goes on, and on, and on, and there is still no sign of impending morality in Washington. The House of Representatives dons a hard hat and allocates money while the Senate is yet arguing semantic variations on state themes. The lumber barons are still strip-cutting the people's forests. Detroit is still producing hundreds of thousands of new eyesores each month. The Great Lakes thoroughly polluted, the army has turned to the Atlantic Ocean to conceal it's mistakes, Bill Douglas is still on the hot seat, etc., etc., etc. Compound the sum of these by the peculiar contingencies inherant in an election year. The result-unavoidable anguish to the sensitive soul. The only question that remains unanswered is that of the form this anguish will take in manifesting itself.

James Shea has committed suicide, for reasons we can only ponder. The Wizard of Oz has assumed power here in the Emerald City, with the new title of University Chancellor. Chief Blasko has hired ten new public servants, for your protection. There is a new squad of chick narcs on Campus this year, updating Eve and the apple. Seymour Shapiro has taken an obscenely ill-timed sabbatical, but our hearts understanding. Eric the Rat is occupying a psychiatrist's couch suffering from the most misunderstood and ill-recepted kind of love from everyone, save a few. And we, here, are yet subjected to the widespread and acute inadequacies of a thoroughly antequated educational system. The result is anguish, the only question being that of the form in which it will manifest itself.

This now-past summer, I had a great deal of time to reflect upon things, and to try and ascertain in just what plane the estranged calculus that is my existance was, and is, taking me. I came to the conclusion that the only way in which I could honorably regain my birthright to contribute in this organic sewer that we call modern society, was to start all over again and build something from the ground up, literally. Beginning with my own life.

I am now firmly convinced that the only way to achieve any kind of meaningful and human existance is by simply doing what comes most naturally, each one of us, every second of our lives. We all shine on. Trite? No doubt about it. But triteness alone doesn't make the sentiment any less true. In our hearts, buried beneath piles of society's refuse, we all know what is best for each of us, and our respective spheres of influence in society. No question of it. I think it's high time that we stop fooling ourselves, listen and give voice to the songs of our hearts, and start building something positive instead of hypnotically buttressing a decaying sand castle culture and life-style. Find the essence of freedom, buried in the ground. Mother Earth will swallow us, lay your garden down.

The anguish is not worth it. It really isn't. I can't take what is happening out there, beyond this styrofoam tower, seriously any longer. I can't take this tower seriously any longer. But these are, by and large, relatively trivial, and trivially relevant, institutions, just as are the flowerings of those who set down roots in their poisoned soils. If there were justice in the world, the Pentagon, in all it's austere sanity, would be a museum; a moral education in itself to the sadly limited aesthetic imagination of 20th century society. Wall Street would be a vineyard. The White House, a hospital. Fort Tippo would be a liberated ice cream stand, and the University would make the ripe, and now rotting, crop of plums and apples available to the People's Commune, instead of vulgarly wasting it. But there is precious little, if any, justice today.

So then, make flowers grow. Lay your garden down. Every flower absorbs 25 times its own weight in excess anxiety. Kissing is good for the soul and it does build up your mouth. Experience your neighbor today. When's the last time you had a good emotional experience anyway? The only way to flower, or even to survive, is to become, to truly embody yourself communally. The way God planned it. God never, ever planned what we've got today.

MUCH PEACE TO YOU,

Teacher Evaluation

The evaluation of a course by students is an idea that has been kicked and pushed around this campus for the last five years. For a short time, back in 67-68, there was a student published course critique, which died of an unknown ailment. Today, there are a number of faculty efforts into evaluations. The departments of Psych., English, Zoology, College of Agriculture, and the School of Education have working evaluations. Unfortunately, none of the information is released to students.

Last year, the Academic Affairs Committee of the Student Senate started to work on developing a University-wide Teacher-course evaluation. We felt that this campus needed it. But due to the support received last semester (1 person) I am no longer as sure.

Let me outline to you some of the work and money that must go into this project. First, it will cost each of you between $2 - $3 per year to have a published evaluation. The work will be slow during most of the year and time consuming is the rest. It will be frustrating and most of the time very non-rewarding. There will be a large amount of shit work to get done. All in all, a dirty job with, in my way of thinking, an important and necessary end.

Do you think it is worth it? Now comes the big question, what are you willing to do for it? This cannot be one person or small group's job. Everyone must support the effort. We need people who want this and who are willing to put in the time and work necessary to get it. Is it worth it to you?

(There will be an ad this week calling the first meeting.)

Throw 'em Away

To the editor

It is unfortunate that a University is acclaimed to such a significant degree by its size, its rate of expansion, and its architectural integrity. The new Campus Center typifies this superficially grandiose yet fundamentally sick approach to University living.

In the new cafeteria are those great innovations - the paper plate and the plastic spoon. Use 'em, throw 'em away, and they're gone forever - and so is a part of our life. Some trees and some land to bury the stuff.

And the bookstore - paper bags aren't really necessary. People can bring their own sacks. And the Daily Collegians scattered here and there. How about a collection station so that these papers can be recycled? Along with the paper plates and the plastic spoons. If the University can build a Campus Center, it can darn well manage it ecologically.

Respectfully,
Joseph W. Hardy

Fine Arts Building A Dream May Be Reality Soon

By BETH GOODELL
Staff Reporter

After more than five years in the planning stage, a Fine Arts Building for the University is still nothing more than an architect's blueprints and scale model and the source of financial finger-crossing. Work had originally been scheduled to begin during the past summer, but so far nothing has happened at the site on the south edge of the campus pond.

Slowdowns in completion of the planning stages gave caused the delay so far. The building is now set for a crucial step to be taken in one week--opening of contractor's bids. The University has an absolute maximum of $13.8 million to spend on the project-hopefully there will be bids within this limit.

If there is an acceptable bid inside the funded $13.8 million, the contract could then be awarded before the end of the month and construction could start sometime in October, with completion in three years.

However, if the Fine Arts Building follows the example of two current construction projects, the bids may all exceed the funds.

The new library is costing $2 million more than originally budgeted, and the new psychology building, Tobin Hall, is a million dollars over its budget.

Should there be no bids within the cost area for this building, there will be another several months of delay until new funds are provided or the building is redesigned to cut costs.

Theaters, auditoriums, an art gallery, studio space, classrooms, and offices will all be contained in the one building, a multifaced structure of modernistic lines.

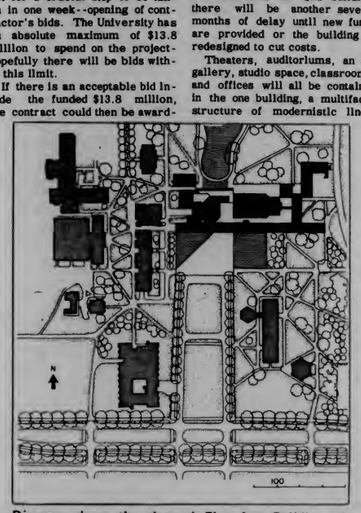

Diagram shows the planned Fine Arts Building (the black area at the upper right), which will be opened to contractor's bids next week. The campus pond (the wavy lines at the top) will be reshaped when construction begins. The three buildings to the left of it in the diagram (grey areas) are the Old Chapel, Memorial Hall and Herter Hall. The road in the upper right hand corner is North Pleasant St.

Northampton On List, May Get New Park

WACHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of the Interior Walter J. Hickel announced Monday an 18 montt series of studies of the possibility of establishing 14 large public recreation areas in and near major cities.

Hickel told newsmen the studies were mainly aimed at consolidating land and water areas already in public ownership and dedicating them for public recreation.

The plan might, however, involve some acquisition of private land, he said.

The areas under study are mainly east of the Mississippi River, reflecting Hickel's emphasis on bringing "parks to the people."

Hickel said he was unable at this point to estimate how much land be included in the eventual proposals or how much money they might cost the federal government.

Establishment of the areas would require legislation, but at least one aspect-the transfer of some land from one federal department to another-could be accomplished by executive order, and Hickel said he was sure the Nixon administration would take such action where appropriate.

Hickel said he hoped administration of such consolidated federal lands would be in the Interior Department.

He said the proposed recreation areas might be devoted to a wide variety of uses depending on local resources and conditions.

Among the areas to be studied by Interior's Bureau of Outdoor Recreation:

-Hartford Springfield, Conn.: a proposed Connecticut River national recreation area in parts of Connecticut, Massachusetts, Vermont and New Hampshire.

It would include three units, a 23,500 acre Mount Holyoke unit near Northampton, Mass.; and a 21,200 acre Coos scenic river unit along the upper Connecticut River between Lake Francis in Northern New Hampshire and the Moore Reservoir near Middleton, N. H.

Most of the Coos River unit will be controlled by easements, keeping the land on local tax rolls.

Work On Deferments Early

By GILBERT J. SALK
Staff Reporter

As more and more young Americans become concerned about the cancerous growth of militarism in the United States, the question of alternatives to serving in the armed forces assumes greater and greater importance. Men are seeking ways to avoid supporting the abhorrent war against Vietnam, and both men and women are disturbed by the disruption and channeling of their lives caused by the Selective Service. Conscription Corner will provide information about alternatives through general information and by answering questions submitted by readers. Note: We recognize that the draft does as much to disrupt the lives of women as it does the lives of men. Therefore, a special effort will be made to provide information for women also.

I just finished counseling someone who has orders to report for induction tomorrow morning. Actually, I did not counsel as much as I sympathized. At this late date, most of his options are closed, and he will probably need a lawyer. This is tragic, because he has two or three valid deferments open to him, and if he had sought counseling earlier, he would have had relatively few problems.

There is a moral to this that is too frequently ignored, especially by students. The best time to start working on deferments is before they become necessary. The draft will not go away if you ignore it, and student deferments do not last forever.

A few words are therefore in order concerning the general steps one should follow in seeking a deferment.

First, see a qualified draft counselor. He or she will be able to give you directions best suited to your specific circumstances. This should be done as soon as you become aware that you might qualify for a deferment. Do not wait!

Many people with II-S student deferments are reluctant to request other deferments because they are afraid they will lose their student status. This is not true. The draft board must place you in the lowest-eligibility classification for which you qualify. If you have a II-S and feel that you are a conscientious objector, apply now. The board will not even act on it until your II-S expires, but having it on file will be further evidence of your sincerity.

Next, gather appropriate documentation to support your claim. For example, if you are seeking a medical deferment for migraine headaches, get letters from any doctors who have treated you explaining your case fully. Be sure the doctor states that your ailment will be aggravated by military training, or that it will prevent you from adequately performing your duties. If you are seeking a hardship deferment, letters from clergymen, doctors, social workers, and others familiar with the case should be sought.

In all cases, have the letters sent to you so that you can forward them to the board. In this way, you can read the letters first to be certain that they are supportive of your claim.

Third, start a file of all correspondence you have with your board. Keep all letters you receive from the board with the envelopes in which they came. Place carbon copies or photocopies of all letters you send to the board. Send all mail to the board by certified mail, return receipt requested. They must sign for the letter, and you get a receipt to prove they got it. Staple the receipt to your copy, and place in your file.

Fourth, request the appropriate form to apply for your deferment. When it comes, answer the questions on a separate sheet of paper. Then consult your draft counselor about your answers before actually filling out the form. Be sure to carefully observe the time limit set for returning the form. It is measured from the date the board mailed it, not from the date you receive it.

Finally, send the form and the supporting letters you have compiled back to the board.

From this point on, the process will vary depending upon the deferment you are requesting and the particulars of your case. Frequently, the board will decide that it needs more information and will call you in for a personal appearance. If this should happen, consult your draft counselor again before making your appearance.

Remember, the Selective Service regulations provide deferments so that the system of obtaining cannon fodder will be more humane. If you quality for a deferment, you have a legal right to it, and , perhaps, a moral obligation to seek it. If you're into a resistance bag, that's cool, but consider the possibility of trying to get your deferments first, and then resisting.

One final point. Many people quality for more than one deferment. If you fall into this category, apply for all of them for which you can make a legitimate claim. The law says that you should notify your board of all changes in your circumstances which might effect your classification; requesting deferments is the way to do this.

An Afternoon In The Rain

By BERNARD BLAIN,
Staff Reporter

Motorists using the section of N. Pleasant St. which crosses the campus between the Newman Center and Eastman Lane about 5 o'clock will find themselves in quite a traffic tie-up.

The police department attributes the increasing traffic to the rise in the student population and to the jump in employment in the area. They did point out that the Town of Amherst does have plans to erect traffic lights at the Eastman Lane intersection, but even with the use of traffic cops at both intersections, there seems to be little improvement in the flow traffic.

There seems little which can be done to relieve the late afternoon traffic jams. However, the office has plans for a new road extending from East Pleasant to Commonwealth Avenue which will allow the barring of automobiles from the on-campus section of N. Pleasant St. and leave the center of the campus for pedestrian traffic only.

When the state will begin construction is still a mystery, and technically, the N. Pleasant St. section is closed according to planning officials.

WALKING SEEMS TO BE the only way to get around the traffic mess. The stop-and-go traffic that has developed in Amherst seems to reflect perfectly the mood of the University – hurry-up-and-wait.

WHAT THIS MESS SEEMS TO INDICATE is that this mess is just beginning to be a mess. UMass is rapidly expanding and more and more people are coming into the area. Sometimes it's difficult enough dodging the ducks at the pond while trying to get to class but "Puffer" up there is a bit much. Ask anyone from Southwest if he's ever been in the Central Area or the Quad. Course he hasn't. It's too hard to get across the street.

ENVIRONMENT EXPERTS TELL US that the little car will help solve the traffic problems in the megalopolis of the future. They are small, park easily, don't pollute too much. They look nice standing still, too.

Pesticide Sprayed On Midwest Marijuana

WASHINGTON (CPS) - The next load of marijuana from the midwest may contain a pesticide which a government commission recommended 'should be immediately restricted to prevent risk of human exposure" because it is possible the pesticide causes birth defects.

Under a joint effort of the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs and the Extension Service of the Agricultural Service, farmers throughout the midwest are being urged by County Agents to spray the pesticide 2, 4-D on whild marijuna crops. A major effort is underway in 20 counties in 10 midwestern states, but the program is nationwide, according to George H. Gaffney, Special Assistant to the Director of the BNDD and project officer for the attempt to destroy marijuana.

There has been no research on the effects of 2,4-D when smoked, as might be done by a person using marijuana which had previously been sprayed with the pesticide. But there has been research on the effect of 2,4 D when ingested, and that research caused the Commission of Pesticides and their Relationship to Environmental Health (commonly known as the Mrak Commission), which reported to HEW Secretary Robert Finch last December, to recommend that "the use of currently registered pesticides to which humans are exposed and which are found to be teratogenic (cause birth defects) by suitable test procedures in one or more mammalian species should be immediately restricted to prevent risk of human exposure. Such pesticides in current use include...the butyl, isopropyl, and isooctyl esters of 2,4-D..."

That recommendation sprang from a study by the Bionetics Research Lab which found significant relationships between birth defects and ingestion of 3 of 6 esters of 2,4-D by female mice, hamsters, and chicks. The Commission recommended further research of the other three esters of the pesticide.

The ester of 2,4-D depends of the substance it is immersed in for spraying. The test results indicate that which ester is used may make a difference in possible dangers from the pesticide, but the campaign being run by the federal government does not mention the possible hazards of various esters. It is possible that 2, 4-D may be even more dangerous when smoked, according to Dr. Joseph McLaughlin, Jr., a researcher for the Food and Drug Administration and co-chairman of the Mrak Commission's Advisory Panel on Teratorgenicity of Pesticides. "If 2,4-D didn't break down from the heat, and I don't think it would," he says, "it would go directly to your bloodstream from the lungs." Since the stomach's defenses are bypassed, McLaughlin thinks more 2,4-D will probably get into the bloodstream, thus increasing the danger of birth defects.

Unlike DDT, 2, 4-D does not build up in the body, and leaves within a few weeks. Therefore, only pregnant women or women who will become pregnant within a couple of weeks neek worry about the possibilities of consuming 2, 4-D.

The U.S. Senate Subcommittee on Energy, Natural Resources, and the Environment, chaired by Senator Philip Hart (D-Mich) recently held hearings on 2, 4-D. Len Bickwit, the Chief Counsel for the Subcommittee, says that testimony developed at the hearings convinces him that "it seems unreasonable to sanction the use of 2, 4-D for any purpose."

When sprayed on Marijuana, the 2, 4-D will cause the dope to turn brown and shrivel, probably within four days to a week. This means it would be entirely possible that the marijuana could be picked and smoked after spraying but before the effects showed.

Since marijuana is generally purchased in small bags in crushed form, it is possible that the purchaser would not be able to tell if the dope had been sprayed even after it had browned.

Once sprayed, the pesticide will stay in the plant for a matter of weeks and in the ground around the plant for up to a year. It will take several years of spraying to totally destroy an area, since some plants will be missed and some seeds stay in the ground for several years before germinating.

Despite the fact the Food and Drug Administration is currently conducting further tests on the safety of 2, 4-D, Gaffney was not aware of any problem when he was asked if there were any health dangers in using 2, 4-D. He suggested the Department of Agriculture might know more.

Dr. Fred Shirley of the Department of Agriculture stated that the doses used in the animals were "ridiculously high" and that humans therefore have nothing to fear from the relatively small amounts that might be contained in a marijuana plant.

This theory was dismissed by Bickwit, who noted that the dosages have to be large because of the relatively small number of animals tested. "If it caused birth defects in one in 500,000 humans, that would be a great tragedy which should more than justify the banning of it. But such a thing would never show up in tests on 20 rats, unless the dosage were increased."

He also notes that while almost everything is toxic (deadly) in large enough quantities, only 10 percent of the pesticides tested by the Mrak Commission caused birth defects no matter how large the dosage. "Why," he asks, "should we take a chance?"

Environmentalists have long been concerned with the effects of 2, 4-D, and have recommended that it be banned. Testifying before the Hart Subcommittee, Harrison Wellford, of Ralph Nader's Center for the Study of Responsive Law, advocated a suspension in use because of the possibility of birth defects.

Jan Schaeffer, editor of ENVIRONMENTAL ACTION, an ecology newsletter which first printed the fact 2, 4-D was being used on marijuana, says the use is "grossly irresponsible. They should ban 2, 4-D, not extend its use to marijuana," she says.

Midwest marijuana has long had a reputation of being very mild, and not very good for getting high. Some dealers have mixed domestic grass with the Mexican variety, selling it as Mexican. It is thus possible that some people who think they are buying imported dope could really be getting marijuana which has been sprayed with 2, 4-D.

It should be emphasized that there is no proof 2, 4-D will cause birth defects when ingested or smoked, and that the birth defects found in lab animals were caused by doses far larger than any marijuana user is likely to consume. But the possibility is still there, and many people feel the failure of the BNDD to even be aware of the pors' ible hazards illustrates a callous disregard for the American public.

Education Involves Nearly 1 in 3

Over 62 million people--more than 30 percent of the population--will be involved in U. S. education this fall. And the Nation will commit an estimated $73.6 billion of its resources to education during the 1970-71 school year, NEW's Office of Education reported today in its annual back-to-school review.

According to the Office's National Center for Educational Statistics, the number of students in the country's schools and colleges this fall is expected to increase for the 26th consecutive year and reach another all-time high of 59.2 million, an increase of one percent over the 58.6 million students enrolled last fall.

Expenditures for public and private education at all levels are estimated at $73.6 billion during the 1970-71 school year, as compared with $69.5 billion in 1969-70.

The largest percentage increase in enrollment over last year is expected at the higher education level. The enrollment of degree-credit students in colleges and universities is expected to rise from 7.3 million to 7.6 million this fall, a gain of 4.1 percent. The figures for both years exclude approximatly 600,000 undergraduates enrolled in occupational or general studies programs which are not creditable toward a bachelor's degree.

The Office of Education estimates that close to 2.3 million elementary and secondary school teachers will be required to take care of this fall's record-breaking enrollment. This is an increase of about 35,000 teachers over the number employed a year ago. An instructional staff of almost 600,000 is anticipated in colleges and universities this fall. This represents an increase of about 20,000 over the number engaged in college teaching in 1969.

OTHER HIGHLIGHTS OF THE CURRENT EDUCATIONAL PICTURE ARE:

--Nearly 3 million persons graduated from high school in 1970. The class of 1971 is expected to approach 3.1 million, which will make it the largest graduating class in history.

--The number of earned degrees conferred during the school year 1969-70 is estimated as follows: Bachelor's and first professional degrees, 785,000; master's degrees, 211,000; and doctorates, 29,000. During 1970-71 the comparable figures are expected to be 815,000, 244,000, and 31,000, respectively. In each case the figures for 1970-71 represent all-time highs.

--The projected educational attainment for persons in their middle and late teens today is as follows: More than three-fourths (about 77 percent) of them will graduate from high school; 45 percent will enter a college or university; 22 percent will earn a bachelor's degree; 7 percent, a master's degree; and 1 percent, a doctorate.

--The total expenditures for education amounted to 7.5 percent of the gross national product last year.

--Federal grants for education continue to grow. They have risen from $3.4 billion in 1965 to $8.6 billion in 1970. They are expected to reach $9.6 billion in the fiscal year which ends June 30, 1971.

Voters Go To Primary Polls In Six States Today

(AP) Two of the nation's top Democrats, Hubert H. Humphrey and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, take the first steps toward new Senate terms today as six more states hold primaries to select nominees for November's mid-term elections.

Kennedy is unopposed for renomination in Massachusetts while Humphrey is expected to be nominated handily in Minnesota.

Two Republicans are running for the nomination that will pit the winner against the 38 year old Kennedy. They are Josiah Spaulding, a liberal former party chairman, and John McCarthy, a conservative who was a top aide to former Gov. John A. Volpe.

Francis W. Sargent, 55, who succeeded to the governorship when Volpe became secretary of transportation is unopposed for reelection and is favored in November over the survivor of the Democrats' fight.

Frontrunners in the Democratic primary are considered to be Boston Mayor Kevin H. White, 44, and State Senate President Maurice A. Donahue, 52, endorsed by the state party convention. Also running: former Lt. Gov. Francis X. Bellotti, 46 and former presidential aide Kenneth P. O'Donnell, 45.

Democratic Rep. Philip Philbin, a 72 year old veteran of 28 years in the House, is being challenged by a Jesuit priest, the Rev. Robert Drinan, 49, former dean of Boston College Law School, and state Rep. Charles Ohanian.

Mrs. Louise Day Hicks, controversial Boston City Council member, heads four Democratic contenders for the seat of retiring House Speaker John W. McCormack, and Republican Rep. Hastings Keith is being challenged on Cape Cod by state Sen. William D. Weeks.

Five Senate seats are at stake, all held now by Democrats. Besides Kennedy and Humphrey, who seeks to succeed retiring Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy, three other Democratic incumbents are favored to win Tuesday Sens. Henry M. Jackson of Washington, John O. Pastore of Rhode Island and Joseph D. Tydings of Maryland.

But Tydings, accused in a recent Life magazine article of misusing his influence in an overseas loan transaction, may get a close run from perennial candidate George P. Mahoney, making his ninth bid for statewide office in Maryland.

Two Democratic governors, Marvin Mandel of Maryland and Frank D. Licht of Rhode Island, are prohibitive favorites Tuesday. Gubernatorial nominees are being picked also in Massachusetts, where four Democrats are trying to oppose Gov. Francis W. Sargent; Oklahoma, where two Democrats held a runoff to determine Gov. Dewey Bartlett's November foe; and Minnesota.

Congressional nominees are being picked in five states and three House veterans, Republican Thomas Pelly of Washington and Democrats Philip Philbin of Massachusetts and George Fallon of Maryland, could be in difficulty.

Here is a look at today's major races:

Minnesota: Humphrey, 59, is considered an almost certain primary winner over Earl D. Craig Jr. 31, a Negro studies instructor, but many Republicans may cross over to vote for Craig in an effort to embarrass Humphrey. The former vice president's likely November opponent is Rep. Clark MacGregor, 48.

Atty. Gen. Douglas Head, 40, has only token opposition for the Republican nomination to succeed retiring GOP Gov. Harold Levander. State Sen. Wendell Anderson, 37, is unopposed for the Democratic nomination.

In an important congressional contest, Rep. Donald Fraser, a leader of House Democratic liberals, is being challenged in his Minneapolis district by conservative city alderman Joe Greenstein.

Washington: Jackson, 58, has a primary challenge similar to Humphrey's a black Spokane attorney, Carl Maxey, running on a peace platform. Jackson is expected to win easily and is a strong favorite over Republican state Sen. Charles Elicker, likely winner of a five man GOP primary.

Rep. Pelly, 67, is being challenged by state Sen. Joel Pritchard, 45, an ally of liberal Republican Gov. Daniel Evans in a Seattle district hard hit by layoffs at the big Boeing Co. plant.

Maryland: Tydings, 42, hopes a large turnout in the Washington suburbs, where there are many local primary contests, will enable him to defeat Mahoney, 69, whose surprise victory four years ago in a three way Democratic primary helped Spiro T. Agnew win the governorship. Rep. J. Glenn Beall Jr., son of the man Tyding unseated in 1964, is expected to win the Republican nomination against two foes.

Mandel, 50, elected by the General Assembly when Agnew became vice president, has four token opponents. His likely Republican opponent is C. Stanley Blair, a former top Agnew aide. Two veteran Baltimore congressmen, Fallon and Samuel Friedel, face stiff primary challenges. Fallon, 68, chairman of the House Public Works Committee, forces a 37 year old state legislator, Paul S. Sarbanes, while Friedel 72, chairman of the House Administration Committee, has four primary foes.

Rhode Island: Pastore, 63, has John J. McLaughlin, 43, is unopposed. Gov. Licht, 54, is unopposed for Democratic renomination, and his likely opponent in November is state Atty. Gen. Herbert F. Desimone, 40.

Oklahoma: Tulsa attorney David Hall, leader in the Aug. 4 Democratic primary, faces state Sen. Bryce Baggett of Oklahoma City for the gubernatorial nomination in the state's only major primary runoff. Bartlett was unopposed. only token primary opposition, and his Republican opponent, the Rev.

Distinguished Teacher Awards Highlight Opening Convocation

Opening Convocation, the ceremony marking the formal beginning of the 1970-71 academic year at UMass, will be held Wednesday, Sept. 16, at 10:10 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Chancellor Oswald Tippo will give his opening address to the academic community and present the annual Distinguished Teacher Awards. All members of the University community and the public are invited.

The traditional academic procession of robed faculty and staff will begin the convocation. The procession will be led by the bearer of the University Mace, William H. Ross. Traditionally, this honor is given to the faculty member who has held the Distinguished Teacher Award for the longest time. Dr. Ross, Professor of physics, won the award in 1962.

Three Distinguished Teacher Awards will be given for "manifest excellence in the art of teaching and outstanding devotion to the cause of education." The awards are made by an all-University committee and carry with them a $1000 stipend.

Rabbi Martin Kowal, chaplain to Jewish students, will give the invocation and Dr. Robert L. Glukcstern, acting provost, will be master of ceremonies.. Student Senate President Glenn Elters will speak.

Classes beginning at 10:10 a.m. Wednesday have been cancelled to enable faculty and students to attend the convocation.

Wednesday is also the date of Chancellor and Mrs. Tippo's reception for new members of the UMass faculty and staff. The reception will be held beginning at 8:30 p.m. at the Top of the Campus in the new Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center.

Clay Wins Right To Fight In N.Y., Patriots' Long Gone

NEW YORK (AP) - Cassius Clay won a decision over the New York State Athletic Commission Monday when a federal judge granted him the right to fight in New York.

Clay was defrocked as world heavyweight boxing champion by New York and most other states in 1967 when he refused to accept military service.

When Clay applied for a renewal of his New York boxing license he was turned down last Oct. 14. The Commision argued that, although it had licensed boxers convicted of felonies, those fighters had served time.

Clay, who had brought the suit under his Muslim name, Muhammad Ali, is preparing for an Oct. 26 bout with Jerry Quarry in Atlanta, the only place he is licensed to fight.

"I'm just glad to hear it," said Clay in Philadelphia. "I'm not thinking about that now. I'm busy getting ready for Quarry. I can't have too many things on my mind."

Clay, 28, hasn't had a real fight since March 22, 1967 when he defended his title against Zora Folley in New York's Madison Square Garden. He boxed a couple of exhibitions that year and then managed to get a license for an eight round exhibition against three little known fighters in Atlanta Sept. 2.

"Every effort will be made to arrange a fight with a suitable opponent in New York State," said Clay's lawyer, Michael Meltsner, a Columbia law professor.

The Commission refused any comment on the ruling until its staff had time to study the court decision. An appeal is possible.

It was another chapter in the trials and tribulations of Clay who came out of the 1960 Olympics and won the heavyweight title in a tremendous upset by knocking out Sonny Liston in Miami Beach, Feb. 25, 1964.

Clay stopped Liston in one round in a 1965 rematch in Lewiston, Maine, then made successful defenses against ex-champ Floyd Patterson, George Chuvalo, Henry Cooper, Brian London, Karl Mildenberg, Cleveland Williams, Ernie Terrell and Folley before he went on the inactive list.

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Patriots retired nine year veteran Charlie Long and cut three other members of last year's squad Monday in getting down to the National Football League's 40 player limit.

Trimmed from the roster with Long were running backs R. C. Gamble and Bob Gladieux and cornerback John Outlaw, the fastest man on the team.

Long, who earned all American Football League honors at both offensive tackle and guard, was immediately given another job by the Patriots.

"Charlie will work for us in scouting and special ticket promotions," Coach Clive Rush said. "With his loyalty and the contribution he has made to this franchise, he will be a welcome addition."

A native of Fyffe, Fla., where a high school field is named in his honor, Long starred at the University of Chattanooga before joining the Patriots. He is 31.

Gamble played two years for the Patriots, backing up Jim Nance at fullback and also seeing spot duty at halfback. Gladieux, former Notre Dame star, was used little as a rookie last year.

MINNEAPOLIS ST. PAUL (AP)- Coach Bud Grant pulled out the Kansas City Chiefs' file Monday and played down the idea that their National Football League season opener Sunday would be a grudge match.

"There has been one question we have been postponing for a long time," Grant said. "After the announcement of the schedule last spring, everyone wanted to talk about the Chiefs'.

"Now we have all week to talk about them. While Kansas City represents the championship of professional football, they also represent our first league game.

"Based on last year's performance, our first league game is against the best team in professional football.

"We have to forget about Kansas City after Sunday and get ready for the next one."

A sellout crowd of 47,900 at Metropolitan Statium and a national television NBC audience is expected to see the 4 p. m. EDT game.

Grant said he has seen the Super Bowl game film three times and will study it again this week, as well as films of the Chiefs' last two exhibition games.

"Basically they are the same football team," Grant said. "They are still formidable, they're doing the same things and they will attack the same way.

"Kansas City was not scoring a lot in the preseason but they did not go with regulars all of the time.

"They are finding that everyone is giving them their best shot since they are the champions. St. Louis ran some things against them Saturday night that the Cardinals hadn't used all year."

While saying the Vikings would not treat Sunday's game as a grudge match, he did say "the recollection will all come back. But we can't win the Super Bowl. We can win a league game. Emotional value? Satisfaction would be a better word."

Drinan Sweeps Past Philbin

NEWTON-Rt. Rev. Robert Drinan, in a stunning primary upset, defeated Congressman Philip Philbin, to win the democratic nomination for Congress in the Third District. Philbin conceded defeat early this morning with a scattering of returns left to be counted.

Drinan, on leave as Dean of Boston College Law School, was an outspoken critic of the Nixon war policy and urged immediate withdrawal from Indo-China, as means of gaining peace. Philbin, a 28 year veteran of Congress, is one of the stoutest supporters of the administration.

In his acceptance speech, Drinan, told supporters, that "the people of this district have spoken loud and clear that they reject the Nixon policies in Vietnam and administration remedies for our troubled economy."

Father Drinan, added, to his youthful campaign headquarters workers that "young people's voices can be heard within the system" and urged youths to participate in the electoral process.

Philbin, a key member of the House Ways and Means Committee said, "The voters have left no doubt about where they stand"

Drinan has gained nationwide attention for his campaign. His standing as a Jesuit priest brought additional attention to what was already a key Congressional race.

A third Democratic hopeful State Representative Robert O'Hanlan finished far back in the race.

Across The Nation

Humphery, Tydings Win

Sen. Joseph D. Tydings of Maryland, riding hefty majorities in Washington's suburbs, overcame an early deficit and took the lead Tuesday night over conservative challenger George P. Mahoney in the state's Democratic primary.

Former Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey, in the first step of a political comeback, took a strong lead in his race for the Democratic nomination for Senator from Minnesota.

In Maryland, predominantly rural returns gave the 69 year old Mahony, who built his campaign on criticism of Tydings' liberal voting record, an early lead over the 42 year old senator.

But it evaporated when returns started to come in from populous Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties and from black precincts in the city of Baltimore.

Returns from 611 of the 1,556 precincts showed Tydings 81,239; Mahoney 78,754.

Rep. J. Glenn Beall, Jr., 43, son of the man Tydings unseated in 1964, easily won the Republican senatorial primary.

In Minnesota, returns from the first 37 of 3,822 precincts gave the 59 year old Humphrey 1,036 votes to 238 for his opponent, Earl D. Craig Jr., a 31 year old black studies instructor.

Rep. Clark MacGregor was far ahead in the Republican primary.

In Maryland's primaries for governor, Democratic Gov. Marvin Mandel, 50, and Republican C. Stanley Blair, 42, overpowered token challengers.

In Minnesota's governor's race state Atty. Gen. Douglas Head, 40, won the Republican nomination, while state Sen. Wendell Anderson, 37, was unopposed for the Democratic designation. GOP Gov. Harold Levander is retiring.

In a hotly fought Minnesota congressional contest, Rep. Donald M. Fraser of Minneapolis turned back a conservative challenger. He faces another in November-former radio announcer Richard Enroth, won the GOP nomination.

White Victor

Hicks, Spaulding, Dukakis Victors In Other Contests

BOSTON-Boston Mayor Kevin H. White appeared to have the Democratic nomination for governor locked up at 3:15 this morning, after a neck and neck four way race. White led State Senate President Maurice A. Donohue with 1739 precincts out of 2019, approximately, 205,000 to 197,000 in unofficial figures.

In a speech to his supporters at the Somerset Hotel, in Boston, White, who trailed Donohue in his home city by a scant 753 votes said, "If this holds up, like we think, the election campaign starts tomorrow. This is an important election and we have seven weeks to win it."

The other two candidates, Francis X. Bellotti, a former lieutenant governor, and Kenneth P. O'Donnell, one time White House aid to the late President John F. Kennedy, were trailing. O'Donnell conceded his defeat by mid evening.

The winner will oppose Republican Gov. Francis W. Sargent, who was nominated without a contest.

Mrs. Louise Day Hicks, who as chairman of the Boston School Committee was an outspoken foe of busing to achieve racial balance in the public schools, was the winner of the Democratic nomination-tantamount to election-in the heavily Democratic 9th Congressional District, where Speaker John W. McCormack is retiring.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy was unopposed for renomination for a third term, but his vote ran 25 per cent behind that piled up collectively by the candidates for governor.

Josiah A. Spaulding, former GOP state chairman, won the Republican nomination to oppose Kennedy for the Senate. He defeated John J. McCarthy, retired Army officer and once state commissioner of administration.

Spaulding's total in 1,177 precincts was 61,725 to 46,580 for McCarthy.

State Rep. Michael S. Dukakis was the runaway winner of the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor, in a five way fight with four other candidates bucking his endorsement by the Democratic state convention.

Incumbent U.S. Rep. Harold D. Donohue of Worcester appeared to be the easy winner for renomination in the 4th District, running far ahead of his challenger, Stephanie A. Riopel.

In the 3rd House District, the Rev. Robert F. Drinan, on leave as dean of the Boston College Law School, ran well ahead of the incumbent veteran, Rep. Philip J. Philbin.

Nominations also were made for other state and county offices and for the 280 seats in the legislature.

Spaulding, who won his party's endorsement at the Republican State Convention this summer, forecast victory in the primary by a two to one margin because "the future of the Republican party rests with people like myself, Gov. Sargent and Sen. Edward W. Brooke R-Mass."

Spaulding is a liberal who was accused by his opponent in a television debate of harboring views similar to those of Sen. Kennedy.

McCarthy is a retired executive who ran on a platform of support for the President "down the line." As a former state commissioner of administration, a Volpe appointee, he was the governor's day by day executive officer in running the state.

In the Democratic race for the chance to oppose Sargent, Donahue, of Holyoke, was the candidate endorsed by last June's Democratic State Convention. He also is retiring as president of the state Senate after 20 years in the legislature.

Mayor White, however, showed an edge over Donahue in polls taken before the primary and, unlike Donahue, did not put his immediate political future on the line by running for governor.

Bellotti is a lawyer who served one term as lieutenant governor. He was defeated in his bid for governor in 1966. O'Donnell was a White House aide during the Kennedy administration and part of the Johnson administration.

In the congressional contests, the race in the 9th District, being vacated by retiring Speaker John W. McCormack, led in interest.

Louise Day Hicks, a city councillor and a former chairman of the Boston School Committee, led the pre primary polls, counting on a heavy turnout of the Irish Catholic population in the district. She is an outspoken critic of busing to achieve school integration.

On the other side of the spectrum was David S. Nelson, a black attorney who depended on a heavy turnout in the predominantly black Roxbury and Dorchester sections of the city.

John J. Moakley, the third contender, is a member of the state Senate.

BOSTON MAYOR KEVIN H. WHITE, scoring a tight-rope victory over State Senate President Maurice A. Donahue in yesterday's primary, earned the right to face Governor Francis W. Sargent in November's final election.

UMass "Pulls Strings" To Speed Thelwell's Return

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

The University made several "influential" contacts yesterday during a series of meetings in Washington which administrators feel could help reverse the decision made by the U.S. counsel in Jamaica not to allow Michael Thelwell entrance to the country.

The following important developments were noted by University spokesman, Dr. Randolph Bromery, who, along with Dean Seymour Shapiro, represented the UMass at the hastily convened Washington meetings:

--Senator Edward W. Brooke sent a personal telegram to the Jamaican Ambassador in an effort to influence the Chief U.S. Jamaican Counsel.

--The Under-Secretary of State for Latin American Affairs Meyers is working with the University in an effort to reverse the decision.

--The Chairman of the President's Commission on Campus unrest, Governor Scranton of Penn., made contacts for Bromery and Shapiro to see Undersecretary Meyer, and he is expected to aid further if necessary.

--Senator Kennedy's office made contacts which led to a meeting with the Chief of the Visa department, George Owen.

--Joseph Rhodes, the controvertial Harvard Graduate student and member of Scranton's Commission on Campus Unrest, is consulting "a contact in the White House".

--Mrs. Barbara Watson, appointed to the State Department by Lyndon Johnson, is using her influence to help the situation. Mrs. Watson, according to Bromery, "Has important say in appointing U.S. Counsels."

--UMass President Robert Wood, after "lengthy discussion" with Bromery, is getting in touch with his own "influential" friends in the Capitol.

--The President of Howard University James Check, also a member of the Commission on Campus Un-rest, is working on the problem. Cheek was the first to imform Governor Scranton of Thelwell's problem.

--Bromery said that he and Shapiro had tried to see as "many people as possible" to help change the decision concerning the visa. "I don't look upon this as pressure, but the more people helping the better", added Bromery.

The "technicality" which is delaying Thelwell in his native Jamaica stems from an application which he made to the American Consulate in that country for an "immigration Visa" which he later discovered would have not allowed entrance to the States for at least a year.

Thelwell then applied for an "H-1" visa, which allows quicker entry but stipulates that the holder of such a visa will return to his or her home country. Thelwell nixed his own "H-I" application with the Immigration Visa which presumes a permanent, or at least a lengthy, stay.

The decision on the part of the U.S. counsel in Jamaica was a sound one from a legalistic point of view, but it does ignore the "importance of Thelwell to the Black Studies Department and the University," said Bromery.

The decision of the U.S. Counsel cannot be reversed by anyone in the State Department, but it is hoped that with enough persuasion, the Counsel will reverse his own decision. The UMass representatives were not able to talk directly with the Counsel.

"We are assuming that Thelwell filled out the Immigration visa before the H-I and that the Counsel is following the law about filling visas," explained Bromery.

"If the Counsel reverses the decision," he continued, "Mike can go right from the Embassy to the plane. He has already bought his ticket."

Bromery, when asked what would happen if these present efforts failed, replied, "If this doesn't work, well, we still haven't exhausted our bag of tricks."

Bromery added that the University should know Thelwell's fate "definitely by Friday."

Williams Hits War Aims In Mobe's First Meeting

by BRIAN WHITE
Staff Reporter

The Student Mobilization Committee met last night in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Bobby Washington was the SMC's featured speaker. He spoke of the "heroic efforts" the people of Vietnam to withstand the "barbaric onslaughts" of the United States, and stated that their resistance had given the U.S. war machine a serious setback.

Why has the U.S. not sent many more troops, planes, heavy armaments to Vietnam? The reasons, Washington stated, were the courage of the Vietnamese, and, more importantly, the opposition of millions of Americans to the War. The peace movement has held back the arm of the war machine, and will end the war.

The most successful strategy of the peace movement has been to limit their efforts to the single question of the war in Vietnam, and thus to attempt to bring as many people as possible into the movement. If other issues were added, far fewer people could understand and sympathize with organizations like the SMC.

Some are against the movement because they feel it is ineffective, and think more violent tactics necessary, with more attention given to issues such as racism and sexism. Washington observed that the "so-called liberal politicians" plaster their campaign headquarters with signs like "Down with Male Chauvinism"--and yet do not do anything as concrete as opposing the war directly.

Washington feels that dividing the attention of the peace movement only helps such politicians to soften its thrust.

Washington noted that many people mistakenly believe the peace movement to be White in nature. He observed that the earliest opposition to the war came from the Black community, which at the very beginning was 85-95% opposed to the war, and mentioned the early antiwar leadership of Malcolm X and Martin Luther King.

Some Blacks have diverted their attention away from the War because of Third World activities. Black leaders have often avoided criticizing the Administration for fear of jeopardizing Federal aid to their communities. However, those who think the peace movement is White in nature are badly mistaken.

Washington concluded the meeting voted to retain the SMC Constitution essentially as it was written, changing only the name of the organization, from "University" Mobilization Committee to "Student" Mobilization Committee, in order to affiliate with the national SMC.

There was a proposal from the floor to insert a passage into the Constitution excluding those politicians from speaking at SMC rallies who had failed to support "Black rebellions," and had allowed police to suppress them.

It was argued that such politicians do help to bring people into the SMC, and ultimately the association will help them to understand the true nature of what the politicians themselves really stood for. The proposal was overwhelmingly voted down.

A Priorities Proposal was approved. The SMC thereby agreed to help make October 31 a national day of antiwar protest, and Oct. 30 a "moratorium for peace action." The SMC will work to educate the community with regard to the November statewide Vietnam Referendum, and will support vote C (immediate withdrawal from the war).

The meeting voted to decentralize the SMC into living area committees, for leafletting and other activities.

The SMC also agreed to send two telegrams, to Chancellor Oswald Tippo, protesting the release of antiwar professor Gary Tarr, the other to the United Auto Workers, supporting their strike as an action in sympathy with the peace movement.

It was made clear that the telegrams were not to violate the Student Mobilization Committee policy of standing for only one specific issue but would represent the view of the majority of students present at the meeting.

MOBE's Platform Planks

IMMEDIATE WITHDRAWAL: "The antiwar movement demands the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of all U.S. forces from indochina and the dismantling of all U.S. bases in Southeast Asia. The right of the Indochinese people to self determination must be supported as a matter of principle."

NON-EXCLUSION: "All who oppose the war are welcome in the movement irrespective of their views on other questions and regardless of other affiliations."

TACTICS: "The antiwar movement employs a variety of tactics to win adherents to its program of immediate withdrawal. But whatever tactic is used, the movement must function in a peaceful, organized, and disciplined fashion. Confrontational adventures hurt the movement by alienating otherwise sympathetic sections of the population, particularly labor and Black and Brown peoples."

MASS DEMONSTRATIONS: "Mass demonstrations remain the antiwar movement's most effective method of communicating its message to, and involving, the largest number of people. By the sheer weight of numbers that can be assembled at a given time and place, the movement gains credibility and visibility. It provides a way for people drawn to the movement to register their opposition to the war.

"Demonstrations by themselves do not end the war. Nor do other methods of protest suggested by those who disparage demonstrations.

LEADING THE MEETING, Sidney Finehirsh explained the content of what he hoped would become the MOBE'S policy on the war. (MDC photo by Ken Emery)

President Calls For Revision Of National Foreign Aid Policy

WASHINGTON(AP) - President Nixon called Tuesday for a top to bottom overhaul of the U.S. foreign aid system, including creation of a new security assistance program to help reduce the American military presence abroad.

In sending his long awaited reform plan to Congress, Nixon proposed also abolishing the aid handling Agency for International Development set up by the Kennedy administration and handing its functions to new institutions.

The President gave no overall figures for future U.S. aid levels in his blueprint for the 1970's. But he made plain he wants Congress to reverse its past practice of cutting ever more deeply into the politically unpopular overseas assistance.

While the global U.S. aid programs begun after World War II have been losing their effectiveness because of changing world conditions, the need for aid has not slackened, Nixon argued.

"The answer is not to stop foreign aid or to slash it further," he said. "the answer is to reform our foreign assistance program and to our share to meet the needs of the '70s."

And his six point reform, he said, "would turn our assistance programs into a far more successful investment in the future of mankind."

Nixon's recommendations, which Congress is to act on next year, basically follow proposals set forth last March by his special aid task force headed by a former president of the Bank of America, Rudolph A. Peterson.

In an unusual formal signing ceremony for his message, Nixon contrasted that report with a score of past U.S. aid studies which he said had mainly gathered dust.

The changes Nixon is proposing-if adopted by Congress would amount to the most drastic shakeup of the program since it began with the Marshall Plan of massive American assistance to Europe in the late 1940s.

The President said U.S. aid should be grouped into three different parts-security assistance, humanitarian assistance and economic assistance-and handled under separate organizations to "overcome the confusion inherent in our present approach" of lumping all together.

"To provide effective support for the Nixon Doctrine I shall propose a freshly conceived International Security Assistance program," he said.

"The prime objective of this program will be to help other countries assume the responsibility of their own defense and thus help us reduce our presence abroad."

Continuing largescale U.S. arms and economic ais programs tc South Vietnam and South Korea, as U.S. troops withdraw, are examples of the administration's use of aid under the Nixon Doctrine.

His Third Trip

Nixon To Go Abroad

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon, planning his third major overseas tour, announced Tuesday he will go to Italy, Spain and Britain. Other countries may be added - notably Communist Yugoslavia.

Accompanied by Mrs. Nixon, the President will leave Washington Sept. 27 on what is now listed as a nine day journey. Most observers expect him to be gone longer, however.

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler, who relayed Nixon's announcement to reporters, refused to rule out possible stops in Yugoslavia and France - but said time would not permit a visit to West Germany.

Although the White House did not immediately confirm wide spread speculation that Nixon would become the first U.S. president to go to Yugoslavia since World War II, Mrs. Nixon seemed to let the cat out of the bag in responding to reporters' questions about the prospective journey.

Of all the countries involved, she replied, "I've never been to Yugoslavia."

In offering an explanation for Nixon's travels, the White House said:

"This trip will afford the President an opportunity to undertake a full exchange of views with his respective hosts and with our officials in an effort to strengthen the structure for peace and to give impetus to the President's efforts to bring about an era of negotiations."

With many details still to be announced, a further note of mystery was added by the White House which said that "at some point during the trip" Nixon plans to meet with Ambassador David K.E. Bruce and Phillip C. Habib to review stalled Vietnam peace talks in Paris at which they represent the United States.

General Motors Strike Deepens, Rail Service Disrupted

Auto Strike

DETROIT (AP) - The United Auto Workers strike against General Motors moved through its first day Tuesday, with hopes for a quick settlement dimmed by the announcement that serious bargaining would be put off for at least a week.

The two sides said they had scheduled their first poststrike bargaining session for next Tuesday. Picketing was generally peaceful at GM facilities in 31 states and two Canadian provinces.

Meanwhile, the cost of the strike to all concerned began mounting at a rate put by GM and the union at more than $118 million a day.

Earl Bramblett, GM's vice president for personnel detailed these daily losses: GMsales, $64.3 million; payments to GM suppliers, $28.5 million; U.S. and Canadian tax payments, $14.3 million, and wages for the 344,000 striking workers, $8.57 million.

In addition, the union said its $120 million strike fund was being drained of $2.5 million daily, as strikers drew up to $40 weekly.

The strike was the first national shutdown of GM, the world's largest manufacturing firm, since 1964 when it was closed for 10 days. In 1945 GM was struck for 113 days, the longest national work stoppage in the industry's history.

UAW President Leonard Woodcock blamed the strike on what he said was the company's frozen bargaining position. Blambblett, GM's top negotiator, blamed the strike on the union's refusal to "come off its mountain" of "fantastic" demands.

The main unresolved issues were the three top union demands which GM said it couldn't afford: a substantial wage increase averaging 63 cents an hour in the first year, unlimited protection against increases in the cost of living, and retirement after 30 years with a minimum monthly pension of $500.

GM and Chrysler were named as twin strike targets on Sept. 1, but last Sunday Chrysler was excluded.

Woodcock said a settlement had appeared close at Chrysler, but that the firm "was turned away from a settlement" by "pressure from GM."

Ford, struck for seven weeks in 1967, was given strike immunity earlier.

Ford and Chrysler announced Monday that they would not extend the old three year con - tracts but would honor most provisions such as wage rates, seniority, pensions and others. However, the firms said they would not collect union dues for the UAW.

Rail Strike

WASHINGTON (AP) - Operations of three major railroads were disrupted for several hours Tuesday while a court order barring a strike was filtering down to the picket lines.

Picketing of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway and the Southern Pacific began soon after U.S. District Judge Howard F. Corcoran issued a temporary restraining order forbidding strike set for 12:01 a.m. Tuesday by four AFL CIO unions.

The order was issued late Monday night after contract talks were broken off because of an impasse over wages.

A spokesman for President C.L. Dennis of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks said Dennis sent out an order at noon to call off the strike in view of the federal court writ.

The spokesman said the other three unions reportedly were sending similar orders to their locals. He added that Dennis was not officially advised of the court's injunction until 11 a.m. EDT.

The rank and file pickets had said Tuesday morning they would not end their walkout until officially notified of the court action.

Corcoran set a Sept. 22 hearing on his injunction which expires at 1:45 p.m. EDT Sept. 23.

Shortly after Dennis issued his order to end the strike, a railroad industry spokesman saidpicket lines of the clerks began to come down.

The United Transportation Union also said its pickets were being withdrawn after receipt of the restraining order.

The picketing shut down yard operations and stranded passenger and freight trains up and down the lines of three target railroads.

Before the restraining order was issued, chief industry negotiator John P. Hiltz indicated the entire industry would shut down if the unions struck the three railroads.

The government sponsored negotiations broke off late Monday and strike plans were announced after Dennis said "The carriers have demonstrated absolute inflexibility."

Tonight - 7 P.M.

You are all well aware that the MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN is a daily newspaper trying to serve the campus community. However, though we arrive every morning without fail, THE DAILY COLLEGIAN, to continue it's growth needs a larger staff.

Most of the student body probably thinks that a Collegian staffer must work 40 hours a week and that the staff is only open to career journalists, or power hungry, masochistic, mad men (and women). This isn't true.

The Daily Collegian welcomes any undergraduate and to be an active and productive staffer, you can spend only two hours a week at the most. If you want to make up news pages, write sports copy, report news events, compose an editorial, take photos, sell advertising, etc., etc., it can take you only two hours a week.

The funny thing is that most people, after joining the paper want to spend more time in the office. There are the fascinating range of people that you meet there. Not the normal middle mass of students, but those involved, those interested, those stimulating.

The experience of the Daily Collegian is an educational one, and the friendships made are the best source of that education.

The paper you are reading today is the ninth largest college daily in the nation. It has attained this lofty stature in just three years of daily publication. But to maintain this growth, we need new blood, and additional staffers.

We invite you to join the Daily Collegian staff. It may be the best way to lose your student number, and become an individual.

Five College Community Aims For Cooperation

With the opening of Smith, Amherst, Mount Holyoke, Hampshire College and UMass this week, a community of five campuses and five learning atmospheres will live together in the Pioneer Valley. Five College Cooperation is an attempt to unite this community through a sharing of classes, concerts, lectures, libraries, and social activities.

Exchanging students is a primary means of five-college cooperation. University students are eligible to take courses at any of the four other institutions. Generally, courses taken at another school must be in the major area of study and not available on this campus.

Course listings of the five colleges and more information may be obtained at the Provost's office, Whitmore. Openings at Hampshire College will be limited until organization is completed.

New this year is a five-college interlibrary pass system which will operate on a trial basis for the semester. Each library is authorized to issue 25 passes per day to any other five-college library on a first-come first-serve basis. A pass may be obtained at the home library only on the day it is to be used and must be shown at the library visited.

This pass is good only on the date of issue. It does not entitle the students to take out books at the library visited.

The free five-college bus service is in operation for Valley students. Route #1, serving Mount Holyoke, Hampshire, Amherst, and UMass stops at the UMass waiting station hourly on class days, and three times each evening seven days a week. Route #2, serving Smith, Amherst, and UMass operates on a similar schedule. Some of the runs are on public busses at a fee, but most are free. Students taking a five college course are given passes for use on the public busses.

Complete five-college bus schedules are available at the Student Union lobby counter.

The Five College Student Coordinating Board, a group of students representing the five college area, plans a variety of projects aiding cooperation among the schools. Presently the FCSCB has three officers and eight members at large. Each student body contributes to the budget of the board. Mount Holyoke, Smith and Amherst Colleges contribute $1.75 to $2.00 per student; UMass contributes $.56 per student. Most of the Board's budget is spent on the five college bus service. The remainder is used for publicity and operating expenses.

To open channels or communication throughout the area, the FCSCB is establishing Five College Communication Centers at UMass and Amherst this fall. It is hoped that UMass will have a Communication Center within two weeks, if students can be found to work in the Center.

The FCSCB is planning a valley wide orientation program for this semester. Panel discussions on five-college cooperation are scheduled for Amherst, Smith and Mount Holyoke this week. Bus tours of the five campuses are being arranged. Still in the planning stage is a five college festival to be held at Hampshire College early in October.

Members of the Board worked at UMass on course change day this semester helping five college students enroll in UMass courses and speaking with UMass students who wished to take courses at other schools, often because they were crowded out of courses here. A booklet of five college information was also distributed. These booklets are now available in the Registrar's Office.

UMass currently has only one active member on the Coordinating Board, Jerome Moriarty, 336 Moore. UMass and each school currently has four places on the board. The Student Senate appoints UMass representatives and finding active representatives has been a problem. Under a revised FCSCB Constitution, applicants would be interviewed by the Board and representatives chosen. This new Constitution must be passed by the UMass Student Senate before it is adopted.

Concerned over the general lack of interest in five-college cooperation on this campus, representative Moriarty will be conducting a mail poll of 250 UMass students and interview another 100 to determine attitudes here toward neighboring institutions.

The Five College Student Coordinating Board can function only if it represents the whole community. Students interested in working with the Board or at the Information Center should contact the UMass representative.

Williams Again Jailed For Ruining Draft Files

Suzanne Williams of Leverett, is being held in a Rochester, N.Y. jail in lieu of $100,000 bail. She was arrested September 6 in Rochester and charged with breaking and entering the Justice Building and destroying records.

A total of eight people, including Miss Williams, were arraigned Monday on six charges before U.S. District Court Justice Harold Burke.

Miss Williams is currently on probation after serving eighteen months in a federal women's correctional institution after pouring paint over Selective Service files in Boston two years ago.

An avowed pacifist, she has been arrested several times for participating in non-violent civil disobedience while protesting the war against Vietnam and American militarism.

After successfully evading capture for destroying the Boston files, Miss Williams called a press conference to admit her participation in the action. She made clear that the act was not one of vandalism. She claimed that she and her companion had destroyed the files in an effort to restore freedom of choice to draft-eligible young men who were enmeshed in the nation's war machine.

Miss Williams is a graduate of Amherst Regional High School. She has lived at, and was active in, the New England Committee for Non-Violent Action in Voluntown, Conn.

NES Tutors Begin Recruiting

Education through involvement is the theme of the Northern Educational Service tutorial program this year. There will be a meeting in the Student Union Ballroom at 7:30 PM tonight (Sept. 16, 1970) for all interested students committed enough to tutor once a week in economically deprived areas of Springfield.

The N.E.S. organizational structure, working closely with Springfield people, hopes to provide the necessary assistance to help tutors with problems this year. However, to make these resources available for tutor use, help is desparately needed.

If you desire to participate in a unique educational experience or to join in an organization that means to establish creative education in Springfield, please attend the N.E.S. Tutor Recruitment meeting.

Hijack Roundup

Hijacker Shot By Passenger

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - A hijacker who said he wanted to go to North Korea tried to take over a Trans World Airlines 707 jetliner Tuesday but was critically wounded by a fellow passenger after a tense hour on a San Francisco airport runway.

The hijacker was identified as Donald Irwin, 28, Reseda, Calif., a greeting card artist. He was hit in the lower right abdomen with a .38 caliber pistol bullet fired over the head of seated passengers by Robert D. DeNisco, 34, a Brink's Inc. guard from Brooklyn, N.Y., who chanced to be aboard.

No one else was injured among the 55 passengers and 8 crew members.

The U.S. attorney's office identified the man as Irwin and said a federal charge of air piracy would be filed against him.

Herbert Elvander, a deputy sheriff who entered the plane after the shooting, said the hijacker's gun appeared to be a track starter's pistol, rather than a weapon.

Irwin was reported holding his own after surgery at Peninsula Hospital.

The drama began at 4:55 a.m. TWA Flight 15, from New York via Chicago and Los Angeles to San Francisco, had just taken off from Los Angeles.

Stewardess Sandy Adamson, 24, Kansas City, said a man whom she had seen on previous flights came aboard at Los Angeles and sat in a window seat of the coach section.

"He handed me a note," she said. "It was dark, so I went to the end of the cabin where I could read it. The note said he was a hijacker who wanted to go to North Korea, that he had a gun and nobody would be hurt if we followed instructions."

She showed the note to another of the four stewardesses, then returned to the man and asked if he were serious.

"He said yes and waved a gun," she said. "I asked if he wanted to go to the cockpit and he said no, anything he had to say he'd relay through me."

"After I convinced him that we would have to land in San Francisco for refueling," Miss Adamson said, "he told me he wanted all military and all parents with small children removed.

"I asked him why North Korea and he said he had business there. He was clean shaven, very nicely dressed. The only sign of nervousness was he was a chain smoker."

Peace officers hurried to the San Francisco airport, and TWA assembled an international flight crew.

Arab Press Demands

(By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS)

Arab guerrillas, laying down their terms for freeing 36 American and Israeli hijack hostages, said Tuesday they "cannot wait forever" for Western governments to meet their demands. The statement coincided with a disclosure that the guerrillas may have found a fortune on one of the planes hijacked last week.

In Zurich, a freed stewardess from the Swissair jetliner blown up by the guerrillas said the Arabs took from the plane $690,000 in currency being sent from Swiss banks to New York.

Ursula Geiger said Capt. Fritz Schreiber was driven blindfolded into the desert after the DC8 was parked at the Jordanian airstrip and told her later his captors threatened to kill him unless he told them where the money was hidden. Schreiber is among three members of the Swissair crew still being held hostage.

Rt. Rev. Msgr. Jean Rodhain, president of the Roman Catholic welfare organization Caritas Internationalis, indicated that his efforts to secure release of the hostages had failed.

Panthers Exchange Fire With New Orleans Cops

NEW ORLEANS, La.(AP) - Black militants exchanged gun fire with a heavily armed police contingent near a Negro housing project Tuesday until tear gas drove them from a barricaded white frame house. Seven persons were wounded.

The militants - 12 young men and two girls - were members of the Black Panthers and the National Committee to Combat Fascism.

Police said the militants used high powered rifles, automatic weapons and handguns against the officers. Officers said they found at least 10 rifles and several handguns inside, as well as several hundred rounds of ammunition.

"More power to the people," the youths screamed as they were led coughing from the building, handcuffed and put into a patrol wagon. "More power to the black people," one girl said.

The group had used the building as a headquarters for some weeks and were kept under surveillance. But trouble developed late Monday night when police said two men were pistol whipped in Panther headquarters before the two escaped.

Later, Police Supt. Clarence Giarrusso said the Panthers fired on a patrol car and injured two officers. Giarrusso described it as a "systematic reign of terror."

Giarrusso, Mayor Moon Landrieu and U.S. Atty. Gerald Gallinghouse huddled all through the night, deciding to wait for daylight rather than go into the area.

After dawn, a big police convey surrounded the area, located on the eastern edge of the city not far from shipyards and other industrial installations.

Officers, wearing bulletproof vests, were equipped with arms ranging from machine guns to shotguns affixed with bayonets.

Growing Up Absurd

It's always interesting to hear UMass administrators talk about the master plan for the university that will have 30,000 students here by 1980. It's especially interesting while contemplating tripled dorm rooms, dining commons lines a quarter mile long, traffic jams stretching throughout all main arteries to campus, and bulging classrooms.

Now, these administrators talk easily of crowding 1500 additional students onto campus each year. They don't have to live in student rooms, or eat student food. And you'd think they'd begin to realize that the master plan is madness as they wait in their cars for an hour each evening, on the way to the club.

The fact of the matter is that, setting all arguments for the financial necessity of that 30,000 figure aside as so much bull, the fact remains, that this university can not grow much more and continue to function as the quality university as it purports to be.

It seems that pure size is the only yardstick for the judging of the quality of this university. The logic of making 30,000 people live at each other throats for the sake of saying "We're the largest state university in the east," is perverted.

There is also the slight fact that the town of Amherst is in the midst of sinking under the rubble of UMass undergraduates because of this insane growth. Amherst housing is deteriorating swiftly, because of forced overcrowding. The traffic situation is obvious. The ecological balance of a once fertile and beautiful valley is being sapped by this coagulating, expanding monolith known as UMass.

If I were an Amherst resident, I'd get a big segment of my neighbors and tell good old UMie to tail off her growth because UMie is but a squatter upon some good Amherst land. And if I were a state legislator (god forbid I'd ever wear white sox), I'd realize that the good old master plan should be fazed out and instead, spend the millions to uplifting the situations for the existing 20,000.

The trouble is, the town of Amherst residents are getting rich off of UMass and the state legislature still thinks this is still Massachusetts Aggie State College.

Meanwhile, thinking ahead, where in hell are 1500 more people going to fit in 1971. Eh, Planning Office?

What Happens To People

I'm just sitting here in front of the typewriter, wondering what I should write about. Somehow I don't feel like calling for anything today. Arousing controversy leaves me indifferent at the moment, and I'm not feeling particularly humorous. While I've been sitting here, though, a guy came in looking for Gil Salk. He gave me something about which to write. Often my topic makes me angry; tonight it makes me very sad.

The guy who came in got his draft notice today. Maybe you react differently, but to me getting drafted means getting shipped to Southeast Asia to kill and be killed. Last spring we went on strike because of Southeast Asia. People still die there every day. I haven't the words just now to express the horror of what happens in VietNam; what I want to talk about is what it does to people twelve thousand miles away.

In my travels this summer I met a lot of people hitchhiking. All kinds of people, male, female, young, middle, old, black, white, yellow, educated, uneducated, urban, rural, Easter, Southern, Midwestern, Californian. Dopers and drinkers, and many who did both, as well as some who did neither. In twelve hour conversations and on thirty mile rides, everyone talked about VietNam. The old people were bitter, bewildered; the young, bitter, bewildered, belligerent, beaten, brainwashed, infuriated, obstinate, saddened, overwhelmed, and draft eligible. For the college age American male (me, for example), one of life most important questions is how to avoid being placed in a situation where it is illegal to refuse to kill. That is fucking sick, and any country which can allow itself into such a position has cause for shame above and beyond the Calvinist norm. The United States of America Inc. is today an armed gang of vigilantes, running around in Asia killing people while flying my flag. But I'm not mad today, I'm sad.

Dave is a good friend of mine. He spent the summer counselling draft fugitives in Canada. He was helping people solve the immediate problem, the draft, but he found that the draft in turn created other problems.

One young American had come to Canada, and to Dave. Dave tried to find him a job, but couldn't

One day the guy got two letters, one from his mother, the other from his fiancee. His mother's letter disowned him; the girl's letter informed him that "she couldn't marry anyone who isn't a PATRIOT" (my italics). He came to see Dave to see if a job had materialized. One hadn't.

He walked outside of Dave's office, drew a gun to his temple, and with a bullet, resolved for himself the dilemma in which he had been placed because of the obscene and futile war. The bullet went through his head, and for one more young American, life had come to an early end. Dave woke up in the hospital. His psyche will be scarred with the memory for life.

That's what it does to people. Does it seem worthwhile? To anyone?

Allies All

WASHINGTON - It was the end of the 1970 fall fashion season, and the news on all fronts was bad. The Fuehrer, deep down in his bunker underneath the Seventh Avenue Subway, was reading reports from all parts of the country in rage and frustration.

"Mein Fuehrer," one of his aides told him, "Seventh Avenue is in ruins. The midi-length skirt has bombed. All is lost. We must surrender."

"Don't tell me we have lost the war," the Fuehrer, screamed. "We will counterattack. We will punish all those who refuse to wear the midi-skirt!"

Another aide came in. "Good news, mein Fuehrer," he said. "Bonwit Teller reports it has just sold two midis today."

The Fuehrer went over to his map and stuck two pins in it. "That makes 234 midi-skirts sold this year. I told you the women would go for it."

Another aide came in with a telegram. "Mein Fuehrer, Saks Fifth Avenue has surrendered to the mini forces. So has Macy's Gimbels and Bloomingdales. We cannot hold out much longer. Perhaps we should issue a communique saying that it makes no difference what length a woman's skirt is this year as long as she's happy."

"Never! Never!" screamed the Fuehrer, kicking over chairs and tables. "I decreed that women would wear midis and they will wear midis, whether they like them or not."

The aides looked at each other in hopelessness. The Fuehrer's mistress, who was playing solitaire, looked up from her game, "Perhaps it may be better, liebchen, to give in."

The Fuehrer looked at his mistress and screamed, "Yes, and if I surrender I will be tried as a war criminal and they will hang me. They will say I brought ruin to all of them. The answer is, 'No.' My plan to bring order to the fashion world will truimph. If they do not listen to me, there will be anarchy in the land, What word from Sears, Roebuck?"

An aide came in with the new Sears, Roebuck catalogue.

"They've replaced the midi with pantsuits," the aide said.

Traitors! They will pay for this," the Fuehrer yelled as he started tearing the catalogue to bits. "I made Sears, Roebuck and I will destroy them."

The telephone rang and an aide grabbed it. "Yes, yes. Good, good." Then he turned to the Fuehrer. "It's Orbach's. They have a customer in the store and she's looking at midis."

The Fuehrer started to dance a jug. "The tide is turning," he cried.

"What's that?" the aide said. "Oh." He hung up the phone. "Her husband came in and dragged her out of the store."

The Fuehrer's mistress began to cay. His Alsatian dog, sleeping in the corner, whined.

The teleprinter rang.

An aide went over to the machine. "I. Magnin's, Marshall Field, Lord & Taylor, and J.C. Penney have collapsed. They're all holding fire sales of the midi."

The Fuehrer sank down in his chair. 'That does it. No more Mr. Nice Guy."

The Fuehrer's mistress took a bottle of cyanide capsules out of the drawer and placed one in each cupcake. Then she called over the dog and gave him a cupcake. He ate it eagerly and rolled over dead.

Shw poured out two cups of coffee. She handed the Fuehrer a cupcake. He looked at her and said, "Liebchen, you believed in the midi, didn't you?"

The mistress took the other cupcake, "With my legs, what choice did I have?"

Abortion Law Tragedy

The tragic death of a coed from a nearby school as the aftermath of an attempted abortion and the weekend visit of Bill Baird were a grim coincidence which once again focused the attention of much of the University community on the problem of abortions. Again, we may predict, emotions will soar, indignation will rise, rhetoric will become sharper, and the gulf will widen between those who continue to defend time-honored standards and those who insist that all which is not new is worthless or irrelevant. Ultimately, the heat of passions may subside as new issues take their place at center-stage and we shall find that some new light has been shed. Each time the discussion is intensified there is hope that a few more adults will have ventured from the comfort of their cherished moral strongholds and may even have dared to share with students the bold search for a code of action which is more closely related to reality and for a legal framework which meets today's needs.

Change will come, as it has in the past, even in Massachusetts. Only four years ago it became legal to provide birth control information and devices to MARRIED women -- and now a federal court has ruled that the Massachusetts law prohibiting similar services for unmarried women is discriminatory. Unreal and essentially punitive restrictions on abortions will almost surely have a similar fate in the near future.

In the meantime, what of the present and the couples who during this year will know personally the anguish and fear of the couple in Holyoke? It would be comforting to hope, but unreal to believe, that prevention would be uniformly successful. We as a community, therefore, must be prepared to recognize the needs of those among us who are troubled and to meet these needs effectively with resources which are available.

For some couples faced with an unplanned pregnancy, all that is needed is support for their belief in each other and encouragement that parental wrath over premature marriage will be much less severe than they, in their anxiety, can picture. Marriage which had been planned will be hastened, but no serious problem will follow. For others the need will be for information that now, even in Massachusetts, a safe, legal abortion can be obtained for adequate reasons of health (usually psychiatric). The number of therapeutic abortions performed in Massachusetts has probably increased four or five times in two years. Others need to learn of legal opportunities for abortion which are now readily available in New York, less than two hours away.

The especially tragic feature of the recent death is that TODAY IT DIDN'T NEED TO HAPPEN. Somehow the couple, whose affection was so binding that they had the will to share a bold and dangerous plan to solve their problem, should have had access to better information. Perhaps most important, they should have been able to share a trust in some resource in their school communities (one of which was UMass) from which they could have gotten help. At some time in the future abortion services will be more readily and openly available; in the meantime, there ARE adults in the University community who can be trusted and who are eager to be helpful in finding answers to problems.

The staff of the Health Services solicits the trust and confidence of students. We aim to help anyone face a health problem and find an answer which is satisfactory, practical, and consistent with self-respect. We may not always succeed, but we are always willing to try.

From The People Who Brought You Humanae Vitae . . .

From the earliest days, virginity has been a strong Christian ideal. St. Paul said that it was "better to marry than to burn" but clearly regarded celibacy as the preferable state.

Last week, the Vatican's Sacred Congregation of Divine Worship took a step to give new life to this ancient ideal. It introduced a rite whereby young women could vow to remain chaste while still remaining in secular society.

Under the plan, a woman would publicly consecrate herself to virginity and to the missionary enterprise of the church. The act would require the authorization of her bishop, and provision is made for dispensation in grave cases.

The new rite, which is part of the continuing liturgical reform of the church, was seen by Catholic leaders here as another indication of Rome's concern over the state of sexual morality today. The Vatican has frequently spoken out against pornography, for instance, and repeatedly called for high sexual ideals.

The move also makes sense in light of the decline in the number of young girls entering convents. Although this will obviously do nothing to ease the nun shortage since "Christian virgins" will not necessarily be taking positions like parochial schoolteachers, it will enhance the spiritual possibilities inherent in secular life--a major Vatican Council theme--and it will correct historical misconception, fostered by the church, that virginity, or in more general terms, chastity, is somehow the peculiar prerogative of those who enter religious vocation.

At least one theologian in Rome suggested that the move was the Vatican's answer to women's liberation. He noted that young people today are keenly interested in "asceticism, purity and poverty" and added, "Maybe the Christian virgin will be the genuinely liberated women."

Guns On Campus

(If you agree with this letter, please clip it out and send it to Chancellor Oswald Tippo, Chancellor's Office, Whitmore Administration Building.)

Dear Chancellor Tippo:

The other day we received your memo stating that it is the official policy of the University to permit only campus police to bring fire arms on campus. We ask you to revise this policy.

We, too, want a murder-free campus. But in speaking of the recent "tragic occurrences on some campuses," you imply that these occurrences have been caused by students with guns. This is false: the murders have all been committed by the police or National Guard. Why should anyone have any faith in the non-violence of armed policemen? What your policy says to us is only that you want a monopoly on violence at this university. But not only does such a monopoly belie the pretence of university neutrality; it is impossible to attain. Guns will breed guns.

Besides, under what situations would campus police need to be armed? In the event of armed threat to human life, it would be enough that police have access to a locked cache of arms. If campus police refuse to work under these conditions, the university community will develop its own peace-keeping mechanism.

The Strike last Spring consistently supported the principle of non-violence. The policy affirmed by the Strike, as well as by various representative campus bodies, was that no firearms be permitted on campus in the hands of students, police, or anyone else. The Strike WAS non-violent, largely because police did not foment trouble (in contrast to Ohio State, for example). We ask that this policy be adopted by the University now: NO guns on campus.

Respectfully,
THE COLLECTIVE

New students on campus have several moral decisions to make, one of which is; Am I a pacifist? Am I against physical force of any kind in settling a dispute? If so, would I turn my other cheek upon being physically accosted? Is anything worth physically fighting for; friends, family, ideals, beliefs, morals, equality, self, or even country?

If you find in your heart that you would fight for any of the above, in a physical, possibly violent manner, with fists or even guns--YOU ARE NOT A PACIFIST!

But what about Peace and social harmony? Here "You" are at a university where the people cry out, "Let it be now!" Our environment here at the University of Massachusetts is very conducive to deep thoughts upon each person's responsibilities to society. Any person attending this liberal northern institution of higher learning must develop a human awareness of what is going on in the worlds around him. This is the true greatness of U.Mass.

Now I ask, "What about the military on campus?" If you are not a true pacifist, you must believe in some force under some situation, military or otherwise. Nuclear warfare being infeasible, for the conventional protection of the United States during the remaining years of this century, I ask; What should we have?

Should this force be an elite, hard, unquestioning, kill corps, regimented and unchangeable? NO! If you are an American Humanist like myself, you probably want a sincere, humane military for the United States, with officers exposed to and trained in a humanistic northern university environment as opposed to a closed military reservation or academy. I do not contend that such officers would be better under fire, but I do assert that in everyday human relations, their humane qualities and education would show through. Ego trips would be fewer and everyday relations would be smoother.

It is a shame that a few threatening groups on this campus are trying to dictate to the rest of us, how and where our military is to be trained and educated. If R.O.T.C. is pushed off campus, we will all be losing perhaps the most needed force within the American military--the American Humanists.

Acts Of Love

Suzi Williams has been busted again, and the pervading sense of national repression sinks ever deeper into our consciousness. She is being held on $100,000 bail for destroying paper--paper which inevitably leads some young men to their deaths, leaves children fatherless and wives without their husbands. Paper which could force your brother or boyfriend to kill somebody else's father, brother, son, husband, or boyfriend, or to be killed himself.

She tried to free some from this fate, at least symbolically, and now she's in jail, penned like an animal, and it will cost $100,000 to buy her temporary freedom. Sure, if guilty, she broke the law, but it was essentially an act of humanitarianism. She broke the law, but was her crime really 100 times worse than assault an battery? Is she really potentially more dangerous than an

It is tragic that American "justice" has deteriorated to the point that somebody accused of breaking the law to preserve lives is held on 1000 times more bail than a man accused of drunken driving and driving to endanger, who has been threatening lives on our highways.

I know Suzi, not well, but I know her.

She is not a violent person, and never has been. She has been jailed a number of times for opposing violence and the proliferation of the instruments of violence. She is not a saint; she has been wrong; but her acts are acts of love, and her motivation is a dream of peace growing out of peace. Yet our society, while still paying lip service to peace and brotherhood, can only respond to her with fear and the violence of imprisonment.

Suzi Williams has had the cloak of martyrdom forced upon her shoulders, and the American legal system has driven home another nail in the coffin of American justice.

SATF Funding Control Looms As Key Question

By PAT KING
Staff Reporter

As isolated as UMass may sometimes seem, it is not isolated from the financial problems that have hit the rest of the country. The Big Question this year is "Who controls the budget?" according to Student Senate President Glenn Elters.

The usual procedure for passing the Student Senate budget has been a "rubber-stamp" approval by the Administration and the Board of Trustees, although the final say is technically held by the Administration.

Complaints from parents about the $7.50 increase in the Student Activities Tax and the Student Strike last Spring have caused Chancellor Tippo to take a more strict position on the delegation of Student Tax funds. This is the first year that Tippo has exercised his control over the budget.

The Area Governments are feeling this change most. When Chancellor Tippo was only a Provost, a provision was passed to the effect that the Area Governments could make any change in their budgets without Administration approval. This eliminates the need for an approved budget. Money may be spent on On-Campus activities but Off-Campus Activities must be approved.

The catch here is that Tippo decides which activities classify as On-Campus. For instance, money may be delegated to the Belchertown volunteers, although it is technically an Off-Campus activity.

However, students trying to obtain money for busses to hear a left-wing political speaker would find it very difficult to get money, since Tippo would classify it as an Off-Campus activity, not eligible for Student Tax Funds.

Student Senate Treasurer Richard Verrochi sees this action as "hypocritical" and an attempt to repress the political and social involvement on the part of the students. Although the Administration currently controls the budget, the approaching elections will motivate quite a battle.

The first Student Senate meeting which will be open, to decide a strategy against the Administration will be held tonight in Room 162 of the Campus Center.

HEW Sets Funds For Study Of Educational Process

HEW's Office of Education has announced $700,000 in new awards under a basic research program that is seeking the answers to questions about the learning process that have long puzzled educators as well as parents.

The Office's National Center for Educational Research and Development (NCERD) is providing support for 13 projects that concentrate on such diverse areas as the relationship between a child's ability to verbalize and his adjustment to the classroom, the influence of cultural background on memory, and the basic abilities required for understanding and creativity in the arts.

"The findings from these projects will add to a growing body of knowledge about learning that is of inestimable value in providing quality education for all children," says Dr. Glenn C. Boerrigter who heads NCERD's Division of Elementary and Secondary Education Research.

Researchers at the University of California at Los Angeles, for example, will study the influence of prenatal protein deprivation on brain development and learning. Using laboratory animals, they will investigate what effect impaired brain development, due to poor nutrition, may have on succeeding generations. The research also will show whether special prenatal diets can bring about improved learning ability in the offspring.

Studies conducted by the National Bureau of Economic Research will address such questions as how formal education is translated into higher productivity; why it seems to yield greater economic gain for whites than nonwhites and nonwhite female than nonwhite males; and how various educational investments, such as teachers and classroom facilities, relate to later financial rewards.

A project at the University of Michigan will study 29 groups of students to evaluate areas of potential support and conflict between student characteristics and the expectations of large universities.

The Committee on Basic Research in Education, a special panel set up by the U.S. Office of Education, selected the 13 projects from among 66 proposals. The proposals were judged on the basis of their significance to education, economic efficiency, sound design, and the qualifications of the participating scientists.

Federal support for the projects is provided from the Cooperative Research funds for fiscal years 1970 and 1971. The Cooperative Research Act authorizes research, development, and dissemination to improve education at all levels.

Group Forms To Continue Strike Aims

The Radical Community Union has been formed to continue working and education basically around the 3 demands, that were the demands of the Student Strike; repression, complete and unilateral withdrawal from South East Asia and an end to university war complicity.

The Radical Community Union is a coming together of people of the community who are concerned with the struggles of Women's liberation, Black liberation, and the needs and the rights of every member of every community to have a say in how that community is governed. In the case of this university this means that those members of the community that are not represented in the formation and the excution which defines their lives must band together and demand those rights.

The RCU is a vehicle for bringing radical speakers, films, guerilla theater groups to campus, and for providing a base for campus activity.

This group, the Radical Community Union, is calling an open meeting this Thursday evening at 7:30 in the Campus Center auditorium.

Parking Laws Announced

Beginning today, all unregistered motor vehicles on campus will be ticketed.

Due to the great increase in commuter traffic this year, vehicle registration will terminate at 4pm on Friday, Sept. 18.

Any person who does not have his car registered at that time must remove his car from campus, with the exception of those who want to park in the campus center garage, or his vehicle will be ticketed.

The fine for an unregistered vehicle on campus is $5 per citation.

Appeals for lot assignment will be entertained by the Parking Coordinator, 105 Hampshire House after Oct. 1.

Library Handbook Hits The Stands

The 1970 edition of the Library Handbook was published late in August. This year the Handbook comes in two versions: the basic Handbook intended for undergraduates and the Handbook plus supplementary pages containing information useful to faculty members and graduate students. Students in the biological and geological sciences will want a "Guide to Morrill Library" also. Copies of this guide are available at the Service Desk in Morrill Library.

For students who want to take a closer look at Goodell Library two kinds of tours of the building are possible. Pamphlets outling a self-guided "Walking Tour of Goodell Library" are available in the lobby and a conducted tour will be offered at the following times: Monday and Tuesday, at 10 a.m. September 14, 15, 21, 22, 28, 29, October 5, 6 and Wednesday and Thursday at 2 p.m. September 16, 17, 23, 24, 30, October 1, 7, 8. Meet the guide at the Information and Reference Desk.

The Universities In Trouble

(Ed. note: The following was reprinted from the N. Y. Times 9-14-70)

By FRED M. HECHINGER

At the start of the academic year, university presidents are struggling uphill in the hope they are not climbing a volcano. Even if one rejects the tragedy at Wisconsin as a preview of new levels of violence, there are few illusions that the shattered academic community can easily be repaired.

Higher education is in deep financial trouble. Some marginal institutions are on the verge of going under. Recession and reduced government research are hitting even the best-endowed universities. Princeton, for instance, sees its deficit rising to over $2,000,000, Columbia above $11 million. Public institutions face fiscal reprisals by angry legislatures.

In response to escalating campus violence, university presidents are planning security as though they were bank presidents. President James M. Hester of New York University said last week that the institution's security staff is being enlarged and "given improved training for dealing with unusual circumstances." At Wisconsin and elsewhere, campus police are now armed. Several university presidents employ bodyguards.

The wooden studies at Stanford's Center for the Behavioral Sciences, which were destroyed by firebombs last term, have been rebuilt with asbestos reinforcements. Researchers keep duplicates of their date off-campus. Just as classified research is properly being reduced, campuses are forced to impose new restrictions on themselves in fear of their own guerrillas.

ENDING REQUIREMENTS

Amid much faculty floundering, student pressure for reform of outdated academic programs has increasingly led to elimination of all requirements. Those who know little about academic history see this as the new freedom; others remember that the elective system was originally abandoned because it led to intellectual fragmentation.

The groping toward a redistribution of powers, with overtones of participatory democracy, suffers less from student irresponsibility than from the faculties' inability to help administrators run the campuses. Faculty bodies are used to dealing leisurely and conservatively with academic routines--poor preparation for crisis action.

University presidents are squeezed between two radicalized forces--the student-faculty left and trustees driven to greater conservatism by a hostile world outside. Liberals, such as James Perkins at Cornell and Fred Harrington at Wisconsin, are forced out; others like M.I.T.'s Howard Johnson, leave in weariness. Roger Heyns, at Berkeley, suffered a heart attack this summer after a vituperative Regents meeting. A president with an impeccable record of liberal activism said: "Each of us is on a tightrope. No matter how flawless our record, one false step, and we're down and out."

State legislatures have begun to spell out the number of hours a professor must teach or suffer a pay cut. There are veiled threats in Ohio that the Legislature may react to disruptions by shutting down entire institutions.

REASON AND PERSUASION

It is to the students' credit that they hate war and social injustice, and the brightest spot on the horizon is the determination of a growing minority to try to reform the political system rather than hit the universities. But too many campus radicals have lost sight of the intellectuals' function to reason and persuade. Their arrogance plays into the hands of reactionary anti-intellectualism. The sight of universities unable to govern themselves, moreover, has devalued their advice on how to govern the nation.

Radical students' ignorance about labor has shattered dreams of a student-worker alliance. The disadvantaged whom the radicals seek to organize need precisely what affluent revolutionaries despise -- the skills which universities offer to society as the employer.

A few weeks ago, during a confidential student-faculty meeting at a major university, a militant black student asked the white radicals: "What are your victories? You've smashed a lot of windows. That's scholarships taken away from my people."

The question, at the start of the academic year, is whether there is a new will to re-create a center that can hold; whether a coalition representative of non-revolutionary students and faculty will join administrations in building a more stable community.

Such a coalition depends heavily on the trustees--private or public--to form a protective shield against outside repression. But it must also return to the business of academic reforms which have been forgotten amid dreams of largely irrelevant victories in the exercise of illusory campus powers.

Gliding For Fun And Credit

Pilgrim Airport, in co-operation with the Phys. Ed. department is offering gliding for 2 credits in the P. E. 185 course. Located on River Road in Hatfield, the commercial gliding school at the airport offers complete instruction leading towards a gliner pilots license.

The school uses a Schweizer 2-33 sailplane, a two-place trainer, which is towed aloft by a Piper Super Cub. Once released, usually at an altitude of around three thousand feet, the sailplane seeks lift. Lift is usually created by upward movements of the air called thermals. Thermals are generated by radiational heating of such areas as fields, roads, forests and so on so that air over these areas rises at different rates. Wind flowing up over mountains and ridges also can provide good lift for soaring especially in the West where an altitude record of 46,000 feet was achieved over the Rocky Mountains.

Once a thermal is found the sailplane stays in it by finding the center and circling around it. At speeds of 45 to 50 miles per hour the ride is smooth and comfortable.

Pilgrim Airport is proving to be a very adequate training ground for gliders. According to flight instructor Joe Dalton, flights of more than two and a half hours have been made as well as altitude gains of more than six thousand feet.

Gliding offers its devotees frustration, fascination, anticipation, and elation. It is a sport which combines physical and mental skill into a most satisfying whole.

Simplicity is the key to the cockpit of a glider.

Fine Arts Council Sets Varied Concert Series

The UMass Fine Arts Council will offer students, the University community and the general public an extensive professional program in the performing arts during the 1970-71 season, the council announced yesterday.

A brochure describing the 40 events programmed for the ensuing season has been mailed to over 25,000 students, faculty, and staff at the Amherst campus and others from throughout western Massachusetts.

The 1970-71 program is divided into five series: Popular music, Chamber music, the Celebrity Series, theatre and modern dance. The Popular Music Series will include a three-day residence by the Cannonball Adderly Quintet and two programs each by folk singer Dave Van Ronk, the Gary Burton Quartet and Dizzy Gillespie Quintet. A feature of this series will be the informal seminars attached to each of the engagements.

The Celebrity Series will include visits to the campus by such world famous artists and ensembles as Nathan Milstein, violinist; Virtuosi di Roma; Boston Philharmonic under the direction of Leon Kirchner and featuring as piano soloist the young American Murray Perahia; a fully-staged production of Mozart's "Don Giovanni" by the Goldovsky Grand Opera Theatre; and a recital by the brilliant piano virtuoso Byron Janis.

Each of the Celebrity Series events will be given on two successive evenings and in some cases will feature an entirely different program for the second concert.

The Chamber Music Series planned for the coming year has an international flair as a result of the visits by the Soviet Union's leading quartet, the Borodin String Quartet, and the Tel Aviv String Quartet from Israel. Lyuba Edlina, a leading Russian pianist, will appear with the Borodin and Yona Ettlinger, principal clarinetist of the Israel Philharmonic, will perform as soloist with the Israeli ensemble.

Also appearing at the University on this series will be the Juilliard String Quartet, The Festival Winds, an ensemble of nine woodwind virtuosi, and the LaSalle String Quartet.

A complimentary brochure describing these programs in detail is available from the University's Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202.

IN SHERLOCK HOLMES – The great detective (Geoffrey Keller '73) and the Emperor of Crime, Professor Moriarty (Robert Murphy '73) wrestle for the possession of a firearm in the Amherst Summer Theater production based upon the stories of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. Repeat performances are this Friday, Saturday and Sunday at Kirby Theater, Amherst College. For reservations phone 542-2278 or 542-2277.

Romeo And Juliet Set For Smith

Star-crossed lovers in a hostile world, with fate hanging over them like wings of death - this is the theme to be explored in the coming production of "Romeo and Juliet" at Smith College. The play opens Wednesday September 16 and will have 12 performances in Theatre 14.

According to director Stephen Macht, of the Smith theatre faculty, "Romeo and Juliet" is a play about fate or pre-destination. Romeo and Juliet are fated to die because of the hate between their families. The stars that are "crossed" are Mars, representing war, and Venus, which stands for love. The characters can only play predetermined roles in the working out of their destiny.

These astrological values are represented in the set, designed by Richard Keshishian, Smith's costume designer. The slanted platform on which the actors will play is painted with concentric circles and astrological symbols. These are meant to suggest the microcosm and the macrocosm - different levels of meaning for the plot - or the eternal, timeless nature of the story.

The costumes have also been designed to suggest this timelessness. They will represent several different periods and styles, from roman togas for the ball scene to modern dress for some of the characters. The unisex look will also be used; for example, Montague and Lady Montague wear similar styles. All of the costumes are in shades of black, white, and gray, except for the ball scene which will include some bright colors.

In addition, to add to the sense of fate, several of the characters will wear masks. There will also be four actors who appear in larger-than-life costumes with five inch high shoes, similar to costumes found in the classic Greek theatre.

According to the director, the staging and costumes are meant to convey a sense of "alienation", as in the theories of German playwright Bertolt Brecht. By allowing the audience to consider the themes of the play without being totally involved in the story, he hopes to use Shakespeare to reflect modern problems.

"Romeo and Juliet" will be presented September 16-19 and 23-26 at 8 pm and September 19, 20, and 27 at 2 pm, in the Center for the Performing Arts. Admission is $2.00, students $1.50. For tickets or information, call the box office, 584-2700, ext. 840; open weekdays 12-5 and one hour before performances.

Two Hitchcock Films Featured

By MARTIN PURUIS
Staff Reporter

The Art History Group will present a double feature - - "The Thirty-nine Steps," directed by Alfred Hitchcock, and "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," a German Expressionist film made in 1919 tonight in Thompson 104 at 8:30 and 11:00.

"The Thirty-nine Steps," made in 1935, was the first of Hitchcock's British films to be distributed in the United States, and he never surpassed this effort in either the intricacy of plot machinations or the complex use of sound motifs. It is the Hitchcock of the mid-thirties who has become the model for French film-makers, Godard, Truffaut, Chabrol, and not the Hitchcock of the slick American melodrama that appeared later.

Robert Donat heads the cast as he tries to outwit an international spy organization headed by the mysterious man with the missing finger.

"The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," directed by Robert Wiene, became an international sensation after the war for its imaginatively stylized sets and acting. The reduction of naturalistic gestures and creation of dream-like, distorted environments for the action establish a psychotic view of the world without a solid reference.

This proto-type of all horror films makes it difficult to tell whether the madness lies in the subject matter of the story told by the narrator or in the narrator

French Like Education

PARIS - For the first time in history, France next year will spend more on education than on defense.

The Cabinet last week approved a national budget providing $5.4 billion for education and $5.24 for defense.

Defense spending is still rising, but by a lesser amount than education - six per cent against 14 per cent. The budget shows overall spending and receipts balanced at the equivalent of $31 billion.

10:10 Classes Cancelled; Convocation Set Today

Opening Convocation, the ceremony marking the formal beginning of the 1970-71 academic year at UMass will be held today at 10:10 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Chancellor Oswald Tippo will give his opening address to the academic community and present the annual Distinguished Teacher Awards. All members of the University community and the public are invited.

The traditional academic procession of robed faculty and staff will begin the convocation. The procession will be led by the bearer of the University mace, William H. Ross. Traditionally, this honor is given to the faculty member who has held the Distinguished Teacher Award for the longest time. Dr. Ross, Professor of physics, won the award in 1962.

Three Distinguished Teacher Awards will be given for "manifest excellence in the art of teaching and outstanding devotion to the cause of education." The awards are made by an all-University committee and carry with them a $1,000 stipend.

Rabbi Martin Kowal, chaplain to Jewish students, will give the invocation and Dr. Robert L. Cluckstern, acting provost, will be master of ceremonies. Student Senate President Glenn Elters will speak.

Astrological Forecast

by Sydney Omarr

The Taurus man prides himself on being open-minded. But if you wave a red flag in front of the bull, very few can predict the consequences. Taureans are loving, affectionate — but they do feel their way is the right way. Any contradiction of this thesis breeds distemper.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Areas previously settled show signs of disturbance. A friend could become involved in litigation. Keep guard up against being sold bill of goods.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Some restrictions are necessary. Abide by rules designed for your own benefit, safety. Capricorn individual figures prominently. Long-distance call proves significant.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Spark of temper threaten long-standing friendship. No one is going to hand you anything on proverbial silver platter. Get fair share, but also give others a chance.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): New approach is most likely to succeed. Some in positions of authority act in eccentric manner. Ride with the tide. Be independent without being arrogant.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Take care with what you put in writing. Caution should be keynote, especially during travel. Some of your philosophical concepts are subject to sudden change.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Financial prospects are good if you are willing to utilize unorthodox methods. Study Leo messages. Refuse to be trapped by outmoded concepts. Key is versatility.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Get on with creative endeavors. You can break through red tape. One who previously opposed you becomes ally. Be gracious. You are due for some publicity.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): One connected with special group, organization provides inspiration. Be receptive. Aid offered is genuine. Motive is sincere. Respond accordingly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Gain indicated by sale of property you developed. This is time to make necessary adjustments, especially in domestic area. Accent security. Strive to reach potential.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Work behind the scenes. Do some personal research. You will have to stand on facts — truth will make you confident. Some, usually reliable, act in unorthodox manner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): You may have to make some quick moves. Key is to have alternate methods at hand. One who relies upon you studies performance charts. Message will be clear.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Protect asset. If not wary, you lose something of value in transit. Key is to handle valuables yourself. Depending on others now might be a costly proposition.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are introspective, capable of standing up for your rights — but it is spiritual strength which is keynote of your character. Once you overcome tendency to brood, you will be a world beater. Domestic adjustment, including change of residence, is on horizon.

BOB HANSEN

Hansen Stars in Minors

Former UMass baseball great Bob Hansen has been making his presence felt in minor league baseball over the summer. In only his first experience in professional baseball, Hansen advanced all the way to Triple A, performing for the last month of the season with Portland of the Pacific Coast League, an affiliate of the Milwaukee Brewers.

He appeared in 33 games for Portland and batted .323. Not bad, he also cracked six homers, drove in 24 runs and collected 41 hits. During the last week of this month, Hansen will see action in the Arizona Instructional League, playing out of Tempe, Arizona.

Updating Redman Foes . . .

Most UMass Grid Opponents Open On Saturday; BC Has Wisdom Woes

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Two of UMass' football opponents this year, Buffalo and Holy Cross, started their seasons last weekend and both came up losers, the Bulls by a 14-7 count to Ball State and the Crusaders by a 26-0 mark to Army.

An additional five foes initiate their campaigns on Saturday as do the Redmen. Boston University will host Colgate, Connecticut and Vermont will oppose each other, Boston College will be at Villanova for a televised biggie and Maine will, of course be here as UMass' opening challenge.

The remaining three teams on the Redmen's schedule wait until Sept. 26 to start play, at which time Rhode Island will be at Brown, New Hampshire at Delaware, and Dartmouth will inaugurate its season by hosting UMass. Buffalo and Holy Cross will try to find winning formulae against Toledo and Temple respectively.

A look at the BU-Colgatetussle: Colgate is 0-1, having dropped one to Navy, 48-22...Red Raider coach Neil Wheelwright is a 1954 graduate of Springfield College...BU copped last fall's encounter, 20-0.. Colgate's record in 1969: 5-3-1... It runs out of the 'I' formation... That offense will be trying to crowd two receivers on one Terrier defender, which might produce some anxious moments for the inexperienced BU defense...Two Red Raiders to watch: quarterback Steve Goepel and tailback Don Flsher...Boston U. should take this one, it being the Terrier opener coming after a great '69 season.

Some words on the UConn-Vermont contest: Running against throwing in this one, what with U-Conn is invincible Vin Clements last autumn's affair, 26-6 and should win Saturday's tiff by about the same count.

A peek at the BC-Villanova tiff: Villanova has a new head coach, Lou Ferry, and a winning record, 1-0, after defeating Maryland a few days back, 21-3...The Wildcats clawed the Eagles in '69, 24-6, after BC had a 2-0 record and visions of an un-un season...How about this, though?...BC quarterback Frank Harris and his backup, Ray Rippman, have both been pestered by aching wisdom teeth...Harris had two wisdom teeth pulled last week and his gums are still stitched up...He has lost eight pounds because he hasn't been chewing solids; he should be ready on Saturday...Rippman hasn't had any wisdoms yanked but is on medication...This game will be regionally telecast by ABC-TV...In color [illegible], and with Fred Willis and Red Harris the Eagles should nip Villanova.

Some quickies on the Buffalo-Toledo match: Buffalo may well own a losing record by the time UMass plays it in two and a half weeks for the Bulls put their 0-1 record on the line against a Toledo team that was 11-0-0 in '69, including a 56-33 win in the Tangerine Bowl...Buffalo has one more encounter before hosting the Redmen, against Kent State...The Rockets are a balanced squad with 29 lettermen back and only 14 lost...The Bulls have Gene Nance, brother of Patriots' star fullback, Jim...G. Nance romped 98 yards on a kickoff for six of Buffalo's points...Toledo should take this one.

A ponderance over the Holy Cross-Temple face-off: Temple was 4-5-1 last year, beating all mediocre opponents and should set the stage for Crusader coach Bill Whitton's first victory as HC head coach...HC leads the series between the two clubs, 12-5-2.

AP Poll

Stanford, Miss. Climb In Standings

(AP) Stanford, a 34-28 winner over Arkansas last weekend, and Missouri, a 3-0 victory over Baylor, produced the only major shakeups in the first weekly college football poll of the Associated Press.

Arkansas' Razerbacks, rated No. 4 in preseason rankings, were bumped to No. 11. Atanford, preniously ranked 10th, took over the fourth spot and Missouri moved up one notch to No. 11 in the poll of football writers and broadcasters.

Ohio State, defending national champion Texas, and Southern California remained one-two-three. OSU and Texas were idle last weekend while Southern Cal defeated Alabama, 42-21.

Twenty four of the 40 voters picked Ohio State No. 1, giving the Buckeyes 728 points. Texas had six first place votes for 657 points while the Trojans accumulated only 644 points, including seven No. 1 votes.

Mississippi, ranked No. 5; Penn State, No. 7 and Michigan, No. 8, each received one first place vote.

Others in the Top Ten are Notre Dame, No. 6, and Nebraska, No. 9.

Rounding out the Top 20, in addition to Arkansas, are in order, Louisiana State, Kansas State, Florida, Houston, UCLA, West Virginia and Arizona State.

Alabama, South Carolina, beaten by Georgia Tech 32-30 and idle Auburn fell from the ranks. The only new comer was Georgia, also idle. There had been a tie for 20th in the preseason poll among Auburn, Oklahoma and West Virginia.

Black Return Would Hurt Team--Schwartzwalder

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) - Coach Ben Schwartzwalder, under civil rights fire in recent weeks, has spoken up in his own defense and indicated there is no way eight suspended black players can rejoin the squad and still have a football team at Syracuse University this season. Ending his long silence in an exclusive taped question - and-answer interview with The Associated Press, Schwartzwalder said "if the players come back on their terms now we would not have a season. I don't think the players we have would consider this a proper thing, to give way to players who have missed all this practice."

The 61-year old coach blamed the problems at Syracuse and elsewhere, on a "third party," which enters a situation and causes what he termed "group ism."

"A group of athletes went to a third party and discussed their problems with them, instead of discussing them with the football coach. This is where you later had serious problems."

He defended himself against the charges of racism by seven black players, who were suspended after they boycotted spring practice and then not invited to play in the fall. An eighth joined them later and all were suspended when they refused to sign a statement that included their taking full responsibility for the boycott.

"We never were conscious of racism," Schwartzwalder said, revealing that the present problems began two years ago when the Negro players were freshmen and sophomores.

He spoke of continuing to have Negroes on the team with "no racist feeling about letting this unpleasant situation affect our thinking in the future."

He admitted "differences of opinion" with black players, but emphasized that "if they hustle enough, if they are good enough, they are going to be playing."

Calling himself a "kind of benevolent dictator," he said he treated his players "pretty much as equals once they are on that field." He said he even gave the Negroes "a little special consideration" because of the difficult background from which many of them come, and because they are more "sensitive."

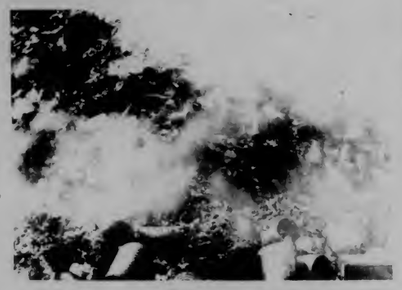
CEQ And Quint Plan High School Projects

RICHARD HANSON
Asst. News Editor

Mammoth pink and yellow human profiles confronted the campus, registration day. People passed through the Student Union lobby and looked and wondered.

The tall, graceful figures stood as a reminder for quality environment. They were the product of Quint Howard and other members of Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ), a group formed last year in preparation for "Earth Day."



CEQ and Quint are back this year. Funded by the Student Senate, they are "kicking off" a new year of "environmental" in-fighting, next Thursday, September 24 at the Campus Center Auditorium. The meeting is open to the entire campus and will introduce people to CEQ's latest strategy, the "action project group."

Quint explained the "action group" projects as "task oriented" groups; a group of students and faculty ect. will concentrate on a specific project which has already gone beyond the planning and "boring detail" stage. The projects will vary to include most anything but presently the projects in motion include a "High School Project", designed to set-up Environmental groups in high schools across the state and bring together high school students for workshops and conferences; a "Distinguished Ecology Lecture" series, which aims to bring experts from all areas of environmental concern to the campus; and a project, in the planning stages, which will organize a raft trip down the Connecticut River.

"CEQ has tried to lay the groundwork for projects which will produce results which can be seen", explained Quint. "The problem areas are not hard to find, but getting people to take relevent action is difficult. That is the type of action out "projects" will aim at," he continued.

Also planned for later in the fall are organization meetings for receiving undergraduate National Science Foundation grants for scientific research projects next summer (Sept. 30) and workshops for special projects.

Quint Howard can be reached by leaving a message in R.S.O. Box 347, Campus Center.

Initial Senate Meeting Stabilizes Summer Activity

DENISE MAGNELL
Monday Issue Editor

Student Senate President Glenn Elters opened the first Senate meeting of the semester last night remarking on Board of Trustee decisions over the summer.

"It appears that the Board and the administration have eroded the power we once had over financial affairs," he said, "It will be interesting to see what will happen with this year's budget."

The Board this summer had frozen Student Activity Tax Funds, because of money allotted groups concerned with social and political action outside the campus community.

Elters added that the Trustees had also reversed the decisions concerning ROTC made by the Student and Faculty Senates last year. The 4-year ROTC program has not been terminated as recommended by the Senates and courses taught by ROTC personnel may still be given academic credit, subject to approval by the Faculty Senate Subcommittee for Academic Affairs.

The hiring of a fulltime lawyer to assist students legal problems was announced to be Dick Howland, a graduate of Amherst College and Columbia School of Law. His office will be Room 107 in the Campus Center.

Regarding the Financial Policy Act, passed by the Senate last semester and waiting approval of the administration, Elters said he has been informed that major category changes in the policy will have to be authorized by the chancellor.

WMUA and the Collegian were both granted category changes in their budgets, WMUA for repairs and needed equipment and the Collegian for the hiring of a senior clerk typist in place of their junior clerk typist.

The Senate passed a bill assigning the Services Committee to work in conjunction with CEQ on a study of on-campus pollutants and what measures can be implemented to halt them.

Also, a motion instructing the Student Senate President to inform the freshmen and the parents of Student Association Life Insurance Program was passed.

Discussing the coming year President Elters remarked, "It will be a hard year. The chancellor seems to be expecting the worst ...he seems to be drawing a hard line, one he won't budge from. I just hope people act more organized than they did last year."

National Urban Policy Taught by UMass Prexy

By DON GLICKSTEIN
Staff Reporter

More than thirty students were waiting for the professor. Some of them had learned of the course from professors in the Government Department, others had remembered an announcement in one of last spring's Collegian, but most of the students had learned about Government 391 "National Urban Policy" by word of mouth. The class would be unlike any other on this campus, for it was taught by the President of the University, Robert Wood.

"It's the fascination of taking a course with the President of the University, as well as it being only two hours a week, not to mention the course itself and the guy's background." A student was explaining why he had signed up, and his reasons seemed to echo the sentiments of many others.

A pretty city planning major summed up her intents by saying, "I think Dr. Wood knows a lot that I want to know."

At least one member of the class, a psychology major, found himself in Government 391 more out of necessity than choice. His add-drop period had been 4 PM and everything he had wanted was closed, so the student added the first half-interesting course that was open.

Wearing a green plaid tie and looking younger than his photographs, Dr. Wood walked into the class and began by letting his students know where they stood in relationship to himself, stressing his "academic capacity" rather than his Presidential one.

"As a teacher, my comments are not privileged", Dr. Wood said. "I am best characterized as an anxiety-ridden optimist I am not a Pollyanna."

Wood believes that this country is in crisis, but he also feels that the country has the resources to cope with its problems.

"Problems can be solved", he added, "Difficulties have to be lived with."

In the course, Dr. Wood said that he would try to separate the "facts of the system and the values that it produces....I am an urbanist....I am not a theologian."

Wood's class took the form of a lecture with questions and discussion encouraged. As Dr. Wood went into topics such as community, population growth, and urban problems, it was evident that Wood not only "knew his stuff", but was capable of evoking favorable reactions from his students. It was also evident that the seminar would not become a two-hour a week gut course, but a serious inquiry, with an adequate amount of work, into the problems of governmental responses to urban needs.

This writer would like to congratulate Professor Wood on his decision to teach an undergraduate course, become involved with students, and his determination not to become an "invisible" President.

Workers Feeling GM Strike Costs

DETROIT AP - Business and workers who depend on money spent by General Motors Corp. were beginning to feel the increased pinch Wednesday of a strike against the giant auto maker. The company estimates the strike is costing more than $100 million each day in lost sales, lost wages to workers, lost tax revenues and lost revenues to suppliers. Some of GM's 39,000 suppliers already have laid off workers and more are making plans for such action if the strike continues more than a week or two.

The price of 1971 model cars is one area where the strike and the subsequent labor settlement, are expected to have great importance.

Tippo Elters Hilight , At UMass Convocation

By DAVID D. WILLIAMS
Tuesday Issue Editor

Speaking "candidly, frankly, and bluntly" Chancellor Oswald Tippo engaged in a little bit of house-keeping to start off the 1970-71 academic year.

The occasion was the 1970 University Convocation held yesterday in the Student Union Ballroom.

Tippo's address was prefaced by some off-the-cuff remarks by Student Senate President Glenn Elters. Elters said that there is evidence of a trend to activism on this campus and that students and faculty should question the role of the university in the war. The part that we all will play, according to Elters, depends on how far the University will let us go. He added, "We will come to that bridge very soon in the fall semester...All over the country people are crying for patience. We can no longer be patient. Students are really going to push this year." He issued a strong charge to students to "Get involved. This is the only way we can better the world. Don't blow it."

Chancellor Tippo then took over the podium and wished everyone a prosperous year. He moved very quickly into a litany of "repressive" legislation passed in other states as a result of student unrest in the spring. He spoke of a "growing disenchantment" of the taxpayers with the universities and said that UMass has been fortunate that none of the "repressive legislation" before the Massachusetts legislature was passed.

Turning his attention to last week's bomb scare and the new epithets painted on Herter Hall, Tippo issued a strong warning that all who engage in such activities will be dealt with severely. He also warned that any who disrupt the flow of business at the University, academic or any other work, will be endangering the entire University community by holding it open to repressive legislation. He said, "Certainly you'd have to be a moron to believe that the taxpayers of this state will continue to appropriate large sums of money if the University doesn't stay open to provide the education the money was intended for." Then in a parting shot Tippo said, "It is my sober judgement that this University will not long survive if we don't take immediate steps to keep our house in order."

Tippo then spoke at great length about some of the issues on campus that presented problems over the summer. Among these were the Princeton Plan, ROTC, the Student Activity Tax, the picketing code, job recruiting, research, building takeovers, freedom of speech, ecology, teacher evaluation, the Fine Arts Building, and, of course, the Campus Center. On that subject he said, "With reference to that architecture, Marcel Breuer is a distinguished architect and the experts agree on that."

The question of whether all students should be forced through the Activity Tax to pay for off-campus social action groups was raised by Tippo. Investigations into this matter are being conducted by various committees.

Tippo urged students to get involved with the University. He said, "There is a time and place for games but the main business of a university is education." He asked the faculty members to try to get to know at least 15 students during the semester. In this way, Tippo feels, the University will become less impersonal.

His long range dreams for this campus include: the Fine Arts Building, a decent Faculty Club, a day-care center, a dorm renovation program, and married student housing.

He concluded his remarks with a bit of philosophical woolgathering about his future as a Chancellor. It's not important to him if he is Chancellor for a month or a year but, he stressed, "I'm absolutely determined to call them as I see them. I will disapoint the extremists on the right and the extremists on the left."

The Chancellor's remarks concluded, Provost Gluckstern announced the recipients of the 1970 Distinguished Teacher Awards. They are Richard F. Garber, varsity lacrosse coach; Cadwell L. Ray of the Economics Dept. and William J. Wilson of the Sociology Dept.

The award is given each year for "manifest excellence in the art of teaching and outstanding devotion to the cause of education devotion to the cause of education." It carries a $1,000 stipend.

Mr. Garber, an associate professor of physical education, graduated from Springfield College in 1950 and holds an M. Ed. degree from Pennsylvania State University. He joined the faculty in 1953.

Dr. Ray is an assistant professor of economics and has done research and published articles on state and local finance. He graduated from Texas A. and M. with M.S. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Texas. Dr. Ray came to UMass in 1967.

Dr. Wilson is an associate professor of sociology who has lectured and written extensively on the black protest movement and other aspects of the black problem in America. He was a prime mover in the founding of CCEBS and a member of the planning for the W.E.B. DuBois Afro-American Studies Dept. He holds degrees from Wilberforce University, with an M.A. from Bowling Green State University and a Ph. D. from Washington State University. He joined the UMass staff in 1965.

NES Holds Orientation

By CHRIS REYNOLDS
Staff Reporter

The Northern Educational Service, a tutoring program at UMass for underprivilged children, held its orientation meeting last night in the Student Union Ballroom. Over 200 UMass students volunteered to tutor elementary and high school students in Springfield.

Once a week, the tutors will be bussed to NES headquarters in Springfield for two hours of work with students. High school students will be tutored at night, while the younger children will be taught in the afternoon. Tutors are needed for all the customary high school courses, and also for instruction in music and art.

During the semester, a course is offered for the new tutors that will introduce them to the methods of tutoring, what to expect from ghetto children, and how to react to them. The course is taught by Royce Philips of the Urban Education Department who has worked across the country on similar tutorial projects.

Mr. Philips spoke last night, emphasizing a one-to-one relationship between tutor and tutee, a "big brother" or "big sister approach. The tutoring will break away from the customary teaching atmosphere, and with the informality, offer fresh, flexible material and ideas. Careful planning and intuition are instrumental for success, the motivation of the tutee.

Thelwell Gains Visa, Arrival Due Today

RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

"He's free!"

UMass received a phone call from Senator Edward Brooke's office yesterday informing the administration that Michael Thelwell chairman of the UMass Black Studies Department, had received his visa to enter the U.S. at 1:30 P.M. Thelwell is expected to arrive from Jamaica today, according to Asst. to the Chancellor Randolph Bromery.

The decision came after two weeks of searching official and unofficial channels, by Dr. Bromery and Dean Seymour Shapiro, for a route through the "technicalities" which had originally denied Thelwell a visa.

The reversal of the visa decision by the Counsel for the American Embassy in Jamaica was attributed by Bromery to intercession on all levels by people in the State Department and Congress. Bromery singled out the influence of the president of Howard University James Cheek. Cheek, who, as a member of the President's Commission on Campus Unrest, contacted the Chairman of the Commission, Gov. Scranton of Pennsylvania, who in turn used his position to arrange a meeting between UMass representatives, secretary of State for Latin American Affairs, Meyer.

Bromery received a telephone call late yesterday afternoon from Under-secretary Meyer, which gave Bromery the impression that "he (Meyer) was really going to do something."

The "pressure" put on the U.S Counsel in Jamaica apparently was sufficient to change his mind. Decisions to grant visas are the soul responsibility of the Chief Counsel at the embassy and cannot be reversed by anything short of presidential intervention or dismissal of the Counsel.

Gov. Scranton's influence, is thought to have been effective because of his sensitive position on the Presidents Commission on Campus Un-rest. Thelwell played an important role in quelling the Mill's House incident of last February here on campus. For that and his excellent work over the last two year forming the Black Studies Department. His position on the campus was deemed "important" enough to press hard for his quick re-entry into the States to assume the position he was named to last year, by the Board of Trustees.

Thelwell is reported to have "purchased his plane ticket" long before the visa was finally granted and is not expected to encounter any further delays. During his absence, Esther Terry of the Black Studies Department has been serving as temporary Chairman of the department. Her reaction to the news: "The department is overwhelmed."

Tippo Shows Concern

DAVID D. WILLIAMS

Chancellor Oswald Tippo used some pretty strong language yesterday. People who paint on buildings make him pretty mad and with good reason. People who phone in bomb scares make him mad, also with good reason.

He is concerned with the "growing disenchantment" of the taxpayers with the university. He's afraid that if students get too out of hand then the taxpayers will react as they have in other states. In California, all state employees except teachers at universities were granted pay raises. In Michigan, anyone who causes trouble on campus finds himself expelled. The Massachusetts legislature would have had before it a bill that would require all out of state students to pay $2300 in tuition. But luckily, it never got out of committee.

Tippo doesn't want trouble on this campus and he seemed confident that there will be no trouble. He hinted "Step out of line and some people are going to get mad." Not him-but the people who hold the purse strings-the taxpayers.

As the Chancellor sees it, the university is comprised of many constituencies. The students, faculty, parents, alumni, trustees, and employes all have a vital interest in the university. We all have to pull together or we won't make it.

At one point he practically shouted to all those who were still in bed or lining up for lunch, "Moderates of the campus arise! Throw off your chains of apathy or the extreme groups will control the campus."

It's Tippo's "sober judgement" that if there is trouble then this university will find itself in financial straits. He's not looking forward to the day but when and if it happens, he'll be ready.

"I'm a dangerous man," he said, "I have absolutely no ambitions... I'm brushing up on botany a few hours a week. When the guillotine falls, I will be able to return to the unoffending green plant."

In The Nation And The World

White Nominated In Dem. Primary

Boston Mayor Kevin H. White won the Democratic nomination for governor of Massachusetts Tuesday in the biggest battle of primaries in six states that produced no major surprises - unless nominations of two Catholic priests are so rated.

White lost his home town but in the four man race won by more than 10,000 votes over the party endorsed candidate, Senate President Maurice A. Donahue. Gov. Francis W. Sargent was unopposed for the Republican nomination.

Four Democratic senators won renomination, Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, John O. Pastore of Rhode Island, Henry M. Jackson of Washington and Joseph D. Tydings of Maryland. Hubert H. Humphrey easily captured the Democratic Senate nomination in Minnesota to start a political comeback.

Two Democratic governors were renominated, Marvin Mandel of Maryland and Frank D. Licht of Rhode Island.

Tuesday was the last big primary day before the Nov. 3 general elections. There remains only a runoff for the Democratic nominations for governor in Georgia Sept. 23, runoffs for the Democratic nominations for governor and senator in Florida Sept. 29 and Hawaii's primaries Oct. 3.

This week's voting produced no discernible national trend, with conservatives and liberals both winning. The major victories seemed attributable more to personalities than issues.

Cattle May Be Fed Dangerous Hormone

WASHINGTON (AP) - The government has decided to allow farmers to feed a suspected cancer causing hormone to their cattle at double the levels previously permitted.

The Food and Drug Administration contends the new regulation protects the safety of the human food supply because it retains a previous requirement that cattle be withdrawn from the hormone 48 hours before slaughter.

Under the old standard, traces of the hormone had shown up in meat tested by the government in each of the last five years - despite the fact such residues are prohibited.

Jordanians Face Crises

Civil War Looms

The desert kingdom of Jordan teetered on the brink of open civil war Wednesday in a deepening crisis that split the country into armed camps and threatened repercussions throughout the Middle East.

On the deserted streets of Amman, the Jordanian capital, King Hussein's army faced rebellious Palestinian guerrillas demanding the overthrow of the 34 year old monarch.

New fighting between Jordanian and Palestinian guerrillas broke out in Amman Wednesday night, Lebanese television stations reported.

The city's five stations interrupted regular programs to announce that the two sides were exchanging rocket fire but gave no further details.

Soon after the announcement, Beirut telephone operators said the lines to Amman were out of order.

Hussein unleashed the guerrillas' fury by installing a military government that immediately imposed martial law and promised to "strike with an iron fist against anyone creating disorder in the country."

Field Marshal Habis Majali, a British trained Bedouin fiercely loyal to Hussein and despised by the Palestinians, was appointed as military governor over the entire country.

One of Majali's first acts was to appeal to the guerrillas to respect a new cease fire with the royal army and to lay down their arms.

But Yasir Arafat, chief of the over all guerrilla command, condemned the new regime as fascist, placed his forces on a state of "emergency alert" and told them to defy the order to surrender weapons.

The official guerrilla radio in Baghdad called on the Jordanian people to rise in revolt against Hussein and the new government and "fight it to the end." It called for an unlimited general strike "until the Fascists are overthrown."

In imposing martial law, Hussein urged the peopleto support the government in its effort to put an end to the threat of civil war.

Fifty five percent of Jordan's 2.2 million people are Palestinians most of them living in camps ringing the Israeli border.

The remainder are Bedouins, heriditary owners of the land and intensely loyal to Hussein during many threats on his rule.

Hostages Still Held

The deepening crisis in Jordan heightened the uncertainty Wednesday about the fate of 54 airline hijack hostages held by Maxist guerilla opponents of King Hussein's new military regime.

The Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine kept the captives under guard in a score of hiding places while the desert kingdom drifted toward open civil war.

For the first time in 10 days, spokesmen at the Popular Front headquarters in Amman said nothing about the demand for Western governments and Israel to release commando prisoners as ransom.

The Peking oriented group, suspended from the over-all command of the guerilla movement last Saturday, was welcomed back into the fold Wednesday and joined other Palestinian organizations in girding for a showdown with Hussein.

The command announced it had lifted the suspension and was inviting the former outcasts to become part of a new unified leadership.

As the Popular Front turned its attention to the new military government, fears mounted that lives of its captives might be endangered if the regime attempts to purge Jordan of rebellious Palestinians.

The 36 Americans and Israelis, eight Britons, eight Swiss and two West Germans were secreted away, three to a group, last Saturday after the guerrillas released other passengers and crewmen from the three planes.

The Trans World Airlines Boeing 707, Swiss DC8 and British Overseas Airways Corp. VC10 were then blown up as the Popular Front defied an order of the guerilla command.

Efforts by the International Red Cross and the Rt. Rev. Jean Rodhain, a personal emissary of Pope Paul VI, to negotiate the release of the remaining hostages failed.

Nixon's Campus Speech Calls for Stand Against Violence As Political Tactic

MANHATTAN, Kan. (AP) - President Nixon, warning in a campus speech against condoning violence as a political tactic, called Wednesday for "an uncompromising stand against those who reject the rules of civilized conduct."

"The time has come for us to recognize that violence and terror have no place in a free society, whoever the perpetrators and whatever their purported cause," said Nixon.

He described as a "cancerous disease" the nation's spreading incidents of bombings, attacks on policemen, campus violence and aircraft hijacks.

"We must take an uncompromising stand against those who reject the rules of civilized conduct and of respect for others - those who would destroy what is right in our society and whose actions would do nothing to right what is wrong," Nixon told his campus audience.

"In a system that provides the means for peaceful change, no cause justifies violence in the name of change," he said.

Nixon also warned that quality education is threatened by terrorizing assaults of "small bands of destructionists that have been allowed to impose their own rules of arbitrary force."

He said, "It is time for responsible university and college administrators, faculty, and student leaders to stand up and be counted. Only they can save higher education in America. It cannot be saved by government."

At that point he departed from his prepared text and interjected: "If we turn only to government to save it, then govern - ment will move in and run the colleges and universities. So the place to save it is here among the college faculty and administrators, and the student leaders."

He declared, "Those who bomb universities, who ambush policemen, who hijack airplanes and hold their passengers hostage, all share in common not only a contempt for human life but also a contempt for those elemental decencies on which a free society rests - and they deserve the contempt of every American who values decencies."

"America at its best has stood steadfastly for the rule of law among nations. But we cannot stand successfully for the rule of law abroad unless we respect the rule of law at home. A nation that condones blackmail and terror at home can hardly stand as the example in putting an end to international piracies or ten - sions that could explode into war," Nixon declared.

He said there always have been those who chose violence or intimidation to get what they wanted. What is new, he said, is their numbers "and extent of passive acquiescence or even fawning approval that in some fashionable circles has become the mark of being 'with it.' "

Congressmen Interested In School Busing Case

WASHINGTON(AP) - Declaring their move unprecedented in the history of Congress, at least 75 members of Congress are seeking to participate in a Supreme Court case involving school busing.

Led by Rep. William Cramer, R-Fla., the congressmen want to file an amicus curiae-or "friend of the court"-brief pointing out to the U.S. Supreme Court in no uncertain terms that Congress has already forbidden busing of students to achieve racial balance.

Cramer has already filed the brief in the Charlotte Mecklenburg, N. C., School District case which the high court will hear Oct. 12. Whether the names of the other members of congress will be accepted by the high court is still not clear.

All briefs on the controversial case involving a massive busing program were to have been filed by Wednesday.

In any case, the 74 House members and Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., who had officially joined the effort by Wednesday afternoon wanted at least to go on public record opposing busing to achieve racial balance, as they have interpreted the effect of a District Court ordered busing plan in Charlotte Mecklenburg County and other Southern school districts.

Railroads Resume Work Wage Disputes

WASHINGTON (AP) - Four employee groups and the railroads resumed indirect talks in their deadlocked wage dispute Wednesday after a federal judge lifted his threat of contempt action against the unions.

District Judge Howard Corcoran dropped the punitive proceedings after being assured that workers had returned to their jobs and operations were normal on three railroads hit by picketing Tuesday.

Corcoran left in force an order restraining the unions from striking until 1:45 p.m. EDT Sept. 23. It was the short lived violation of that order which provoked the threat of contempt.

The railroads experiencing temporary service disruption and directly involved in the strike call are the Southern Pacific, the Baltimore & Ohio and the Chesapeake & Ohio.

Assistant Secretary of Labor W. J. Usery, a top administration labor troubleshooter, sought throughout Wednesday to open lines of communication between the parties by talking with them separately. There was no report of progress toward settling the work wage impasse.

Although the unions, with 40,000 members, selected only three lines for the strike call, the dispute affects some 500,000 workers on the nation's 71 major railroads. The railroads have maintained in recent years that under collective bargaining conditions, a strike against selected lines would justify retaliatory lockouts by all the carriers.

A Change in Season

Down near the center of town a woman stood in her yard driving stakes into the ground to help the young trees withstand the winter. She stood erect in the wind with a small cap on her head, and despite her many years, began to prepare her garden for the change in season.

In her lifetime, she had witnessed a change in the American character.

Years earlier, an American journalist had left the country to observe the beginnings of a war and view from afar the development of his own nation.

The more he saw of Europe, wrote Walter Lippman, the more certain he became that there was a relationship between the economic organization of a society and the freedom of its people.

"The reason why the love of liberty...is so strong in France," he wrote, "is undoubtedly it seems to me that France still is a country where the great mass of the people have their own farms, their own shops, their own little business enterprises...

"They have resistance to mass propaganda because they have so much independence as individuals."

In Amherst, the woman had seen the outward signs of changes in the American economy. She had seen the small merchant try to compete with the giant retailer. She had seen the sons of many merchants prefer to manage a large operation than own their own. Many who did venture to become entrepreneurs she had seen father under the umbrella of a national franchise.

There was a different look, she thought, in the eyes of people today. Now, the fishermen she had known, the self-made men, the farmers and merchants, you could tell from a glance at their faces that they weren't going to take any garbage from anyone. But these young people and their parents, managers and engineers, they're a different breed.

She slammed at the stake in her hand.

The wind blew colder and her breath frosted the air. She turned to go in. Must be getting old, she thought. Can't do what I used to.

Guns Again

To The Editor:

The "guns on campus" issue is two years old as you point out in your editorial. Since you chose to stir it up again, I chose to rebut. The idea of no guns on campus is holy, but at this time inappropriate and utopian. Sometime in the future (the near future I hope) the plan might work. But not until strict gun control legislation is passed and enforced nation-wide.

You say that Chancellor Tippo this year banned the storage of guns on campus, but what difference does it make if they are banned or not? Lawbreakers don't care about bans. Police are here to protect and defend us from lawbreakers. Would you take the job unarmed at their pay, or any pay you like? I know you're saying I'm naive to think this way about the pigs. Think what you like, I know a few of them and they're decent people. Of course I've heard about the ones who brutalize etc., but then not every student has a clean bill either. There are some that steal, rape, vandalize, or even kill.

You say a "great number of people" believe they should be protected from the police. How many is a "great number?" Why? What did they do wrong? What do they plan to do wrong? Who are they? I'll turn them in before they vandalize my car or burn down my dorm.

The police are not the ones to fear. The dangerous ones are the lawbreakers and lawmakers!

I just want to say WHOPEE! Thank you ladies and gentlemen. I'd like to take this opportunity to say that I'm pleased as punch to be here, and hope you all have a niffty time at the University of Chaos.

Some of you out there in television land are hard-core veterans of the confrontation between your mind and the UMass machine, and a few of you had your first taste of the "Massachusetts Madness" (better known as contagious incompetence),. be that as it may, I hope all of you ultimately survive the experience.

As one very wise old man who had the good fortune to see this campus when it was just rolling fields of grass remarked, "This campus hasn't changed much; only a different type of grass is popular today than when I was a student."

All I want to say is if you have anything you think is interesting in the way of literature (poems, stories, articles, blurbs), or if you're interested in film reviews, and book reviews, feature articles, editorials, cartoons, or blurbs, please send the material in or bring yourself into the Collegian Office and we'll use the material if it's cool and use you if you're in the same general condition. Thank you, and good night.

AT LONG LAST, the news from other campuses will be reported in MDC with a weekly round-up. Beginning today: "Campus Carousel" will swing around some 75 campuses via some 250 student publications. From these, the most pertinent (or impertinent) bits of intelligence we think will be of interest to UMies (including those housed in Fort Lederle and other dungeons) will be shared. Read on.

ALL IS NOT GAY at UTexas-Austin.

In the first student press censorship case to come to our attention, this Fall, an ad convoking the local Gay Liberation movement was cancelled out of the columns of The Daily Texan, student newspaper.

The result has been editorial comment in the Daily Texan, as well as letters to the editor from faculty and students, who decry being denied their rights to the Constitutionally-guranteed pursuit of happiness.

Or is it the happiness of pursuit?

It can't happen here.

SPEAKING OF SEX...

Student govermnent at the U. of South Florida in Tampa (UMass has a student exchange program with them, by the bye) has decided that students on that campus are woefully ignorant of the birds and bees.

And - unlike some student government groups we know - they're going to do something about it. Beginning this Fall, The Oracle, student newspaper, will carry a column answering questions on sex, birth control (illegal in Mass.) abortion(also illegal here), homosexuality (not talked about here), heterosexuality (it's universal), pregnancy (wanted and un-), gynecological problems for women (chalk up one for Women's Lib), emotional problems for women, emotional problems related to sex for both men and women (we knew there was something they had in common), and venereal disease (that should solve the whole problem).

If you have any questions, write Mary Margaret Rutledge or Gary Jones at UC 219, U. South Florida, Tampa 33620. Tell 'em we sent you.

BEST BET IS TO QUIT?

The Central Michigan Life has been disturbed, editorially, to discover that there are only three academic advisers to serve more than 13,000 students of the CMU campus.

They reported to the campus community that one interview with a student who had experienced the advising system revealed a quick, clear and caustic solutions to academic problems.

"One girl who sought advice in changing her curriculum because she had failed a couple of classes," Life reported, "said the consultant (adviser) informed her that her best bet was to give up and quit school altogether."

At least he says it like it is, baby.

"This gigantic building is yours, built with you in mind. As the student population has grown, so has the Campus Center Complex. It has everything you could ever want - a bar, a hotel, student activities area, a restaurant, coffee shop, a music listening area, study lounge, relaxation areas, TV's meeting rooms, you name it!

Pamphlet "Welcome to the Campus Center" published by the Campus Center Program Council.

Most everyone admits now that the Campus Center was a mistake due to shortsighted - ness. But it is ridiculous for the Program Council to continue to hype that concrete emperor, who, no matter how described, still has no clothes on. "Everything you could ever want". Goodness. I'm under age and I can't use the bar. Obviously, I'm in no need of a hotel. What happened to the student activities area? The old student union was planned with a bowling alley and pool area. The restaurant and coffee shop are too expensive for me. The Old Chapel already has a music listening area. My dormitory has numerous study lounges and relaxation areas as do most of the academic buildings. And you know, I kind of think that the old Student Union's color TV is still good enough for most students.

Oh liberty, what crimes are committed in thy name!

Conscription Corner

Today, I want to talk a little about the conscientious objector deferment, with some discussion of the women's role in helping men get this deferment. Historically, the male member of most societies has been called upon to protect his nation, city, home and family. Through the years, this has created the myth that mem are normally strong, aggressive, fearless. His manhood, his sexuality, are determined by these factors. In these artificial terms, a man who is opposed to war is thought of as a coward, and many social blocks are set between him and a public declaration of his beliefs.

The fact is that, given the existing social (and frequently economic, as well) pressures, it takes more courage to say no to war than to don a uniform and play at being a "man" for two years while, perhaps, killing people. War can emotionally destroy anyone with human sensitivity, but most people don't realize this until too late.

Those of us who are "safe," who are students, who are medically deferred, or, most importantly, who are women, have a special obligation to help our brothers get themselves together enough to declare themselves.

In our society, which is so dominated by sexual roles, the male looks for his masculine identity in the women he knows and respects. If they glamorize military uniforms, or even by their actions (or inaction) sanction the romanticizing of the military role, many men will follow these cues in ordering their lives. If, on the other hand, women start defining masculinity in terms that do not imply that being a soldier is manly, which encourage the men they know to build compassion rather than competitiveness, which admire sensitivity and real concern for others, then it will be much easier for men to admit their opposition to war to themselves, and to deal with it in a more constructive way.

Today, the position of conscientious objector is a stand of both national and international patriotism. The best defensive stance for us is a refusal to participate or support a course of action which can lead to a nuclear holocaust. The heroic stand is to be able to answer the question, "Are you willing to die for your beliefs?" by saying "Yes, but I'm not willing to kill for them."

I guess that the major point I'm trying to make is that the CO position is far from being a cop-out, in spite of the omnipresent male mystique. You should really sit down and hassle out whether you are willing to participate in war, or in an organization devoted to war. If you are in the Army, then you are directly supporting the machinery of war. If that makes you at all uncomfortable, you're probably a CO.

Student-Faculty Group Starts 'The Radical Community Union'

Students and faculty, who met throughout the summer for political education seminars, are making plans for the formation of an organized structure centered around political education and political action; calling itself The Radical Community Union.

During the strike last year, there began a fairly comprehensive political education process for the first time here. "This university must not return to the production of amoral and apolitical academians, businessmen, and officers for the army, said a statement by the group. An extensive examination of the university's values and the values of the society and political structure it perpetuates is absolutely necessary. The Administration does not seem anxious to put itself, its values, its interests in this kind of jeopardy. The Administration, for example, would not want any kind of examination, by students or faculty, of the true functions of an investment like The Campus Center. Clearly this examination is vital to the community here," it went on.

The Radical Community Union intends to sponsor a wide variety of radical workshops, films, speakers, guerilla theatre groups, etc. as a funded organization. What this group now wants is people interested in making this education available constantly, without compromise. "It is not enough to have someone like Doug Miranda or a film like Battle of Algiers on campus every once in a while. This information should be flowing throughout the community constantly," the group feels.

The Radical Community Union is not a strict doctrinaire group; it wishes to become a support group, a coalition group of radical groups on campus. The organizational meeting for the Radical Community Union will be held on Thursday, September 17, at 7:30 in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Library Must Open Records

ITHACA,- If anyone wants to find out who checked out a book about bombs, or revolutions, or how to ski, the Tompkins County Public Library has been directed by the county government to open up the records.

Last month, following news that the police elsewhere had been hunting potential troublemakers by checking who had borrowed books about making bombs, the library trustees had declared the records confidential and closed to all.

Today, the Tompkins County Board of Representatives voted 9 to 6 to direct the library board to make the checkout files and all other records open to the public.

As a consumer, you can make a valid complaint against a company, and that complaint has a 95% chance of being corrected in your favor. If enough complaints are processed, an investigation by the state Attorney General's Office is possible. As a consumer you can with hold purchasing from an organization that continually fails to service your needs. As a consumer you can transfer your business from one firm to another.

Anyone who has been in the Armed Forces can tell you what a "military town" is, and Amherst has that relationship to the colleges and university. Most businesses in the community will treat the student fairly, but we should be aware of those that do not. Hence, the YAHOO Consumer Staff will periodically prepare the "UM Consumer".

This column will have four purposes: 1. To inform students of consumer laws in Massachusetts, 2. To inform students of the types of poor and deceptive business practices, 3. Receive and process complaints against local businesses that transgress against the UMass student, and 4. Maintain a running tally of complaints against those businesses and the progress made. To accomplish this, we have been guaranteed assistance from the Consumer Division of the State Attorney Generals Office, and the local Chamber of Commerce. The only further ingredient needed for success is from you, the consumer-student, making the complaint.

All complaints should be legible and signed, with address and telephone number, and left either at the YAHOO office or our mail box, RSO #106. Comments and complaints from faculty and staff are also welcomed.

Our first column will alert you to a problem that might occur within the next few weeks: AUTO INSPECTIONS in the Amherst area. Cars will be inspected for cracks in the windshield, directional, brake, and head lights, exhaust, brakes, windshield wipers, horn, tires, wheel alignment, and ball joints. Our brief words of warning are: make sure you actually need any repairs that the inspection station recommends (e.g. condensation from your exhaust can be diagnosed as pollution, and we have heard many verbal complaints of failing to pass because a $40.00 ball joint job was really not needed). Most people don't know much about auto repairs, and the auto inspectors know it. The inspections were designed to have safe vehicles on the road, not to put cash in an unscrupulous mechanic's pocket.

The success and continuation of this article is solely dependent upon you, the consumer-student. If there are no comments on the article, complaints against unscrupulous businesses, of requests for information and future articles, the YAHOO-Consumer staff will assume that all is well, and that students are satisfied with consumer status in the community.

Children's Clinic Located At UMass

Newcomers to the Amherst Community who may have retardates in their family are advised of the Community Clinical Nursery School for Mentally Retarded Children, co-sponsored by the Massachusetts Department of Mental Health and the Hampshire County Association for Retarded Children. The School is located in Skinner Hall at UMass, and its laboratory nursery school facilities are supported by the Department of Human Development at the University as a student training facility. All children from Hampshire County are eligible, and free transportation is furnished by Massachusetts state law.

Children from four to seven years of age are accepted at the School. The teacher, Mrs. Alice Allen, describes its goal as one of making pupils feel happy and secure away from home. Individual goals are set for each child as they work toward increasing ability to relate to others.

Inquiry may be made through the Hampshire County Association for Retarded Children (584-9250), and at the Franklin-Hampshire Mental Health Center, Greenfield (773-7662).

The main function of the Hampshire County Association is to help provide services such as this nursery school for retarded children so that they may remain at home with their families. It is advisable for parents to contact HCARC when retardation is first known so that their children may receive full benefit of early childhood services.

Communism Text By UMass. Prof. Is Translated

"A Short History of Chinese Communism," a book by UMass. professor of government Franklin W. Houn, has recently been published in an updated and enlarged edition in the German and Swedish languages.

The new editions extend the coverage of recent events in mainland China up to the Ninth National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party in April, 1969. Prof. Houn also records the histor of the party in the light of valuable date revealed during the Cultural Revolution.

Appointed to the faculty of the UMass in 1963, Prof. Houn is the author of several books and over 40 articles. He received an A. B. degree from National Chengchih University in Nanking, an A.M. degree from the University of Denver, and a Ph. D. degree from the University of Wisconsin.

Meeting For Eng. Majors To Be Held Next Monday

First implemented in 1968, the English Department Undergraduate Council was created for the benefit of English majors. The five student representatives attending all English Department faculty meetings have voting privileges on matters coming before the faculty. Members of the Undergraduate Studies Committee deal with just about any issue which could come up in the department. EDUC members not only interview every candidate applying for faculty positions, submitting evaluations to the Faculty Recruitment Committee, but also administers a survey which allows student opinion to be computed for the benefit of both student and instructor. The Freshman and Sophomore English Committees, although having recently achieved major revisions in requirements, are still working on new proposals, as is the Honors Department.

Two new committees come into their own this semester. The curriculum Reform Committee will be analyzing course offerings from freshman year through graduate levels in order to present a better balanced, more coherent program to the major. The Long-Range Planning and Work-Load Committee will concern itself with the number of courses an instructor should teach, class size, and the problems of the English major. For the first time, students will be members of the Faculty Grievance Committee, the group which deals with all complaints against individual instructors and department policy.

This degree of representation offers a great deal of potential for the English major but because of a lack of student participation, EDUC's effectiveness has been greatly hampered. Membership in EDUC depends only on attendance at three meetings. The first meeting will be held September 21 at 7:00 p.m. in Bartlett 301.

Correction Reported On Recent Article

The statement "Eric the Rat is occupying a psychiatrist's couch suffering from the most misunderstood and ill-recepted kind of love from everyone, save a few," in a column by Lance Reidy in the Collegian dated September 15, 1970 is an error.

The facts are these:

(1) Eric Walgren faced trial during the Summer Session of the Hampshire County Superior Court on indictments arising from his visit of a friend in the UMass Infirmery prior to visiting hours.

(2) The Superior Court Judge sitting on this session was generally known among criminal lawyers of the Massachusetts Bar as "a hanging judge."

(3) On June 24, 1970, the defendant developed an acute anxiety reaction and was admitted to Westboro State Mental Hospital for ten days observation under Mass. General Laws ch. 123, sect. 79.

(4) Although he was released ten days later diagnosed in satisfactory mental health, the Summer Session of Superior Court had ended.

(5) Mr. Walgren's case has been continued to the Fall Session convened by a different judge in October. He is free on $500 bail.

Agnew Chides Demonstrators In Romney Support Speech

(GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) - Vice President Spiro T. Agnew told a band of chanting young hecklers Wednesday "You're afraid of other points of view." Then he invoked the patriotism of the working man in an appeal for Republican votes.

Agnew confronted noisy demonstrators who shouted peace slogans and obscenities from the rear of a Republican rally at an airport hangar near Saginaw, and snapped back "You're pathetic."

"Ladies and gentlemen, that's exactly what we're running against in this country today, and with enemies like that how can we lose?" the vice president said. "They're a minority out there, and they will be a minority in November."

With loudspeakers at full volume, Agnew delivered over the din his bid for support for Lenore Romney, wife of the Cabinet member who is the Republican challenger to Democratic Sen. Philip A. Hart. Agnew said Hart's views and votes are those of "a radical liberal."

There were more than 1,100 people at the hangar rally, and twice as many outside. The demonstrators in the rear rank numbered perhaps 100.

I've listened to your four letter arguments, and I am not persuaded." Agnew said." . . . You people out there preach a lot about dissent, but you're afraid of other points of view because you don't have the strength of your own convictions."

Concede SST Pollution

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Department of Transportation concedes in a confidential report to the White House that the much disputed supersonic transport may have some harmful effects on the environment. But it says they would be minor.

The document presented to the President's Council on Environmental Quality terms the still unbuilt SST an insignificant polluter but adds: "In a few areas additional research is needed to increase confidence that largescale SST operations will not significantly affect the environment."

The report says more research in particular is needed on temperature increases that would be caused by water vapor and exhaust from the 1,800 mile an hour aircraft.

A summary of the document was obtained Wednesday from qualified sources.

Spirited Black Bears Come Off Winning Season

Inexperience Could Plague Maine

by BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

Coming off of their first winning season since 1965, the 1970 version of the Maine Black Bears makes its initial appearance of the season at Alumni Stadium Saturday to meet UMass. Although faced with the loss of some key personnel due to graduation and injuries, Maine will have bitter memories of last year's 49-7 loss to the Redmen and should prove troublesome.

Coach Walt Abbot brings a squad of 22 returning lettermen and some key sophomores as he tries to improve on the 5-4 mark of last year. However, Abbot faces a problem of inexperience as only eight starters return from 1969, five on offense and three on defense.

The largest gap left in the Maine lineup was by All-Conference split end Gene Benner. Benner who holds eight Maine and four university division records for pass receiving, was drafted by the Cleveland Browns. Also missing is the man who threw to Benner, a quarterback Dave Wing.

Hurting the Black Bears even more is the fact that Wing's replacement, co-captain Bob Hamilton, is injured. Hamilton, a 6'-190 lb. senior, was the team's leading ground gainer in 1968 as a tailback, and was trying to make the conversion to quarterback this year.

Replacing Hamilton will be Ron Cote. Cote is a sophomore and one of the smallest of the Black Bears at only 5'7-175 lb. Backing up Cote are two other sophomores, Sean Casey and Henry Hastings.

Leading the Maine receiving corps will be junior Paul Soucy. As a starter last year, the 6'2-195 lb. end caught nine passes for 96 yards, and he should be the object of even more attention now that Benner is gone. Taking Benner's place will be sophomore Wayne Chapman who has been switched from halfback.

One of the strong points of the Maine attack will be its running game. Returning to the backfield are Dan Sullivan and Chris Eaton, both seniors. Sullivan, 6'-180 lb., was the top scorer and leading ground gainer of last year's squad. Eaton, as well as averaging almost five yards per carry, caught eight passes for 101 yards. Junior Bob Iwaszko will also probably see considerable action.

At fullback will be 5'9-185 junior Bob Marchildon. Marchildon is a Vietnam veteran and a transfer from the University of Wisconsin. Last season he scored six touchdowns and carried 105 times for 379 yards.

The offensive line could be a weakness for the Black Bears as there is only one returning starter and two lettermen. At center will be Dick Bergeron, a 5'11-185 lb. junior. Flanking Bergeron will be sophomore Bob McConnell, 5'11-185 lb., and Rich Todd. Todd started a few games last season at defensive tackle but is making the swtich in an effort to strengthen the offensive unit.

The starting tackles will be 6'1-212 senior Stan Vasalle and 6'1-210 senior Rod Sparrow. Vasalle is the only returning starter on the offensive line and is two-year letterman.

The defense should be one of the Black Bear's strong points. Leading the way is All-Conference defensive end, Stan Maddock. The 6'1-175 junior is small, but is exceptionally quick and should anchor the Maine front four. Joining Maddock is another 1969 starter, 6'1-190 Mike Landry, a senior.

THE BLACK BEAR

The tackles will be Steve Naccara and Dan Watson, 6'1-235 lb. Naccara, 5'11-205 lb. is thought of as one of the unsung heroes of the Black Bears as well as being one of the more versatile performers on the squad. However, there is little reserve strength in this area for Maine.

John Rhodes, a Vietnam veteran and purple heart recipient, will be starting his second year at linebacker. Rhodes, 5'11-190 lbs. was an All-Conference second will be 6'-190 lb. co-captain Arnie James who has been switched from the defensive line where he was a starter last season. Also starting at linebacker is Joe LeVasseur, 5'8-205 lb.

The weakest spot in an otherwise tough defensive unit will probably be the secondary. There are no returning starters among the backs and only two with any experience at all. The cornerbacks will be 6'-190 Bob Hayes and 5'10-176 Pat Ladd. Ladd is one of the two lettermen in the backfield and intercepted one pass last year. At safety, Maine will have 5'9-165 lb. junior Joe Leone and 5'11-170 lb. junior Jim Walsh.

If some of the inexperienced players can come through, Coach Abbott could have his second winning season in a row.

Computors Compile Maine's Defense; Redmen Show 'Fine' Offensive Drive

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

"They have a fervent desire to play and will keep coming at us until the end," remarked UMass assistant football coach George Karras in describing the University of Maine football team yesterday afternoon at the Newman Center as the UMass Redmen Quarterback Club initiated its weekly fall luncheons.

Karras, the Redman offensive line coach, presented the large gathering with a scouting report of the Black Bear defense, which he indicated has changed quite a bit since last year. After running down the key defensive personnel, he turned his speaking position over to Nick Nicolau, the UMass offensive backfield coach, who gave an additional analysis of Maine's defense.

Nicolau's report, however, was prepared by a computer, a new advancement in scouting recently put to use by the Redman football staff. What formally would take many hours to compile by hand takes the computer 24 seconds, the end of which time it produces a detailed analysis of Maine's tendencies on defense as compiled from statistics drawn from four football games' worth of Black Bear action.

In the best manner that he could in the time allotted him, Nicolau provided those on hand with an interesting description of the functions that the computer can perform.

Head coach Vic Fusia had some things to say, too. He had a few words on last Friday's scrimmage against Cornell, quipping that the best drive that the offense could come up with all afternoon was "the drive from North Commons to the Stadium..." before the clash.

On the importance of pre-season practicing, with its double sessions and all, Fusia pointed out that, "The big part of it is the unity of spirit", because the players eat together, sleep together and live together.

There were no films at this Varsity M affair; however, diagrams of the UMass offensive, defensive and specialty team personnel were provided with the aid of a view-machine.

Allin all, it was a successful opening luncheon for the UMass Redmen Quarterback Club, with interest in it high. The Club will conduct ten more football luncheons on the next ten consecutive Wednesdays; all of them will be held at the Newman Center, starting at 12:15 p.m. and getting out promptly at 1:15 p.m.

Top 3 Play

NEW YORK (AP) - Texas, Southern California and Notre Dame, three of the leading candidates for No. 1 football honors, get their cleats muddied this week-but not their records.

They should win, but Nebraska is likely to make it tough for the Trojans. Also watch feathers fly in the Houston Syracuse game.

Southern California 32, Nebraska 25: The Trojans have size, a winning habit and a quarterback named Jimmy Jones, but the Cornhuskers have a scoring punch.

Notre Dame 38, Northwestern 14: Ara Parseghian can't afford to show too much mercy to his former associates.

Texas 25, California 14: The Longhorns are reported as big, tough and fast as last year's champions, so they can't be worser-not with Steve Worster.

Oklahoma 19, Wisconsin 15: Two teams on the rebound, but the Sooners must prove themselves in a hurry.

Houston 23, Syracuse 19: Moon Mullins spearheads the Houston offense which the Orangemen can slow down but not stop.

Penn State 27, Navy 8: The Nittany Lions extend their unbeaten streak to 31, but the Midshipmen are on the way up.

UMass Crew Team

Oarsmen Use New Training Methods

The UMass Crew Club has already begun preparing for its 1970-71 rowing season. The largest turnout ever, 23 returning oarsmen, started paddling last Saturday. Coach Mike Faherty's squad has size and a great working attitude, with inexperience apparently the only drawback.

Veterans Chris Jedrey, Tom Mone and Dave Richard are the only seniors on the club which finished fourth last year in the 30-team Dad Vail Rowing Association. Off season trading of equipment and a working agreement with Cornell will allow the club to introduce a very flexible small-boat program this fall. Enthusiasm abounds as the team, using some new and varied training methods, prepares for its initial test, a three-mile pull in late October.

Frosh coach Kurt Betchick is presently talking to freshman candidates. The initial response has been good. Any freshman, 5'11" and 170 lbs. or better is urged to attend a meeting Monday, Sept. 21, at 7 p.m. in room 248, Boyden Building. Movies will be shown.

O's Nab Tie

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Baltimore Orioles clinched a tie for a second straight American League East Division title Wednesday night despite losing to Washington 2-0.

Rookie Bill Gogolewski and Dar-old Knowles combined for a four hitter, ending a seven game winning streak for Baltimore. But second place New York lost 3-1 to Boston, clinching the tie for the Orioles.

Gogolewski, winning his second straight major league start with relief help, held Baltimore to two hits in seven innings. Loser Jim Palmer, 19-10, who failed in his third try to join teammates Mike Cuellar and Dave McNally as 20 game winners, was victimized in part by two misplayed hits.

Aurelle Rodriguez was credited with a triple in the second when his low liner went past left fielder Don Buford and center fielder Paul Blair threw behind the runner. Ed Brinkman then singled past a drawn in infield to score Rodriguez.

Blair fell down going after Ed Stroud's third inning drive, which went for a triple, and Stroud scored on a sacrifice fly by Del Unser.

For Whom The Hamberger Tolls

By DAVID WILLIAMS
Tuesday Issue Editor

Veteran observers of campus life have many opinions on what is the most pleasant time to walk around and think to yourself, "This is my school. I like this place." Some would have you believe that the best time for this type of rumination is on a snowy winter evening while you're walking your girl home, both slightly high and having a good time.

Others might tell you that the feeling you get after the Redmen win on a clear fall day when the leaves are just turning will stay with you the longest. Not so. The best time to really feel at home on this campus will never occur again. The reason that no one will ever experience this feeling again is the Campus Center but I'm not going to let that bother me.

The Hatch is dead. It used to be a nice place to sit and watch people. But we have to face it, it's dead. Dead at least for everyone but the freshmen. No longer will we be able to sit in the Hatch and feel at home. The horror that sprouted out of the ground next door is a place to sit, but it has no charm and that is what made the Hatch what it was. Today it is relegated to taking up the overflow from the over-priced hovel beside it.

The Hatch was a place where you could feel secure. It was warm in the winter, sunny in the morning, deserted at the right times, crowded when you wanted it to be. But that's all gone now. Who's going to be the first one to light the sacrificial match and offer up the first joint to the powers that be in the Campus Center cafeteria? How are those among us who have no money on weekends going to lose ourselves in the crowd and order a cheeseburger and eat it and then walk by the cashier to pay for a coke? I'll bet that even the lady who used to dance in front of the juke box won't find it the same.

One could sit in the Hatch with a few friends and really feel at home. The best time in the Hatch used to be Tuesday morning after an eight o'clock scuba diving class. I used to hurry over from Hicks and grab a paper, a donut and a cup of coffee and then sit down to see what kind of nonsense I'd perpetrated on the campus that day. The guy who moved out of my triple was there and we'd talk. Sometimes I'd have another coffee I was so comfortable. Those big windows would let the light stream in and you could see the smoke rising in slanty columns to the ceiling. Then, promptly at ten, someone would feed the juke box and it was usually the Creedence Clearwater Revival and then it was time to go.

I used to enjoy the Hatch. I can't now. Progress has left me with a bitter taste in my mouth.

University's Journalism Program Meets Student Career Needs

(Editor's Note: Since 1946, every University student who has wanted to become a journalist has obtained a journalism job and been successful at it in the opinion of the editor to whom the student had been recommended. This remarkable record is the result of a co-curricular journalism program of work on newspapers that is open to all students, regardless of their major. The Collegian as well as commercial newspapers participates in this unique and successful program. How it works is explained in the following article--the first of two.

This statement was prepared by a faculty-student committee under the chairmanship of Dr. Arthur Musgrave, director of the journalism program. Dr. Barney Emmart directs the Journalistic Studies program which will be explained in the second article.)

Two basic and inter-related programs--one called Journalistic Studies and the other Journalism--are provided:

1) an academic program that introduces undergraduates to basic and applied research about journalism as part of a completely liberal arts curriculum rather than a curriculum of 75% liberal arts courses and 25% vocationally specialized courses, often called professional courses, that typical journalism programs provide.

2) a co-curricular program of work on newspapers under tutorial guidance from persons who have had experience in hiring and training reporters and who can, hence, provide professional counseling and placement services to students (and editors) based on how students have performed in a realistic test of journalism aptitude.

The co-curricular tutorial program is commonly referred to as the professional or journalism program. Journalistic Studies designates the academic or curricular program.

The Journalism Co-Curricular Program

The co-curricular (non-credit) program is open to all students, regardless of their majors, who think they are interested in journalism or writing careers. It is designed to be a superior substitute for how-to-do-it or professional journalism courses, such as News Writing and Copy Editing.

Since this tutorial-counseling program was established, in 1946, all students who wanted a journalism job have been placed and have proved successful on the job in the opinion of the editors to whom they had been recommended. The reason for its success is that it permits students to make informed career choices. It also provides students with published articles in newspapers that, along with the newspaper experience, are useful as job-getting credentials.

Newspapers in Northampton, Springfield, Holyoke, and Greenfield cooperate in this co-curricular tutorial program. The college daily also cooperates, and any student who writes for it may obtain tutoring in journalistic writing techniques.

Students interested in journalism careers should spend a few hours weekly writing for the college daily and obtaining tutorial services. As a rule, the director arranges for students to participate in the tutorial program with commercial newspapers after they have participated in the tutorial program with the college daily.

Summer Placement Aid

Students interested in the professional tutorial program should join the DAILY COLLEGIAN in their sophomore year, and should seek work on a commercial newspaper during the summer of their junior year. Summer placement aid is provided as part of the co-curricular program.

This program of counseling related to tutoring is not intended to recruit students for journalism; its aim is solely to permit students who believe they may want to become journalists to make an informed career decision. Many participants have decided against becoming journalists.

Some experience at journalistic work while you are a student is useful but not essential for obtaining a journalism job after graduation. Many alumni who did not obtain journalistic work experience while in college have become journalists. Although such experience may be desirable, it is essential only for students who wish to make an informed decision about becoming a journalist before graduating from college, and also wish credentials that are helpful in obtaining a journalism job.

Monday's article will explain the Journalistic Studies programs.)

Wood Establishes Goals Before Faculty Senate

By DON GLICKSTEIN
A Staff Reporter

"This is a time of academic crisis in America. I'm under no illusions". Robert Wood, the President of UMass was speaking to approximately 100 faculty senators and onlookers at the first regular meeting of the Faculty Senate this school year.

At the meeting, held yesterday at Memorial Hall, Wood defined his duties and expectations as President in relation to the faculty. He said that his job included "resource development, public and private", "resource management", and the guidelining of "goals and directions".

Dispelling any fears that the faculty might have had about neglect or change at the Amherst campus, Wood indicated that "traditions and respect for each campus will be maintained."

Wood also announced to the Faculty Senators that he had appointed Franklin Phillips, formerly of N.A.S.A. and M.I.T., to be the Vice President of Administration and Finance. Phillips will be working with Wood in the President's Office, to be located in the Government Center quarter of Boston.

Citing sundry quotations from men such as "Bob" Weaver and Max Weber, President Wood attempted to describe the problems that the University would face, and the philosophy of meeting those problems. "The academic community", he told the assemblage, must "look to its own preservation, its own strength."

Wood concluded his remarks by stating that the future of the University would not be determined by the President, but by all members of the University community, "especially faculty".

After Dr. Wood's comments, the Chancellor, Oswald Tippo told the senators of several decisions reached by the Board of Trustees. These included a raise in the travel allowance from 8¢ to 10¢, a stipend increase for Teaching Assistants, and the approval in principle of the UMass Amherst reorganization.

More than forty new faculty senators were then introduced and the meeting was adjourned

Radical Union Calls For Consolidation

By DAVID CASTALDI
Staff Reporter

Student Senate President Glenn Elters called for the creation of an "umbrella" group for radical organizations on campus. A crowd of about one hundred people gathered in the Campus Center auditorium for the initial meeting of the newly formed Radical Community Union.

The idea for the formation of the group came about during the summer by strike-supporting students. The group hoped to continue the activities of the strike but also desired to bring together many different groups with many different ideas in the fall.

"Our purpose will be to inform the community about what's happening in this country, about alternative life styles, political activities, no particular issue as yet. It's up to the people here to decide."

Several questions were asked by those attending and ideas as to what were to be the objectives of the group were varied. One speaker favored broadening the activities of the group to include other issues such as racism and exploitation of black workers, and that the group should not restrict itself to the three demands of the strike last spring.

Another called for an examination of the role of the university in relation to society since the evils spring from within the continuing role which serves the rich--the large industrialists and corporations.

There were also suggestions for the group to contend with university problems as well as those on a larger scale.

Many, however, felt that these issues were quite insignificant and irrelevant to everyone except students. Those issues which interlocked the university with society would be more pressing concern of the new organization. It was clearly stated that the group would be involved with actions and would not merely pass resolutions.

At the first meeting of the Radical Community Union, Glenn Elters urged unification of campus radical groups in order to effectively carry on the activities of the strike. (MDC photo by Gary Alpough)

Weathermen Aid In Leary Escape

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - The San Francisco Chronicle said in its Thursday editions that it had received a letter purporting to be from the underground revolutionary Weatherman organization and claiming it helped engineer the prison escape of drug cultist Timothy Leary.

The paper said an accompanying letter, purportedly from Leary himself said:

"Am armed and should be considered dangerous to anyone who threatens my life or my freedom."

Michael Kennedy, Leary's attorney of record with California penal officials, told a newsconference that Leary's signature on the letter is authentic.

Kennedy, who represented Leary in several California cases, said he and law partner Joseph Rhine compared the signature on the letter with signatures on other documents at his office and "there is no question it is genuine."

Leary, 49, a former Harvard lecturer, was sentenced to six months to 10 years in prison for marijuana possession on Dec. 26, 1969. He apparently scaled a 12 foot chain link fence topped with barb wire last Sunday and excaped from the minimum security prison.

The Chronicle received a photocopied "fourth communication from the Weatherman Underground," signed by Bernardine Dohrn, plus a signed photocopied letter allegedly from Leary.

Miss Dohrn, sought by the FBI on two warrants, said in her letter that her group, which broke away from the Students for a Democratic Society, "has had the honor and pleasure of helping Dr. Timothy Leary escape from the POW camp at San Luis Obispo, California."

The Leary letter said: "I offered loving gratitude to my Sisters and Brothers in the Weatherman underground who designed

House Approves Reorganization

WASHINGTON (AP) - A landmark congressional reorganization bill emphasizing more openness in legislative proceedings was passed Thursday by the House.

A 326 to 19 roll call vote sent the measure to the Senate after more than two months of sporadic House debate.

If it becomes law, it would be the first major congressional reorganization act since 1946.

Many of its provisions apply to both the Senate and the House, both of which could add them to their own rules by simple resolutions if the bill gets shelved in the scramble for adjournment. The bill drafted with an eye to streamlining some of the antiquated procedures of Congress.

Arab Guerrillas Routed, Jordan Forces Report

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - King Hussein's army threw armored might at Palestinian guerrillas across Jordan Thursday in an attempt to crush an uprising against the desert nation's new military regime.

By nightfall, the army claimed it had broken guerrilla resistance in Amman and the guerrilla stronghold of Zarqa, 15 miles northeast of the capital.

Many casualties were reported by both sides.

Guerrilla communiques broadcast by sympathetic governments in Iraq and Syria claimed victories for the guerrillas but at the same time guerrilla broadcasts from inside Jordan appealed for outside help.

Hussein's army totals about 55,000 men while the guerrillas' rolls list 32,000. The latter are scattered and their organization is splintered and disordered.

Late Thursday afternoon, after day-long fighting that sent pails of black and gray smoke swirling up over Amman, the army broadcast a communique saying it had taken complete control of all downtown districts of the capital "except for a few pockets which are now being mopped up with maximum security measures to prevent endangering people's lives."

It offered to negotiate a cease fire with the guerrillas but the terms as announced in the broadcast to the guerrilla leaders would seem unacceptable. They included a demand that the guerrillas withdraw from all Jordanian towns and cities to positions along the cease-fire line with Israel. The guerrillas had broadcast earlier: - "This is a fight to the finish."

A pooled dispatch reaching the outside world from U.S. correspondents reported sharp fighting in Amman throughout the day after army forces rolled in from the outskirts.

As the fighting began, army forces controlled the hills around Amman while the guerrillas held key sectors of the capital.

The army communique broadcast by radio Amman listed the secured capital districts but significantly failed to mention Wahdat, the northern suburb where some or all of 54 hostages from last week's hijackings were believed held in guerrilla stronghold. There was no mention of the hostages by either side throughout the day. But the fighting raised fears.

There was no word on the whereabouts of King Hussein himself. His wife and children are in Britain and a friend of the family in London said Princess Muna, Hussein's British born wife, was in daily contact with her husband.

The Israeli government watched developments in Jordan closely. There was a likelihood the Israelis would take some kind of action if the Palestinian guerrillas should succeed in overthrowing Hussein, a moderate.

* * * * *

The guerrillas began their present campaign against him after he accepted the U.S. initiated Middle East cease-fire and peace talks. The guerrillas have vowed to disrupt any possible peace settlement with Israel.

Fierce battles involving tanks and artillery began in Jordan at dawn and raged all day long in Amman and other cities of central and northern Jordan.

One report reaching Beirut said smoke covered the entire city, while the boom of heavy artillery and the rattle of machine guns could be heard in all directions.

Electric power was cut off in the city shortly after the fight started. All Jordan's borders were sealed, telephone links were cut and airports were closed.

In Beirut, diplomatic sources reported that at the U.S. Embassy in Amman was hit by small arms fire and a mortar shell landed on the roof, but no Americans were injured.

Much of the fighting appeared to be centered on the Jebel Amman and Jebel El Hussein districts of Downtown Amman, where army tanks were firing into guerrilla strongholds.

Cambodians Head For Viet Ambush

By JOHN T. WHEELER
PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP)- North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops threatened Thursday to cut off a large Cambodian task force embarked on the government's first big military offensive.

A senior Cambodian officer said numerous small bands of guerrillas had maneuvered behind government units strung out along Highway 6, 47 miles north of Phnom Penh, and had blown up two more ridges between the Cambodian troops and Skoun, the district headquarters.

Because of the work of the sabotage teams, any quick withdrawal of government troops and equipment was regarded as almost impossible.

The offensive was the first major attempt by the Cambodian high command to take the initiative in the six-month old war. It was aimed at reopening the highway to Kompong Thom, a key provincial capital in Cambodia's heartland.

Fears mounted Thursday that the offensive, stalled since Monday was headed for disaster. A high ranking officer said an enemy attack on Skoun, 40 miles north of the capital, could come at any time.

Following destruction of the bridges, other field commanders voiced concern for the more than a half dozen government battalions deployed along Highway 6 north of Skoun.

Already, considerable heavy equipment was trapped on the highway by a bridge that had been blown up Monday.

Sources said the Cambodian command decided after a two-day meeting with field commanders to abandon attempts to push north on Highway 6 to Kompong Thom if there is strong North Vietnamese resistance.

Associated Press Writer

The command, however, is expected to try to recapture Taing Kauk, a village 47 miles north of Phnom Penh, where an estimated 3,000 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong were deployed.

In Saigon, reports said American fighter bombers were flying raids along Highway 6 in aid of the Cambodian infantrymen.. Sources were unable to confirm whether the U.S. planes had attacked Taing Kauk.

The U.S. Command announced the loss of the first American fighter bomber in missions over Cambodia in more than two months.

The pilot, who managed to fly a crippled plane to the South China Sea, was rescued by helicopter after bailing out over the water. The plane was the 3,196th fixed wing aircraft to be lost in the Indochina war.

Anti-Dope Program Starts At Roots

BOSTON (AP) - An American Turkish program using crop substitution will "obliterate" the source of 80 per cent of the heroin used in the United States in the next three years, a narcotics expert says.

Richard A. Callahan, regional director for the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs, made the prediction at the annual seminar of the American Association for Industrial Security.

He also said there will be more stringent enforcement of drug smuggling laws, but added: "We are not naive enough to think that this will stop drug use. Drug abuse is merely symptomatic of more crucial social problems."

Causes of Violence Sought in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Denial of a college stadium for a rally was blamed Thursday for touching off Mexican American violence Wednesday night that injured 88 persons. The incident occured 78 days after an outburst that left three dead. But community leaders say the causes run deeper than that.

Education, housing, jobs, health, relations with the law-the catalogue of complaints on the city's teeming East Side is reminiscent of Negro frustrations that triggered the Watts riots of 1965.

And a new militancy is on the rise in Los Angeles County's estimated million plus Spanish surname population-second in size only to Mexico City's.

"Tle Taco is dead!" is the new slogan, Uncle Taco being the Mexican American equivalent of Uncle Tom. Brown is beautiful. The name of the game is pride and power.

A county supervisor, a congressman's aide and a Mexican American community leader said immediate cause of the new outburst was trustees' refusal to allow the East Los Angeles College stadium to be used as a dispersal point and for a rally after Wednesday night's Mexican Independence Day parade.

Trustees of the Community College System voted 4 to 3 against use of the facility, recalling the three deaths in the earlier riot.

Thousands of marchers were left milling about, President Esteban Torres of the Congress of Mexican American Unity told a news conference.

County Supervisor Ernest E. Debs agreed, saying Sheriff Peter J. Pitchess had asked use of the stadium.

"There were too many people and no place for them to go," said Edward Avila, field deputy to Rep. Edward R. Roybal, D Los Angeles.

Rocks, bottles and chunks of concrete flew from an angry crowd estimated by deputies at more than 1,000. A sniper bullet critically wounded Mike A. Lincon, 20, as he assisted officers in controlling the crowd.

Another civilian and a deputy sheriff suffered lesser bullet wounds. Thrown objects cut or bruised 55 other civilians and 30 deputies. None was hospitalized. Business building windows worth $2,400 were smashed, fires were set in trash cans, a country owned truck destroyed by flames.

Medvedev Book Indicts Soviet Lack of Freedom

LONDON (AP) - A noted Soviet scientist, tossed into a mental hospital by Communist authorities last spring because of his views, has produced a book, smuggled to the West, which severely indicts the Communist system for its restrictions on scientific freedom.

The smuggled manuscript, published Thursday by Macmillan and Co. in the original Russian, is called "The Medvedev Papers: the Plight of Soviet Science." It is by Dr. Zhores A. Medvedev, 45, a geneticist who headed a department at the Obninsk Institute of Medical Radiology.

A translated excerpt appeared in Nature, the journal of international science, and full English versions will be published next year in Britain and the United States.

Medvedev was detained by Soviet authorities for three weeks in a mental hospital last May because he challenged the system. His release resulted from strong protests lodged by fellow Russian scientists, but at present he is said to be unemployed.

The published excerpt of his book told how Medvedev was refused permission in 1966 to attend a symposium at Sheffield University, where he was invited to give a key lecture on "Molecular Aspects of Aging." He listed a maze of bureaucratic evasions that prevented him from attending.

Instead, Medvedev said, on the day the lecture was scheduled, he and others from four laboratories took their turn with other employees of city organizations in harvesting potatoes outside Obninsk.

"Dr. Medvedev has written a constructive criticism of the present arrangements and not a piece of subversive literature," said Nature. "It is earnestly to be hoped that it will be so regarded."

"Medvedev is not at all a subversive character-he is a patriot," said a spokesman for Macmillan's. "His book could do a lot to increase the flow of information and ideas between East and West."

Bomb Threat Causes Emergency Jet Landing

BANGOR, Maine (AP) - A Pan American World Airways 747 jumbo jet made an emergency landing at Bangor International Airport Thursday afternoon after an anonymous bomb threat was telephoned to Pan Am's New York office.

The jet carried 236 passengers and a crew of 16 and all evacuated the plane through its emergency chutes in 90 seconds.

The plane was moved to a remote corner of the airport where it was searched. An airport spokesman said no bomb was found.

Later the crew and all but one of the passengers boarded a relief jet to continue their flight to New York.

Five of those who hurried from the 747 were treated for minor injuries at a Bangor hospital. All were released, the spokesman said, except one person with a heart condition.

The jet was 70 miles out of Bangor flying at 35,000 feet when the pilot, Capt. Stewart Doe of Miami, Fla., was notified of the bomb threat.

Ky Told Not to "Tamper"

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon's Senate lieutenants told South Veitnam's Vice President Nguyen Cao Ky Thursday to stay home and not tamper with America's domestic affairs by speaking at a "march for victory" rally here.

Their strongly worded stand was immediately endorsed by Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana, by Sen. John Stennis, D Miss., chairman of the Armed Services Committee, and by a procession of Senate doves and hawks.

"It is wrong for an official of a foreign government to attempt to tamper with the political process and public opinion of another country," said Sen. Gordon Allott, R Colo., chairman of the Senate's Republican Policy Committee.

Allott, who often serves as Senate spokesman for the President's views, said Ky's acceptance of an invitation to speak at the Oct. 3 rally on the Washington Monument grounds could only reopen the wounds of American internal dissent over the war.

The rally is sponsored by the Rev. Carl McIntire, a fundamentalist radio cleric, who flew to Saigon last weekend to persuade Ky not to yield to what he said was pressure from the White House and State Department to stay home.

News Analysis

Hussein's Strategy

By The Associated Press

If King Hussin is gambling on forcing a showdown with the guerrillas in Jordan in a bid for national survival, he holds effective cards. He now has put it squarely up to the guerillas, proposing that they either submit to Jordan's government or fight.

This course has its dangers both for the Jordanian crown and the hopes for Middle East peace in general, but any course in present circumstances would be dangerous. Hussein, however, is a ruler whose friends and enemies alike pay tribute to the courage he has demonstrated in the past.

Hussein is not the sort to do nothing and wait to be overwhelmed. The idea of establishing military government and involing martial law to provoke a showdown now, rather than later, would have some logical attractions for him which could outweigh even the long term risk of a major world crisis.

First, it was likely that the present officers and a large majority of the Jordanian army would remain loyal to the king. Probably only a small minority these days are Palestinians. If so, this army of 55,000 probably can easily take care of Hussein's immediate enemies.

The enemies of the crown include combined guerrilla forces of about 32,000, about 12,000 Iraqi regulars camped on Jordanian soil, and whatever Syria might decide to send. The guerrillas are spread out, largely untrained forces whose command often is divided.

The Iraqis are not noted as soldiers. The Syrians have their own problems of guarding frontiers with Israel. And Hussein's enemies in general lack the know how and professionalism of the Jordanian army and its officers, heirs to the traditions of the elite British trained Arab Legion of years ago.

Hussein has chosen a strong right arm to head his military government. Field Marshal Habis Majali was trained by the British at Sandhurst. He is one of a corps of Bedouin leaders fiercely loyal to the 34 year old king.

Second, a showdown with the guerrillas now could put it up to Egypt's Gamal Abdel Nasser to demonstrate where he stands. In other years Nasser was among those crying for Hussein's scalp.

The situation is different now. Like Hussein, Nasser needs a measure of peace and stability and supports the idea that it is at least possible to achieve it with Israel, a premise rejected by the guerrillas.

Thus, in a sense, Nasser and Hussein are in the same tent, voices of relative moderation in a radical sea. Can Nasser now afford to have the extreme guerrillas in charge in Jordan and able to involve him in a new shooting war whether or not he is ready? Can he do anything to prevent this sort of development?

Osborne Concert to Feature Turn-of-the-Century Music

Dr. William Osborne will play a recital of turn-of-the-century American organ music in John M. Greene Hall at Smith College on Sunday at 8:00 p.m. The concert is open to the public, and there is no admission charge.

Dr. Osborne will perform music by Horatio Parker, George Whitefield Chadwick, Daniel Gregory Mason, Arthur Foote, and John Knowles Paine. The organ is the 1910 Austin of 70 stops especially suited to this music.

The recital, presented by the Smith College Department of Music, will coincide with the opening meeting of the Springfield Chapter of the American Guild of Organists.

Dr. Osborne is the University Organist and an associate professor of music at Denison University, Granville, Ohio. In addition, he is director of choral music. A native of Bradford, Pa., he took his formal advanced training at the University of Michigan, where he earned the doctor of musical arts degree in 1964. Dr. Osborne has studied with Robert Noehren and Marilyn Mason at Michigan and with Nadia Boulanger and Andre Marchal at the American Conservatory in Fontainebleau, France. He has concertized in this country and in Europe.

His present research interest is in Early American Music, and he has been collecting and arranging materials that reflect music in America during the 18th and 19th centuries. He has held research grants from the Carnegie Foundation through the Great Lakes Colleges Association and the Ford Foundation Humanities Program. At Denison he directs the 150-voice Concert Choir, the Chapel Choir, and the Denison Singers, a selected mixed chorus of 16 voices.

Following the recital Sunday evening, there will be an informal reception for all to meet Dr. Osborne in the back room at John M. Greene Hall.

Free Rock Concert Sun.

Fat, Clean Living, and Chamnish will appear Sunday in a free afternoon of rock at the campus pond. The Together Group plus one has arranged the concert, scheduled to begin at 2 p.m.

Fat performes frequently at U-Mass and this summer played at the Strawberry Fields festival in Canada. Their first album was recently released by RCA.

Clean Living is an acoustical guitar group including members of Bold and Boss Tweed. Chamnish is a newly formed group specializing in blues-rock sound.

The three groups are appearing on their own, because they enjoy performing. People are welcome to bring their own instruments for an all-together percussion jam. In case of rain, the concert will be held in the Campus Center auditorium.

Dancers Demonstrate

The University of Massachusetts Concert Dance Group will present a lecture-demonstration on dance choreography at 8:15 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, on September 21 and 22.

The program will show four methods of choreographing; the process of creating and rehearsing the dance; and the presentation of the finished art.

The program is primarily directed by students majoring in dance at the University and is being produced under the supervision of Marilyn V. Patton and Daniel Peterson.

Play to Depict HansberryLife

Connecticut Valley theatre audiences will have an opportunity to see the New York production of Lorraine Hansberry's "To Be Young, Gifted and Black" at UMass Friday and Saturday, Sept. 25 and 26. All performances will be held in Bowker Auditorium.

"To Be Young, Gifted and Black" is the first offering in the 1970-71 UMass Fine Arts Council Series. The Series will bring to the campus some 40 major professional events in popular, classical and chamber music, theatre and contemporary dance.

Critical acclaim for "To Be Young, Gifted and Black" has been high wherever the production has appeared. Clive Barnes, writing in the New York Times, has called the production "wonderfully moving and entertaining."

"To Be Young, Gifted and Black" is the story of the black author Lorraine Hansberry, who died at the age of 34 of cancer. At 29, she became the youngest American the fifth woman, and the only black dramatist to win the coveted New York Drama Critic's Circle Award for the Best Play of the Year, "A Raisin in the Sun."

Tippo Debut

Chancellor Oswald Tippo commenced the school year on a bad note Wednesday when he fired a Convocation address that was a classical example of a needless hard line and threatening overreaction.

We share with the Chancellor his concern of legislative repression that has been demonstrated elsewhere, California being the prime example. And we share his consternation concerning bomb threats, building defacing, etc. And we fully realize that Agnewian reactions are sweeping middle America.

However, it is unfortunate that the Chancellor took the tone of issuing threats and direct reprisal. He himself has stated that Massachusetts has been fortunate to escape repressive legislation. He did not add this is due in a large part to the dedication of the huge majority of students here, to the rejection of violence. The May Student Strike is a recent reminder.

UMass has not had firebombings or destruction that schools suffering repression have had. And UMass has only closed, in essence once, last spring, and even then workshops, etc. continued an educative process that even had some visiting legislators interested.

Administrators repeatedly stress that to maintain their beloved tri-partite community, there must be mutual trust between all sides. The Chancellor seems to have indicated that he has lost that trust towards this student body because of the defacing of a building, and because of the fear of a legislature that has onlymutely threatened.

In the past Dr. Tippo has indicated strong willingness to reason with students in order to prevent the polarization that has reached tragic proportions around the country. His Wednesday speech does not continue this tradition.

We realiza that the Chancellor needed a public statement that would pacify those on the right. But he didn't have to use an occasion that is designed for the university community, nor did he have to issue a statement that is so rigidly menacing.

He could at least have given some credit to a student body that in the face of growing violence by their contemporaries has tried to remain peaceful.

Campus Conspiracy

Dr. Edward Chalfant, editor of Measure, the newsletter of the University Centers for Rational Alternatives, told the NAM Public Affairs Committee meeting in Atlanta that there is a conspiracy to bring crisis to the universities but that new teacher-leaders are working to solve the problem.

Dr. Chalfant said the university crisis has an active side and a passive side. "In addition to the terrorists and the unconditional pacifists, there are those who wish not to object very strongly, or at all, to the actions of the one or the other." He emphasized that the campus revolution is partly going forward by consent.

He warned of the danger from faculty nihilists and noted that the New University Conference of professors has not been investigated by Federal officials looking at campus unrest.

But he offered some hope.

"We in America shall begin to get out of the social problems that are now tormenting us in proportion as men and women who are not lawyers and are not generals (the traditional leaders) prepare themselves for ultimate public responsibilities. The educators must take the lead in surmounting the university crisis."

While asserting that college teachers "by and large are a sorry lot," Dr. Chalfant predicted that the new leaders who are emerging among the teachers will "prove in action that they are capable of understanding the university crisis . . .and that they are actually moving to bring about its solution."

Optional Chicanery

"I can't imagine any faculty member running his own show...the only thing which we faculty really care about is our student's welfare."

This was the way in which the Faculty Senate's representative to the Board of Trustees, Henry Korson, told the Board in August that all faculty members would abide by a Board directive, which asks all faculty members not to schedule exams during the time of the "optional" Princeton Plan.

It was with this statement that Korson answered student trustee Glenn Elters' fear that some faculty might disregard the Trustees wishes, and by scheduling exams during the Princeton Plan week in effect, would punish student s for their political beliefs.

This was the way Korson told the Board that the Faculty wouldn't mind if they defeated the Princeton Plan, which the Faculty-Senate passed in May. This was the Korson told the Board that the faculty would cooperate with students this fall.

"I can't imagine any faculty member running his own show...the only thing which we faculty really care about is our students' welfare."

It is the first day of the new semester, and the government Professor stands in his class andtells his students, "I'm not paying any attention to the so-called Princeton Plan...if you want to skip a week or two of classes during the semester, go right ahead, but you better be willing to accept the consequences."

A few hours later, in the belly of Machmer, a math instructor says, "I'm told that no exams are to be scheduled during the Princeton Plan week, and I haven't made out the exam schedule for this course as yet. But I can tell you this, I'm not about to alter my course for any Trustee brainstorm."

"I can't imagine any faculty member running his own show...the only thing which we faculty really care about is our students' welfare."

It is obvious that Elters fear that an optional Princeton Plan would only encourage faculty to discriminate against students whose political beliefs they disagreed with has been born out. It has also become clear that the Board of Trustees are unable to judge the mood or opinion of the faculty in general from the reports which they receive from Henry Korson.

A great number of faculty members, it appears, will jump at the opportunity to "punish" students with whom they disagree politically. The best example of this is the instructor who told his government class, "If any of you participated in last year's Student Strike, perhaps you should look around for another section... this one may not be too pleasant for you."

Henry Korson aside, many faculty members seem intent to run their own shows and disregard the welfare of their students. And there isn't a hell of a lot that can be done about it.

Letters To The Editor

It's The Secretaries

To the editor:

It was last semester, with the strike and all, when you realized that the white fortress was not the haven of misanthropes its structure seemed to indicate. Rather, out of some quiet office, a rather quiet form was issued which simply abolished grades as we, the students, once so fondly know them. Someone wasn't a close-eared so and so after all. Closed mouth, though, quietly subverting and changing his or its hierarchical surrounds by just merely 'popping the balloon' with a little pen and ink. Well, it would have come anyway, or has it come to anything?

Point of information: The new Campus Center, is based literally on two floors of student services. And running the rest of the "wonder" floors is the Campus Center Supervisor, the Hotel Manager, and many other student-unrelated organizations. All fine and good, but did you ever try to see, meet, or make an appointment with any of these gentlemen: The secretaries say their busy. You say that you could come back later. They say their bosses are out of town. Can you make an appointment? What about? What else, could you see this boss for a job, work or whatever. Sorry, you can't make an appointment for that. Why not? Because you just can't...

Look there are a thousand students who want to see Mr.- - - and he can't see all of them. And you say, I see only one here now. She says, sorry. Who can I see? I don't know, she says. (Then desperately) then could I ask Mr.---? NO!

Conclusion: There are real people in the Campus Center as there were in Whitmore, but they seem to be hiding behind the dresses now. My plea then is to quit this gate-way interference because, from past experience, I know that people listen. Or for those who must, don the misanthropic skirt and blouse and really make the decisions yourselves. And in this specific case, it is a decision of how do you want to confront those thousand students.

ART BUCHWALD

Political Football Has Started

The national political football season has just opened, and Coach Dick Nixon has indicated he hopes to drop several Democrats from the United States congressional team.

He has assigned the task of getting rid of these players to Assistant Coach Spiro Agnew.

"Our motto here," Agnew told reporters in the White House locker room, "is you either play for Coach Dick Nixon, or you don't play at all."

"Then you hope to get as many Republicans on the congressional team as possible?" a reporter asked.

"That's correct. We're sick and tired of mealy-mouth defeatist, radical-liberal players who have been trying to wreck Coach Nixon's game plan. We radical-liberal players who have been trying to wreck Coach Nixon's game plan. We don't want them here, and we're going to do everything in our power to see they con't come back."

"Then you feel there are disloyal elements on the team?"

"I don't feel it. I know it. The Democrats have been causing dissension ever since Coach Nixon took over. They've been running down Nixon's strategy, praising our opponents and keeping us from winning a game. They're playing only to the students, radicals, bomb throwers, peaceniks, pornographers and long-hairs in the stands. We feel these hopeless hysterical hypochondriacs have no right to wear the red, white and blue colors of the United States team."

"Coach Agnew, are you saying the Democratic members of the team are responsible for all the disruptions in the stands?"

"That's correct. These Democrat troglodytic leftist players have encouraged defiance of authority, have been responsible for destroying the cheer-leading for Coach Nixon, and have made it possible for the other teams to think they can beat us. We're going to weed out these effete malcontents and make sure only true-blue Americans suit up for Uncle Sam."

"There has been some question raised, Coach Agnew, that Coach Nixon's strategy leaves a lot to be desired."

"This question was raised by the Eastern Establishment sports' press," said Agnew angrily. "The columnists and reporters keep writing what's wrong with the team, but they never say anything about what we're doing right. Why don't you sports writers tell the truth?"

"What is the truth, Coach?"

"That Coach Nixon is the greatest coach in the history of political footaall. He plays hard and he plays dirty, and he expects nothing less from any of us. But every time he comes up with a sure-fire play, the radical lib-rals try to block it, or start their pusillanimous pussy-footing around the wrong end. The fans are getting sick and tired of it."

A trainer started to rub some invective into Coach Agnew's spleen.

"Ah," he said, "that feels good. Well, gentlemen, I have to go on the field now and see how many goldbricking nabobs of negativism I can bump from the squad. Are there any more questions?"

"One more, Coach. What does your defense look like?"

"It's never been better. If we win any games this year Coach Nixon will get all the credit. If we lose any we'll blame it all on Coach Lyndon Johnson who messed up everything before we took over the team."

New Courses Set

(Editor's note-The following are descriptions of two courses which are new to the University this Fall.)

Asian Studies

This course provides an opportunity to become acquainted with some of the major works of one of mankind's richest literatures. Japan has been perhaps the most creative and successful nation during the past generation in coping with the twentieth century. It may be argued that this success is due in large part to the strength and persistence of the Japanese traditional order. During the course of the year the literary aspects of this remarkable homogeneous and consistent order will be examined on a broad scale. The sources will be translations of works of literature which are important both as expressions of their own particular times and for their subsequent influences on thought, taste, and style in all areas of life. The goal of the course will be to provide students with points of view from which to examine afresh some of the problems of our own time and place.

Comparative Literature 243 will be given in Autumn semester. It will concern itself with Japanese literature from its beginnings until 1600. Topics to be considered will include Buddhism and Shinto and the productive tensions between them in the Japanese world view, the evolution of ideal masculine and feminine types and a radically different kind of courtly love, the development of a poetry of direct and unintellectualized response to experience, the rise of female genius and the early success of the novel, the rise of martial values and the military epic, and what nearly a millenium and a half of intense devotion to letters and literary values means in the development of a civilization.

Comp. Lit. 243

The course will emphasize the practice of Zen tradition and the symbolistic behavior that expresses the universality of Buddha-nature. Lectures will be based on Zen dialogues from both Chinese and Japanese sources, and the nature and processes of Zen Buddhism, a special transmission outside of the Buddhist Sacred Teaching, will be analyzed.

The course will include Zen characteristics, the function of Zen symbols, Zen style behavior, and Zen monastic perfectionism. These features will be studied in order to understand Zen styles of argument and their verifiability.

Class will be held at Holdsworth Hall, Room 305, 11:15 MWF

Poison Quized Begon

WASHINGTON (AP) - After years of prodding by Congress, the Interior Department agreed Thursday to ask industries to tell the government how much and what kind of poisons they dump into the nation's streams.

The department said work toward making the first voluntary national inventory of industrial wastes will begin within a month. But the public will not be privy to all the information.

The decision was hailed by members of a House Government Operations subcommittee, one of the congressional panels which has long sought it.

But skepticism persisted. Because some of the information will be kept secret, Rep. Henry S. Reuss, D Wis., said he fears a government coverup of the names of polluters and where and when they dump industrial wastes.

But Undersecretary of the Interior Fred J. Russell and David D. Dominick, commissioner of the Federal Water Quality Administration, said the public will receive essential information.

What will be kept confidential are trade secrets covering operations and processes of plants, Russell said.

The policy will be to tell the public what an industry is doing with industrial wastes, not "how he did it," Russell said. The information will be solicited by a questionnaire sent to industries, along with instructions.

Dominick said one thing that held up the inventory proposal was the extent the data obtained would be confidential. He indicated also there had been disagreements by high officials.

Reuss demanded the names of the officials responsible. Dominick and Russell held their ground in refusing to disclose them.

But in Dominick's written statement, he said the Bureau of the Budget refused in 1968 to approve a proposed questionaire.

"Needless to say," Reuss said, "We are delighted after seven long years the questionaire this committee has been asking for is finally a reality."

In his statement, Dominick gave these details of how the plan will work:

-Submission of industrial waste information to the government is completely voluntary. But once an industry submits it, it can be used by the government even for prosecution.

-Information on trade secrets and plant operations and processes will be kept from the public. Release will be limited to statistical summaries not naming the plants.

-The information will be available to state, interstate and local water pollution control officials.

Big City Wheels

WHEELY COMMUTERS — Some of approximately 1,000 persons ride bicycles through New York's Fifth Avenue as they participate in Mayor John V. Lindsay's "Bike for a Better City" day earlier this week. The program was one of several the ci ties has initiated this year, including "Clear-Air Day", which are designed to make the city a nicer place in which to live, city administrators claim.

Direct Election Hits First Snag

WASHINGTON (AP) - Supporters of a constitutional amendment for electing the president by direct popular vote lost a critical round in the Senate Thursday but maintained they still have a chance of winning.

A 54-36 vote fell 6 short of the required two thirds majority for putting the debate closing cloture rule into effect and forcing a showdown on the proposed amendment.

Pending an analysis of the vote, Democratic leader Mike Mansfield of Montana reserved decision on whether to let the debate run on or to drop the amendment and turn to other legislation.

"I don't want to go through an exercise in futility," he said. "I don't believe in putting on a charade for the benefit of any group."

Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., chief Senate sponsor of the direct election plan, said he would try to keep it alive. "I don't intend to play dead," he told newsmen.

The proposed amendment would abolish the Electoral College and provide that a presidential candidate receiving 40 per cent or more of the popular vote would be elected. If no candidate received 40 per cent, a runoff election would be held between the two front runners.

The House approved the amendment by a 339-70 vote almost exactly a year ago and President Nixon subsequently endorsed it. To take effect, even if approved by the required two-thirds margins in the Senate, it would have to be ratified by 38 of the 50 state legislatures.

The move to cut off the Senate debate that began Sept. 8 was initiated by Mansfield two days ago and provided the first test of strength between the opposing sides.

It was not a clear cut test, however, since Sens. Alan Bible, D-Nev., and Robert D. Byrd, D-W. Va., who are among the sponsors of the direct election amendment, voted against closing out the debate.

And some others said they felt the move was premature. Bayh himself said he favored waiting longer to try for cloture. He said some of his colleagues honestly felt the issue should be debated more thoroughly.

Of the 54 senators who voted for ending the debate, 33 were Democrats and 21 were Republicans. Voting against the move were 18 senators of each party mostly from southern and small states.

Stowaway Soaked

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) - A young German stowaway who jumped ship Tuesday and swam about 650 feet to a Portland Harbor island while pushing an air tight can containing dry clothing is now awaiting a deportation hearing.

George Tanner, 22, was taken into custody by police Wednesday after he stopped at a South Portland barber shop to ask directions to Boston. Several persons there had heard about his disappearance and notified police.

Immigration officials said the West German waiter had boarded the tanker Athol King in Lisbon, Portugal. The ship went to the Persian Gulf, then called at Portland with a shipment of crude oil.

Tippo Sees Dangers

CHANCELLOR TIPPO, at convocation this week, spoke of the dangers which he feels the University faces from off-campus areas, such as the State Legislature. (MDC photo by Steve Schmidt)

We will be subject to repressive legislation and serious budget cuts, even warnings of withdrawal of complete state support, if we have any more building takeovers, if we have any more interference with free speech and free movement including attendance at class, if we have continued defacing of buildings and damage to buildings, if we continue to have strikes and other interruptions of academic work, and if we do not keep the campus open for those who come here for the serious purposes of study and teaching. Certainly you have to be a moron to think that the taxpayers of this state will continue to appropriate large sums of money, money which is desperately needed for other purposes, if the University does not stay open to provide the education for which the money is voted. It is my sober judgment that this University cannot long survive unless WE TAKE IMMEDIATE steps to put our house in order.

I hope that I never live to see the day when we have to bring in the police to quell a disturbance. I assure you before we take that last unfortunate step there will be full consultation with student leaders, the Faculty Senate Emergency Committee which is set up for precisely such purposes, and appropriate administrators. But surely any thinking person must realize that if we do not bring in the police in the event of a serious disturbance, the matter will be taken out of our hands. This may lead to tragedy as it has on other campuses.

With respect to recruiting, our policy is to provide the opportunity for any student who wishes -- no one if forced -- to have interviews with industrial, school and governmental representatives.

It is University policy to sponsor and encourage research which enhances the educational program of the University -- the training of students, undergraduate and graduate. Our decision whether to undertake a particular piece of research must be based on professional evaluation of the soundness of the project and the scientific and scholarly value of the proposed study. These judgments must be made by peer groups of qualified and experienced scientists and scholars. In each case we must ask, are we the appropriate agency to do the research? Can it be done better here, or somewhere else? Just as we have freedom of speech, we must have freedom of research, freedom of scholarship, and and freedom of inquiry.

Freedom of speech is a cardinal principle of the institution known as a university. Universities have fought for centuries to acquire, to protect, and to foster freedom of speech. We cannot give up this right. We intend to follow the recommendations of the Faculty Senate report in dealing with episodes similar to the disgraceful Humphrey affair of last year: warning by responsible University administrators, prompt disciplinary action, and provision for opposition spokesmen to present their views following the presentation by a controversial speaker.

Perpetrators of bomb threats and defacers of buildings have no place in a university community and must be separated from the institution.

Ecology, like charity, begins at home. In addition to enunciating lofty principles and in addition to criticizing the actions of other people and other groups, let us practice good ecology on our own campus by not littering papers, beer cans and other refuse; by placing signs, notices and posters on bulletin boards; by respecting lawns, flower beds and shrubbery; and by not adding to the pollution of the campus pond.

I now turn to a consideration of the central purposes of the University -- learning and teaching. We must give greater emphasis to our responsibilities of teaching. Students demand it, taxpayers and legislators demand it, the logic of the times demand it. We must put our house in order lest we have imposed on us from outside severe, rigid and educationally unsound restrictions. Now I am well aware of the fact that a faculty member has many legitimate demands on his time -- research and scholarship, administrative work at the departmental, school and university levels, and public service. I also am aware of the inadequacy of the teaching load as a complete measure of a faculty member's contributions to the University. However, when all this is said and admitted, we must recognize that an appropriate amount of time must be devoted to teaching. Our 15 to 1 faculty-student ratio imposes this upon us.

I think also that we must all rearrange our academic priorities so that we may increase our informal contacts with students in residential colleges, dormitories, lounges, coffee shops, at home and wherever good conversation is promoted. I ask that every faculty member see to it that this year he come to know well at least fifteen students. After all, we do have a 15 to 1 faculty-student ratio. Let us give real human meaning and significance to this ratio. I intend to do my part by continuing my weekly meetings with Senate leaders, by having regular meetings with the editors of the COLLEGIAN, by holding informal meetings with other student groups to tap the diversity of opinion and life styles of students, and by continuing the weekly open question period for students in the Student Union. If we all do this well, all 1300 members of the faculty, I am sure we will go far in understanding our students better, in alleviating the alleged alienation and dehumanization of a large institution, in enhancing our teaching, and in improving our educational endeavors in general.

By SYDNEY OMARR

by Sidney Omarr

Former child star Jane Withers is an astrology buff. Her horoscope was drawn up and interpreted when she was at the height of her motion picture career. The horoscope, according to Jane, was a gift from President Franklin Roosevelt.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Money comes and goes — at swift pace. Keep track of expenses. Check budget with expert. Concentrate on more efficient management of funds.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Cycle continues high; but a talk with mate or partner is essential. New outlook is required. Surprise is due, of pleasant variety. Reassure loved one.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Avoid trying to do too much at one sitting. Moderation should be key. Sharp knowledge. You actually learn now by teaching. Review some basic lessons concepts.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Social event is favored. Accept invitation. Best to leave details to others. Change of pace is required. Take long-range view. Have fun. Enjoy compliments by opposite sex.

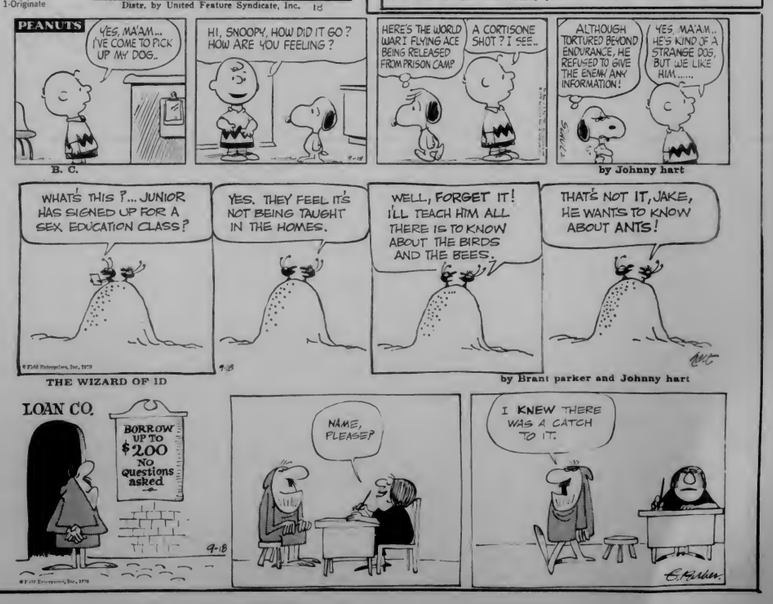
LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Many of your aspirations can be fulfilled. Depends on how you relate to special individual. Obtain hint from Cancer-message. Decline to be discouraged by minor obstacle.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Travel is accented. Some basic change now in picture. Guard valuables. What you possess is due to go up in price. Key is erratic awareness. Study your power. Analyze what you read.

LIBRA (Sept 23 - Oct. 22): Definite gain indicated. Entertain at home. You can make favorable impression on individual important in your life. Excellent for purchase of luxury item.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): What appears on surface may be an illusion. Quarrel with loved one needlessly stimulates emotions. Don't take others or yourself — too seriously. Discard rumors, secret doubts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Some responsibilities are restrictive. Go with tide. One in authority will relent. Know this and bide your time. You have allies who are working in your behalf.



CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Expand horizons. You need not feel tied down — wake up and live. One who professes to feel deeply may exhibit selfish streak. Plan this and take steps to protect security.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Other individuals may have disputes. Don't get caught in middle. Self-sacrificing attitude is not constructive. You have a right to receive credit due.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Pressure measures are not garbled. Interpret correctly. Avoid tendency to exaggerate. Review various possibilities. Clutch up on correspondence. Clear communication lines.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you draw people to you during times of emergency. You function best under pressure. You recently met challenge and surmounted obstacles. This will become evident in short time.

Redmen Seek Same Trend vs. Maine

UMass Wants Big Win . . . In Opener at 1 p.m.

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

UMass will be seeking to continue a recent opening game trend when it initiates its season against the University of Maine Saturday afternoon at 1 at Alumni Stadium.

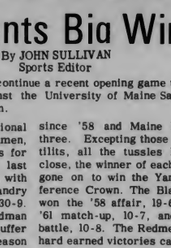
The Black Bears, a traditional first-game foes of the Redmen, have been relative pushovers for Vic Fusia's gang over the last three years. In 1967 UMass, with stellar quarterback Greg Landry at the controls, won easily, 30-9.

The following year, a Redman club that was destined to suffer through a miserable 2-8 season had little trouble with Maine, copping the opener, 21-3, while 1969 saw the comebacking UMass team post a big 49-7 victory.

Commencement contests with the Black Bears have not always been this easy, however. The Redmen and their Maine buddies have opened up their campaigns against each other ever since 1958 with one exception, 1961.

UMass has won nine of the games since '58 and Maine has taken three. Excepting those last three tilits, all the tussles have been close, the winner of each has often gone on to win the Yankee Conference Crown. The Black Bears won the '58 affair, 19-6, the odd '61 match-up, 10-7, and the '65 battle, 10-8. The Redmen's hard-hard earned victories came in '59, 21-16, in '60, 21-13, in '62, 10-0, in '63, 14-7, in '64, 6-0, and in '66, 10-7. Which of the two trends will have the upper hand on Saturday remains to be seen.

Maine is coming off of its first winning season since 1965. Last autumn's Black Bears put together a 5-4 record and were second with Connecticut in the Conference with a 3-2 mark. Maine usually is high-spirited, although inexperience at several starting positions could hinder the team against a physically bigger UMass squad, which averages 215.5 pounds to Maine's 195.1 pounds.



The starting line-ups for both clubs are printed below. Senior Ken Hughes will start at quarterback for the Redmen while sophomores Ron Cote and Henry Hastings will be the Black Bear Q's, filling in for the disabled Bob Hamilton, who sustained a shoulder injury last week. UMass' line-up is pretty much intact, although three men, Joe Lang, Bob Cabrelli and Walter O'Malley are vying for the split end job.

Head coach Fusia is still very much concerned about the status of the Redman attack. He commented, "Our offense isn't functioning as I thought it would at this stage. I'm hopeful we'll start moving the ball and that our timing will come around.

"We're not coming off as we were late last fall. We're not exploding. We're hesitant." Fusia is looking for a balanced attack and has concentrated the efforts of the coaching staff on the passing game in order to put it on a level with the more-potent UMass ground attack.

On behalf of the defense, Fusia indicated that he expected a better performance from this unit than the one it came up with against Cornell in last Friday's scrimmage. He said, "I think that eventually this is going to be a fine defensive unit. I'm hopeful this will start on Saturday. "It is necessary to get to Maine fast. This is a troublesome club if you give them room to operate."

When he was asked about what type of game he expected Maine to play, he could say very little for the Redmen really only know what the Black Bears' tendencies were last year and therefore can't predict what Maine will come up with tomorrow. "You can only assume that they'll stem from what they've done in the past," he explained.

THE GREAT ONE

The great one is back. Though widespread rumors had circulated that he had decided to hang up his mocassins and head for that big reservation in the sky, the ingenious injun has returned full of wit, whiskey and wise predictions for his thousands of followers.

Though looking pale and wan after a long summer of campaign canvassing (and sick of being called a Red) the great one has recovered from his NIT catastrophe and is willing to let bygones be bygones as his old friend General Custer used to say.

With his ear to the ground, and his mouth full of dirt, he has once again entered that select circle of soothsayers to bring you the results before they happen. Incredible, you say. Unbelievable. Perhaps. But the old injun has had the job so long that he's starting to believe he can actually do it. And what else can he do, work in a cigar store? The great one hates smoke, so here he goes again.

UMASS 35, MAINE 7

Benner is gone and so is Wing, But the Redmen haven't lost their sting.

UCONN 37, VERMONT 17

Zitto and Clements should be running well,
May make Catamounts think that Storrs is hell.

B.C. 24, VILLANOVA 21

Wildcats come close to victory wreath,
But beating Eagles like pulling teeth. (Someone call a doctor, the injun is sick.)

B.U. 21, COLGATE 6

B.U. offense may seem Hollo,
But where he leads the Terriers follow.

But Nittany Lions will show no pity.

While winless Bulls still search for first.

NEBRASKA 22, U.S.C. 20

But the Cornhuskers simply have more crunch. (Injun must be getting senile.)

Syracuse Blacks Give Proposals

SYRACUSE, N. Y. (AP) - Eight black athletes, suspended for the season from the Syracuse University football team, delivered proposals for their reinstatement to Chancellor John Corbally Thursday, but the proposals were similar to those rejected earlier.

However, Dr. Clifford J. Winters, an assistant chancellor acting in Corbally's absence, said the university would study and discuss the documents.

Black Nationalist To Address Forum

Joe Miles, a founding member of GIs United Against the War in Vietnam; Black Nationalist and socialist candidate for U.S. Congress, will speak tonight on "The Need for Black Control of the Black Community" in room 168 of the Campus Center at 8 PM. The lecture is first of a series to be presented by the Militant Forum on alternate Monday nights.

Miles is a 21 year old anti-War activist and a former GI organizer at Fort Jackson and Fort Bragg. He is presently the Socialist Workers Party (SWP) candidate for Congress in the Ninth Congressional District, the home of Louise Day Hicks. He has been an active participant in both the anti-War and Black liberation struggles since 1967 when as a student at American University in Washington D.C. he joined the Young Socialist Alliance. Presently he is a member of the YSA's National Committee.

A former member of SNCC, Miles helped organize a Black Student Union at American University and later participated in establishing a Washington Chapter of the Black Anti-War Anti-Draft Union. He served as chairman of this organization during 1968. The Washington Black Anti-War Anti-Draft Union initiated and organized a demonstration at the South African Embassy in support of their African brothers, and actively supported the March 1968 student occupation of Howard University.

Drafted in 1968, Joe Miles continued his anti-war activity at Fort Jackson and Fort Bragg, helping to organize GIs United Against the War. Exiled to Alaska while still in the Army, he has just received his discharge. As both a black nationalist and a socialist, Joe Miles intends to run a campaign for the seat being vacated by John McCormack which will put forth not just an alternative political candidate--but an alternative political and social system.

Miles stated, at a press conference announcing his decision to run for Congress, that his candidacy "will work to mobilize large numbers of people around the demand for immediate and total withdrawal from Southeast Asia.

He further stated, "As a recent GI, I intend to fight vigorously for a 'yes' vote on the immediate withdrawal question in the November referendum, and will muster support for an end to the draft as well as full constitutional rights for GIs.

Campus Swans Play Host To Rock Fans

By DAVID WILLIAMS
Tuesday Issue Editor

It was last spring all over again. A big crowd by the pond, some music to listen to, some dope to smoke and of course Eric with a microphone.

The quickest way to tell that it was this fall and not last spring was by how ugly everyone got over nothing.

Things got off to a bad start in the first place, someone monkeyed with the electricity and for a while there was no music, no nothing, just a lot of people and wine and dope. But when the plugs were all back in the fun began. Chammish played first and was good.

But then people got ugly. Eric the Rat, with his dreams of having a real boogie by the pond close to becoming a reality, stepped up to the microphone and almost got himself blown into eternity.

He wanted the people to move out of the "travel area" into the "rest and recreation area" so that when the "people" tried to "get their heads into the boogie" they wouldn't step on anyone.

Unfortunately though, there were a few who elected to withstand Eric's scathing exhortations to move and one man even went so far as to throw some water at Eric. This gentleman got whacked with a big stick for his efforts and Eric was almost the victim of a little good-old-fashioned mob violence. Things looked very ugly. But the band played on, they called themselves "Fat", and the crowd quieted down and the rest of the afternoon was given over to some gentle drinking, smoking and listening.

RECEIVING THE CROWD'S ACCLAIM is Eric Walgren, local minister of the Universal Life Church. The crowd had gathered beside the campus pond for a rock concert and a "boogie" that was aborted by a few members of the large but otherwise peaceful crowd.

Syria Accused Of Invading Jordan

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Jordan accused Syria of launching two armored invasions of northern Jordan yesterday and the United States demanded that the Syrians pull back immediately.

Jordan said the Syrians first crossed the border at Ramtha and made a second push 15 hours later toward Irbid. The towns are about 10 miles apart and approximately 50 miles north of Amman, the capital. An Amman broadcast said a "fierce battle" was underway near Irbid, Jordan's second largest city.

Baghdad radio broadcast a claim Sunday night by Al Fatah guerrilla leader Yasir Arafat that a Jordanian brigade had been torn to pieces and was retreating. He called on survivors to surrender with their weapons to the revolutionary command at Irbid or risk trial before guerrilla courts.

President Noureddin Atassi of Syria issued a denial after Jordan reported the first invasion early Sunday. He said the announcement was a fabrication designed to bring U.S. military intervention in Jordan.

King Hussein's troops appeared Sunday to be winning the battle of Amman against Palestinian guerrillas. But a polled report from news correspondents in Amman said guerrillas held out in pockets of the capital and fought from street to street in hopes the Soviet equipped Syrian armored brigades would roll in to rescue them.

In Washington, Secretary of State William P. Rogers said the United States condemned "this irresponsible and imprudent intervention of Syria into Jordan." He called on Syria to end its reported invasion immediately and pointedly asked the Soviet Union to urge a Syrian pullback.

He stopped short of threatening military action by the United States, although President Nixon has been reported ready to intervene if he judged it necessary to save Jordan.

Eyewitness reports in Beirut newspapers generally said government tanks and artillery controlled the main highways in the north, but a guerrilla communique broadcast by Damascus radio claimed "crushing victory for the guerrillas, who now control the whole northern part of Jordan."

Four days of fighting have cost an estimated 10,000 dead and injured, many of them civilians.

There was no word of the 54 hostages taken from three jetliners hijacked two weeks ago by guerrillas of the Marxist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine. The hostages, 38 of them Americans, are believed held in small groups in houses in Amman.

Balloon To Cross Atlantic

EAST HAMPTON, N.Y. (AP) - Three adventurers took healthy swigs from a bottle of champagne, sprayed some on nearby well wishers, then lifted off in their 80 foot high balloon "Free Life" Sunday for what they hope will be the first such crossing of the Atlantic Ocean.

The orange, white and yellow helium filled balloon made a slow ascent from a cow pasture in this Long Island community, rose into a northeast wind and headed out to sea. Thousands of people who gathered on the farm of Edward Miller at dawn to watch the takeoff cheered.

"We hope to make it," said Rod Anderson, a 32 year old commodities broker. "Cheerio." With him in the 12 foot by 4 foot fiber glass gondola was his wife, television actress Pamela Brown, 28, and Malcolm Brighton, 32, of Farnham, England, an aeronautical engineer and amateur balloonist.

Brighton said he saw no reason why they should not make a successful flight across the 3,000 miles of water, but declined to predict where they would land.

"We'll take any inch of land we can get," he said. The trip is expected to take from six to 16 days, depending on the weather, with speeds averaging up to 50 miles per hour.

If the flight is successful, it will set a distance record for all balloons and be the first time the Atlantic was crossed in such an aircraft.

The record now is 1,896 miles, set by an eight man German flying team in 1914 in a Class 10 balloon. The "Free Life" is a smaller Class 8 balloon.

Anderson, a novice in the sport with only 30 minutes flying time, has been planning the trip for the past four years.

"There are so few adventures left," he said, "I wanted to try it."

Guerrillas Gain Backing

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - The Arab world generally lined up on the guerrillas' side. Neighboring Iraq which has maintained 12,000 troops in Jordan since the 1967 Middle East war, has threatened repeatedly to intervene on the side of the guerrillas.

President Houari Boumedienne of Algeria said Sunday night his country and Morocco "hold a common position" against the liquidation of the Palestinian resistance movement. Libya warned it would take individual action for the Palestinians if the conflict were not settled in 24 hours.

President Gamal Abdel Nasser of Egypt, who has expressed support for the guerrillas but has not condemned Hussein, urged the 34 year old monarch to intervene personally to halt the fighting and said "dangerous consequences" would result otherwise.

Curfew Imposed In Riot-Torn Town

THIBODAUX, La. (AP) - Mayor Warren J. Harang Jr., declared yesterday that a civil emergency continued in this southeast Louisiana town, and he reimposed a curfew "until further notice" following racial fights and disturbances.

The trouble started with fights between blacks and whites Friday night, and steamed up when groups of blacks smashed car windows and tossed rocks and bottles at police early Saturday, officials said.

Harang said the trouble began with an argument after a high school football game.

However, the situation was generally calm Saturday night although 38 persons were arrested, police said, mostly for curfew violations Most were released on $50 bonds.

Harang proclaimed a state of civil emergency Saturday and imposed a curfew between 9 p.m. and 5 a.m.

He met with other authorities Sunday and decided to continue his proclamation and the curfew between midnight and 4 a.m. in order "to protect the public health, safety and welfare." Law officers from surrounding areas were put on a standby alert.

He said persons except those on official business found on the streets during curfew hours will be arrested.

It was not determined if the disturbances were in any way related to Saturday's Democratic primary for municipal posts, including on in which a Negro candidate was running.

In the election for the post of trustee of public property, the incumbent and another white man were sent into a runoff while the black candidate was defeated.

Harang said Friday's disturbance peaked when roaming groups of blacks moved through a racially mixed neighborhood smashing windows and throwing rocks and bottles at police.

A tavern was destroyed by fire, and volunteer firemen battling the blaze were threatened and harassed.

Morrison Convicted

MIAMI (AP) - Bearded entertainer Jim Morrison, self annointed "king of orgasmic rock", was convicted yesterday of indecent exposure and profanity during a 1969 concert in Miami.

The indecent exposure count was based on prosecution charges that Morrison lowered his trousers before the large audience.

A three man, three woman jury ended 16 days of testimony with the convictions, but found the lead singer of The Doors rock group innocent of lewd and lacivious conduct and being drunk publicly.

Morrison's bond was raised from $5,000 to $50,000 by Criminal Court Judge Murray Goodman after the convictions. He was booked into county jail and immediately released on the new bond.

Goodman said sentencing would be Oct. 23. The maximum sentence could be eight months in jail and $525 fine.

Verbal Abuse Outlawed

TOLEDO, OHIO (AP) - Anyone calling policemen "pigs" will be arrested under provisions of a new city ordinance prohibiting verbal abuse of law-enforcement officials.

The city Safety Director, Clifford Quinn, in a special message to all members of the police division, ordered arrests made for violations, adding that persons making noises such as "oink oink," also were subject to arrest.

"Imitating noises made by such animals also can be construed as verbal abuse," Mr. Quinn said.

Conviction on abuse charges can bring a maximum sentence of 30 days in jail and a $50 fine.

Protest Leader Comes Back

BERKELEY, Calif., (AP) - Bushy-haired and fiery leader Mario Savio, of the 1964 Free Speech Movement, which gave birth to a new dimension of campus protest, says he is re-entering the University of California.

Mr. Savio, now 27 years old and still bushy-haired, was asked by a newsman yesterday whether he would re-enter the political arena on the Berkeley campus. He replied, "I am going back as a student."

A university spokesman confirmed that Mr. Ssvio had been readmitted as a junior in biological sciences, for classes that begin Oct. 5.

"In applying for readmission, Mr. Savio provided clear evidence of serious interest in pursuing academic studies at the University," the spokesman said.

G.O.P. Finds Report Too Sympathetic

Reprinted from Washington Post

There is a growing fear among Republicans that President Nixon's commission on campus unrest will shortly produce a report sympathetic to student demonstrations and harshly critical of the Nixon administration and law enforcement tactics.

Sources inside the administration and on Capitol Hill said that based on background papers and tentative drafts of sections of the report, the following points will be made.

1-The rhetoric of President Nixon and Vice President Agnew on dissent and campus unrest is responsible for much of the disorder and protest on college campuses.

2-The report will zero in on "official violence," by police and National Guardsmen in dealing with campus disorders.

3-Administrative structures of colleges and universities are archaic and unresponsive to students, and are unwilling to satisfy legitimate student aspirations for an increased role in campus life.

4-Acts of disruption and terror are actions of individuals and not an organized or coordinated strategy of radical student organizations.

5-Below the surface of campus disorders lies an idealism that cannot be satisfied as long as the United States is engaged in conflict in Southeast Asia, which students see as morally wrong and which colors most of their opinions and actions.

A staff member of the commission headed by former Gov. William Scranton of Pennsylvania said he expected these points to be made, too, but that the rhetoric of the report would be more restrained, and that it would be balanced with criticism, "hard, tough criticism," of student violence.

Journalistic Studies Provides Liberal Arts Background

(Editor's Note: Since 1946, every University student who has wanted to become a journalist has obtained a journalism job and been successful at it in the opinion of the editor to whom the student had been recommended. This remarkable record is the result of a co-curricular journalism program of work on newspapers that is open to all students, regardless of their major. The Collegian as well as commercial newspapers particilates in this successful, tutorial program as was explained in a statement printed in Friday's Collegian.

This statement was prepared by a faculty-student committee under the chairmanship of Dr. Arthur Musgrave, director of the journalism program. Dr. Barney Emmart directs the Journalistic Studies program which is explained in the following article. This is an academic program that introduces undergraduates to basic and applied research about journalism as part of a completely liberal arts curriculum, rather than a curriculum of 75% liberal arts courses and 25% vocationally specialized courses, often called "professional" courses, that typical journalism programs provide.)

The academic program in Journalistic Studies consists of liberal arts courses. They introduce students to journalism as an academic discipline (communications research), perhaps the most important of the relatively neglected areas of scholarship in American universities. They investigate the flow of news and information in our own and other societies.

In the courses, stress is placed on research about writing, freedom of the press, international communications, and problems presented by the public information system in providing the knowledge of public affairs required by our society.

The courses have application for careers in such diverse fields as communications research, law, editorial work for newspapers or magazines or publishing houses or radio and TV stations, teaching, government service, public relations, and creative writing. Graduate study is required for careers in communications research.

Two types of academic majors are available. One is a double major in which the student earns at least 15 junior-senior credits in Journalistic Studies while also completing ALL the requirements for a major in one other liberal arts department, such as English, History, or Government.

The University's minimum requirement for a major is 15 junior senior credits in one field. Most students take a double major in English and in Journalistic Studies (JS-Eng.). Government and Journalistic studies is the next most popular double major.

The other type of major is an interdepartmental major. This requires 15 junior-senior credits in one other department in addition to meeting the major requirements in Journalistic Studies. As a rule, the interdepartmental major -- registered for as JS-INT -- is recommended only for honor students at the end of their sophomore year.

A student's choice of either a double or an interdepartmental major is made by agreement with his or her advisor, and with approval of the chairman of Journalistic Studies.

All majors must elect at least three of the following eight CONTENT (as distinguished from WRITING) courses in Journalistic Studies:

Intro. to Mass Communication.
Mass Communication Theory.
Freedom of Press Seminar.
The Communication Process (Summer Course)
Language & Communication.
International Communications.
Independent Study & Research (I and II)

All writing courses are taught by the Department of English. Any two of its eight advanced writing courses are acceptable in meeting the major requirement of at least 15 credit hours in Journalistic Studies.

Because the writing PROCESS is the same regardless of the PRODUCT, no particular writing courses are recommended. For students interested in journalism careers, Creative Writing courses are likely to be quite useful. No more than one writing course should be elected in any one semester.

Journalism is a professional or vocational way to use a liberal arts education, and journalists have a practical need for the broadest and most liberal education obtainable.

Vocationally specialized or technical journalism courses are needless for students interested in journalism careers because they teach what can be learned as well (or better) on the job and replace needed liberal arts courses. The tutorial, counseling, and on-the-job training program provided by the College of Arts and Sciences is a better substitute.

Advisers to see. Students interested in the academic program should see Dr. Barney Emmart, Chairman of the interdepartmental committee on Journalistic Studies and chief advisor to Journalistic Studies majors. Students interested in the co-curricular career program should see Dr. Arthur Musgrave, who will be serving as director of the journalism program during the fall semester. The Inter-departmental Committee on Journalistic Studies (ICJS), advises the Journalistic Studies faculty on the conduct of the academic and co-curricular programs. Professor Emmart is chairman of this committee, and Professor Musgrave is secretary.

Drinan's Victory Credited to MDC

On behalf of the Movement for a New Congress -- Amherst Regional Headquarters, Prof. Hadley Arkes read the following statement:

The returns are still incomplete, but it seems certain at this moment that Robert Drinan has won election in the Democratic primary in the 3rd Congressional District. I have been told just a while ago that Congressman Philbin has issued a statement of concession; we have won a truly impressive victory. For the first time, really, the Movement for a New Congress can take credit for making a decisive difference in a congressional race, and in a contest of genuine national import, in which our opponent was not only a prominent supporter of the war, but one of the most powerful men in Congress.

Congressman Philbin was a veteran of 28 years in Congress: He had won 14 straight elections; he was the 11th ranking member of the House of Representatives on the scale of seniority; but more important, he was the second-ranking man behind Mendel Rivers on the House Armed Services Committee.

In a message to our volunteers this summer, we said that the opportunities were so vast in this campaign that they practically conferred responsibility: Only we could assume the burden of the effort in the canvassing. If we didn't, it was clear that no one else would, and in that case, we would have to share the responsibility for the results. The Amherst regional group of the MNC moved into the western sector of the 3rd district in July when the local Drinan organization fell into serious trouble. After several weeks of canvassing in Gardner, the local organization had been able to complete no more than 15 canvassing kits containing 25 households each. They had 185 to go and, I think it is fair to say, no prospect of completing the task. After two weeks of canvassing, the Amherst group completed 100 kits, and with that momentum, we were able substantially to finish the canvass by our target date of August 11. We located more than 1000 Drinan voters, which was slightly more than the total number of people who had voted in the primary of 1968.

In the past, Philbin had counted on wide margins in the smaller like Gardner, Fitchburg, and Leominster) to offset his losses in the more liberal towns in the east like Newton, Waltham, and Watertown. Our polls showed Drinan getting as much as 70% of the votes in these three eastern towns; and so, if we could have succeeded in holding Philbin in the west, we hoped to provide the margin that was necessary to put Drinan beyond reach.

And that appears to be exactly what happened. The turnout rose by 4000 in Newton; Drinan was running with a 9 to 1 lead at times in Waltham; and despite the fact that turnout rose dramatically in the west, Philbin was held to his margin of 1968. He doubled his vote in Gardner, but we quadrupled the opposition vote. If Philbin had run at his 1968 level, he would have carried Gardner by a vote of about 2000 to 600, with a margin then of 1400 votes. As it was, we turned out about 1000 votes, while Philbin carried 1500, with a margin of only 500. We estimate, then, that we might have made a difference of as much as 900 votes in Drinan's plurality.

For the Amherst group, the honor must go to Doug Neff, Beverly Purdue, Ted Laurenson, Jeff O'Connell, and Jamie Wilcox, who stayed on through the summer and did a splendid and imaginative job of organizing. This success is in large part their success, and they deserve the admiration of us all.

Congressman Philbin was a formidable candidate, and regardless of the work done by any organization, he could have been beaten only by a man of substance, with the stature of Father Drinan. Drinan was an excellent candidate, and for his effort in making this race, he deserves the gratitude of everyone in the country who has worked to hasten the end of this war. Since the 3rd District is heavily Democratic, we don't expect Father Drinan to have much difficulty in carrying the district in the fall. But if difficulties should arise, we will of course be ready to stand behind our commitment. Having gone so far, we do not intend to see this district lost in the fall. Our organization is intact and enlarged; we have been flexed into condition by the effort in the primary; and we are prepared to do whatever is necessary to protect this seat.

A Workable Plan

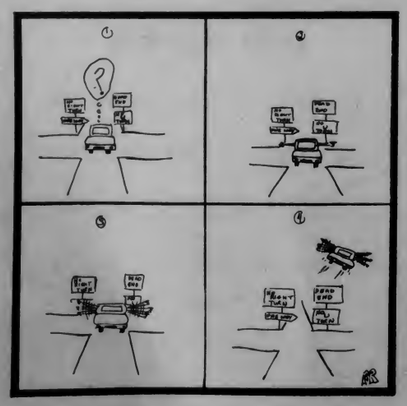
For the past three months, a task force of students, faculty, and administrators have been putting the finishing touches on the University Governance Report, a plan for the restructuring of the school's governing apparatus. Scheduled to be revealed within the next two weeks, an effort to solicit honest comment should be made by the administration, and steps leading to its adoption should be taken as soon as possible.

Too often, high level reports on the school's future are mired down by endless and often useless hours of uninformed debate, and by the time they are enacted, the recommendations of the report are often dated.

A preliminary report of the governance committee was widely publicized last spring, and a good number of suggested revisions were discussed by the committee over the summer. But most people favored the essential recommendations of the committee in May--establishing a University Senate and forming student, Faculty and Graduate caucuses to take the place of the present tri-senate scheme.

The report in essence is the same now as it was in May, and the general reaction to its recommendations should be the same. It is a workable scheme, and all efforts should be made to implement it as soon as possible.

Hazy Purple



Two things UMass students received a great deal of pleasure from in their otherwise drab existence, were taken away Friday; one by dope and one by the pigs.

Many of us will remember Jimi Hendrix for his music, and will think of him every time the Plainsville High School Marching band plays the Star-Spangled Banner while Robert Goulet tries to remember the words. And a few of us will remember Jimi Hendrix for his live style, and that he was never afraid to let it all hang out when he felt so inclined.

One of the highest paid performers in the rock music industry has left us, although leaving behind some bitchin' tunes. It will always be a debatable point whether dope got the best of Jimi Hendrix or whether he got the best of dope.

Another beautiful entity snatched from us was the free-wheelin ride down the middle of the escalators in "Our New Campus Center" The placement of wooden blocks along the runway, preventing smooth and slippery plunges, is concistant with the policy of those people who really run the Campus Center of eliminating pleasure wherever they find it.

All of this simply serves as a warning against feeling too optimistic about the continuing existence of pleasureable people and things.

Passing The Wall

Always, without fail, the sound arises to work within "the system" all ye youth, and in this way you can get things done. Deviate a bit and all is lost.

The trouble has always been that the old system gets caught up in its own tail and usually ends acting either screechingly slow or not at all.

A rather minor item involving some work to be done upon the offices of this newspaper is

You see, it all started because the office space alotted to this newspaper in the Great Grey Waffle was about half as much as the space for the Collegian in the old and so much better Student Union. So with the wisdom that has run this paper for years, the hierarchy decided that they would stay in the old Union and while keeping their present space, alas, get an adjoining office.

Promises of removing a divider wall rang through the SUG board air, with the proviso that the Collegian submit formal work orders, by deadline, etc. etc. etc., draw up specifications, etc., etc., so that ye old wall would come tumbling down.

And all this was done well in advance so that ye old wall would be down by September 1, so that a daily newspaper could be produced without bricks flying around.

Alas the wall remains, a symbol to fumbling bureaucrats. No one knows who to blame. The SUG Board blames maintenance, maintenance blames physical plant, physical plant blames the wall guy, the wall guy blames the head wall guy, the head wall guy blames planning, planning blames the Chancellor and the Chancellor will probably blame the painting of Herter.

The whole situation is really typical of trying to deal with inanimate objects, whether it be the Presidency or UMass. You deal the way they tell you, you play by all the rules and you end up getting remarks like "signals must have got crossed", or "there has been a mixup in communication". This from people that block up escalators, because, after all no one is supposed to be juvenile or have fun once in a while at the expense of precious University property that students paid for through their teeth.

We at the Collegian should have taken a steel-edged ruler, attached it to a typewriter and smashed away. Maybe we'd have the stupid wall down by now.

Miscellaneous Memorandum

FROM: Whitmore Computer
TO: The Bureaucracy
SUBJECT: Student Comfort

The many complaints received from alumni about the ease of undergraduate life makes it incumbent upon us to institute the following policy:

All departments will devise before September 1 new methods of student misery. These must take the guise of improvement and educational innovation. Stop.

FROM: S.U.C. Board and C. C. Governance
TO: Whitmore Computer
SUBJECT: Concrete Waffles and Spaghetti Strainers

In developing our plan, as you know, we took into consideration that students love beauty, are often in need financially, cannot buy alcohol legally, and believe in taxation with representation. Accordingly, we urge the construction of what we like to call, the Concrete Waffle and Spaghetti Strainer. It can be said that the complex was built for the students, but they will not know what to do with it, and it will eventually be ours. The inclusion of a rathskellar will also help to perpetuate the good will between the University and native drinking establishments.

TO: Whitmore Computer
SUBJECT: Lines, lines, lines

We have developed a plan to eliminate the lines while not really eliminating the lines because we'll just say that the lines were worse last year and our new line innovation has alleviated the lines that are still lined up and make it easier for veteran linesmen to line up in the lines they want.

SUBJECT: Lines

It is not quite understood what you mean Ralph, but your judgement shall be trusted. Stop.

FROM: Joel
TO: Whitmore Computer
SUBJECT: A Real Innovation

Our idea is foolproof. First, we intend to make their meal tickets out of soggy cardboard which are guaranteed not to last the semester. Then when the tickets do dissolve, we'll raise the price of new tickets 300%, because, as you know paper costs more than the plastic coated individualized photographs we had last year for meal tickets. Rather than facilitate the long lines at the commons by the mere flashing of a card, we intend to create a real exciting bottlenecker--the chit--which must be slowly and laboriously torn out. As a final coup de creme, the hours that we'll be open will be reduced so as to condense more hungry people, in less time, in more lines.

Our ideal is to have them lined up in front of Hampden, fighting for space, angry over the early closing time, their chits, soggy in the rain.

"I Resign" — Koltin

To the editor:

"My activity in the Student Strike did not terminate when I left campus at the end of last May. Instead, I spent the summer trying to convey to the community, via radio and TV appearances, newspaper press releases, and other political activity, the meaning of the slogan 'Power to the People.' To return to campus this fall to find that a handful of 'student pigs' had taken it upon themselves along to make ALL the decisions regarding a senior concert--the decision of whether to have one in the first place, the decision of 'helping the sophomore class officers' by making it a soph-senior concert, the decision of when to schedule the concerts, and the decision of who would be the entertainment for the concerts --was a down, a pathetic, frustrating, infuriating DOWN. The members of the Class of '71 (the People) were allowed no voice. The Executive Council ('representatives' of the People) were allowed no voice. The President's Council (representatives of the representatives of the People) was, and still is, not even existent. Indeed, not even all the class officers were involved. The decisions were made by a few self-appointed student pigs.

"The action is an inexcusable mockery of what the Student Strike movement was all about. Class government has long been unrepresentative. But now the level of egotism and piggishness has reached intolerable heights. I cannot in conscience continue to serve on the Class of '71 Executive Council which now functions solely to carry out the will and whimsy of a certain few, and therefore I submit my resignation from that body effective immediately."

(Ed Note: Contributions are solicited for OPEN LETTER, a new feature on MDC, this Fall.

The column is designed to stimulate dialogue among the three-part campus community: students, faculty and administration.

Contributions must be limited to 200 words, typewritten, double-spaced. No invective, full-blown speeches or scurrilous attacks on individuals will be accepted.

OPEN LETTER is intended to gain answers to burning questions, rather than to provide a platform for heated rhetoric.

Contributors should address theirs to Open Letters, Daily Collegian, Student Union. Facsimiles of all letters received will appear in these pages.

Names of letter-writers will be withheld upon request, their identities must be known to the editors, who will protect the innocent, if need be.)

To The Collective:

It is my sincerest hope that the campus police will never have to fire the guns that they presently carry. However, there are times when the mere prescence of an armed campus policeman has prevented a crime or disturbance, be it large or small.

I, for one, am opposed to having armed guards on campus. I also feel that a locked cache of arms would be many times more dangerous than the pistols presently in use, for if the need ever arose for this cache to be unlocked, the killing would be catastrophic.

You also said "If campus police refuse to work under these conditions, the university community will develop its own peace-keeping mechanism." I suggest that you, The Collective, re-direct yourselves at this goal--not simply disarming the campus police, but ELIMINATING THE NEED FOR PAID COPS ON CAMPUS. With the cooperation of all the students, we can have our OWN peace-keeping force, made up of students, and show Spiro and his supporters that we, the students, can produce the type of peace in our own community that we are striving to achieve everywhere.

GRANT BENNETALDER '74

TO ED BRYANT, THE COLLECTIVE, AND GIL SALK:
RE: What Happens to People

That particular "young American" was obviously unable to cope with a compound problem, so he unconditionally quit. RE: Guns on Campus

Who would have any confidence in an unarmed policeman? And if policemen can have access to a locked cache of arms with ammunition, why can't ROTC Cadets have access to a locked cache WITHOUT it?

RE: Acts of Love (?)

Suzi Williams is a jerk if she thinks breaking and entering and destruction of property are not acts of vandalism. And any attempt to apply situational ethics to a given circumstance reveals an insupportable position.

OFF MY CHEST

To the interior decorator, Breuer's Bummer,

Instead of resurrecting those horribly ugly Victorian wall murals that hung for a dozen years in the Hatch, why is it not possible to paint those gaol-like walls of the 2nd floor as the walls in Bartlett Hall have been painted? Why don't you invite students to decorate those insane asylum-like cork walls in the conference rooms with posters and the like? Also, many people feel that the Center should not leak.

ART LOVER

To Terence Grinnan, Concrete Waffle Manager,

It was so thoughtful of you to mutilate our escalator slide by screwing those very ascetic wooden blocks in it. Do you have any plans for banning skateboarding from the garage? Perhaps the ultimate solution would be to declare the Waffle off limits to students. Hurrah.

Your tenant

To the Physical Plant:

Could you please explain to me the need for the chain-link fence that segregates the Southwest dormitories along Massachusetts Avenue from the rest of the campus. I see no reason why we should not be able to cut across the Whitmore parking lot. Please remove the fence.

Mobe is Anti-War

To the editor:

The SMC is a single issue group which means it is organized with the single purpose of bringing the troops home from S.E.Asia immediately. The single issue nature of the SMC is presently embodied in our constitution in several places. First of all there is our name which states we are the "Student Mobilization Committee to End the War in Southeast Asia."

But more important than any name are two parts of the constitution which give the single issue nature of the SMC a substantial bases: the membership clause and the non-exclusion clause. The membership clause states that everyone who supports an immediate withdrawal is eligible for membership. And the non-exclusion clause states that no one is excluded who supports immediate withdrawal. These two aspects of the constitution make us an anti-War organization and nothing but an anti-War organization.

However, an anti-War organization need not blind itself to the other realities of the world. In fact these other realities effect our drive to end the War so that we can't ignore them. For instance, how can an anti-War organization ignore its home community's (the University) complicity in the War it's fighting. The Mobe was aware of this complicity when during the Strike it voted to condemn university complicity in the War. This vote did not change the single issue nature of the Mobe: it simply said that we, as an anti-War group, condemn the complicity. The "we" here means the majority of our group.

The point is that because of our membership clause and non-exclusion clause, whatever we do, we do as an anti-War organization. When we voted to send greetings of solidarity to the United Automobile Workers (UAW), we were saying that our anti-War group wishes the workers success with their strike. We did not change the single issue nature of the SMC.

Of course such resolutions are never binding on the minority who vote against them. They continue to be members in good standing because they support immediate withdrawal. Further they are welcome to work and causus, if need be, to convince the majority they are wrong. The rights of the minority are protected by that part of the constitution which guarantees the domocratic nature of the SMC.

Last semester when we passed the resolution on University complicity with the War, I wanted to include ROTC as part of that compilicity. By a narrow vote, my position lost. I did not feel inclined to leave the organization and was obviously not forced out. I think the majority was wrong in that case and hope in the near future the Mobe's position will be changed. In the mean time I plan to continue building the SMC because everyone of us agrees that the only way to end the War is by bringing our troops home. Thats what it means to be a single issue group!

I hope this letter clears up the bit of confusion of the last meeting about our single issue nature. In reading it over I think I've overdone the constitution bit. Constitutions are pieces of paper. What will really keep the UMass SMC a single issue group is each of us committing ourselves to see that immediate withdrawal remains the only condition for membership.

Heady Store

To the editor:

We are writing as concerned students in reference to a matter of utmost importance concerning the efficiency of our new Campus Center. Although the Center advertises having a department to satisfy any student need, we believe that a very profitable and necessary section has been omitted.

Marlboro's, Winston, Tareton and Kools! Bah humbug! How about Bambu, Marfil, Stella and Zig Zag? Cigarette Holders??? We need roach clips, screens, water pipes and stashes!! Because these articles in question are sold in various parts of town, there is no doubt that they are quite saleable and of essential value to the University population. We maintain that these smoking accessories should be readily available at the Campus Center smoking counter for the convenience and satisfaction of the majority of University of Massachusetts students.

Make your feelings known to the store manager. "HEAD? on down to the new Campus Center store for your back to shool RUSH needs,' (when your having more than one.)

Plastic People

To the editor:

It must have been noticed by many people that all the dishes used in the cafeteria of the new Campus Center are made of plasticized paper. The eating utensils are made of heavy plastic which apparently could withstand the heat of an automatic dishwasher. All of these - dishes, knives, forks, spoons - are discarded after one use. As is by now well-known, one of the severest polution problems facing us is the disposal of solid wastes. Plastics are especially bad as they do not easily decompose and give off noxious fumes when burned. One can imagine the amount of pollution caused by the cafeteria. It is unfortunate, in this time of ecological crisis, that the University should be so insensitive, when instead it should be a model to the community.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR must be typed, double spaced, at sixty spaces and must carry the writer's signature, address, and telephone number (all of which will be withheld upon request). The limit is one page and the deadline is 5 p.m. the day prior to intended publication. The editors reserve the right to edit all letters.

WMUA Program To Examine UMass Student Activism

Tonight at 8 p.m. WMUA's "Focus" returns to the air for its third season with Ken Mosakowski as moderator of the controversial, current affairs discussion program.

The subject of tonight's program is "Student Activism: Fall, 1970," and it is expected that the panelists will shed some light on the nature of social and political action at the University of Massachusetts which is being planned for the coming months. Mosakowski's tentatively-scheduled guests include Student President Glenn Elters, who will speak about the formation of the Radical Community Union; Quint Dawson and Rick Smardon of the Coalition for Environmental Quality; and Jim Rose and Bob Homer of the Young Americans for freedom. Also on the panel will be a spokesman for the newly formed Community Action Foundation, which includes the NES tutorial program, Action Lab for the Education of High School Drop Outs, A Better Chance program, the Committee on Poverty, and the Seminars on Racial Attitudes and Practices.

'72 Exec. Council Reports

(Editor's note: A report of each Junior Class Executive Council meeting will appear in the COLLEGIAN to better communicate with its constituents, the Junior Class. This is the first of these reports.)

President Juli Ierardi formed a Co-ordinating Committee, which will be chaired by Vice President, Ed Dempsey. Under this committee will be 4 sub-committees: Public Relations, Black Affairs, Campus Affairs, Academic Affairs. Members of these sub-committees will not be appointed until the size of the Executive Council is reduced. Too many students who signed up for the Council for there to be any effective organization.

After much discussion and voting, it was decided that Winter Carni Weekend, February 26, 27, and 28, 1971, would include: Friday night, folk or rock groups; Saturday night, a big-name group; Sunday all day and all night, a do-your-thing/get-wrecked in the Cage sort of deal, having several local bands perform, along with perhaps a big name.

Winter Carni Chairman for 1971 will be Mary Holland.

Pats Convert Interception, Fumble Into Key TD's, Topping Miami, 27-14

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.(AP)- The Boston Patriots turned an interception and a fumble recovery into touchdowns by Carl Garrett and Jim Nance within 74 seconds late in the second period and went on to upset the Miami Dolphins 27-14 Sunday in a National Football League opener.

After forcing the Dolphins to gamble, the Patriots capitalized on another pass interception, setting up Gino Cappelletti for a 22-yard field goal and a 20-14 halftime lead.

The Boston defense took complete charge of the second half, overpowering quarterback Bob Griese and company in paving the way to an insurance touchdown on Mike Taliaferro's 25-yard pass to Ron Sellers midway through the fourth period.

The Patriots got on the board on a 41-yard field goal by Cappeletti late in the first period.

The Boston defense went to work against Griese, who never had been intercepted by the Patriots in his career.

Darryl Johnson picked off a Griese pass and two plays later, Garrett, the American Football League's 1969 Rookie of the Year, sprinted 10 yards for a touchdown.

On the first play after the ensuing kickoff, tackle Jim Hunt recovered the 15th fumble of his pro career after hitting Larry Csonka at the Miami 14. Nance carried into the end zone in two attempts.

was forced to punt.

Once again UMass got great field position on their own 49. Angelo DiNardo ran a reverse around the right side for five and Heavey followed with a four-yard gain up the middle. With a third-and-short-yardage situation, Marchev fooled the Black Bears by pitching out to Russell, who swept around the right side, behind good blocks by Art Corsaletti and Heavey, for a gain of sixteen yards to the Maine 26. Heavey then went through a big hole in the line for 21 more as the offensive line was doing its job with uncanny precision.

Corsaletti capped the drive and ended the afternoon's scoring with a five-yard sweep around left end. Featured on this TD effort were beautiful blocks by end Bob Cabrelli and Marchev himself. Gagnon's conversion completed the scoring at UMass 28, Maine 0, with 7:51 left to play.

It was a good win for the Redmen and started the season off on the right foot. However, it should be remembered that Maine is not exactly Boston College and the schedule gets much tougher as the season moves along.

PIGSKIN PATTER - UMass used three quarterbacks in the contest. Joining Marchev and Hughes in the battle for the job was sophomore Len Matuza who uncorked a couple of long bombs late in the game which he came quite close to completing. The stats for the three were: Hughes, 6 for 11 for 69 yards with one TD and one interception; Marchev, 2 for 6 for 26 yards with no TD's and one interception; Matuza, 1 for 3 for 25 yards with no TD's and no interceptions...Matuza's one completed pass was on a freak play as the pass was intended for Lang but it went off his fingertips and fell into the arms of Walt O'Malley... Cote, the Maine QB, was impressive at times as he completed 7 of 12 for 95 yards.

Taking a look at how the Redmen's opponents fared on Saturday...Buffalo dropped down to an 0-2 mark, getting beaten decisively by Toledo, 27-6... Included in Toledo's scoring were two field goals of 35 and 32 yards...Boston University's mistakes led to its downfall, 26-21, at the hands of Colgate... The Terriers trailed by that same count going into the final quarter, during which time they had three drives stalled within the Colgate 25-yard line... Connecticut whalloped Vermont, 47-0, as running ace Vin Clements scored four touchdowns...Oh, what a game that should be when UMass hosts UConn here on Oct. 24!....Boston College got a good jump on the autumn season by taking the best of Villanova, 28-21, as quarterback Frank Harris broke a 14-14 deadlock with a couple of quick passes to George Gill and Ed Rideout in th fourth quarter that the two converted into TD romps of 78 and 50 yards.

Redman Offense Rolls Up 433 Yds; Defense Limits Bears to 185 Yds.

By BERRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

Rolling behind a crushing offense and a begrudging defense, UMass decisively dumped the Black Bears of Maine, 28-0, in a game played before 12,000 fans at Alumni Stadium on Saturday. It was the opening game of the season for both clubs.

While the Redmen were amassing 433 yards in total offense, the defensive unit limited Maine to only 185 yards and never allowed the Black Bears within twenty yards of the UMass goal line. The UMass running game was relentless throughout, led by Pat Scavone (105 yards on 15 carries), Dick Heavey (63 yards on seven carries) Dick Cummings (62 yards on eleven carries), and Mark Russell (56 yards on five carries); they totalled 313 yards on only 55 attempts, an average of almost six yards a try.

Much of the credit for the success of the UMass ground game must go to the Redman offensive line, which was nothing short of splendid throughout. Guards Bob Pena and Dick Etna made the sweep work time after time while the Donlin brothers, Bob and Dick, did an excellent job opening holes for quick bursts by Cummings and Heavey. This, sprinkled with five pass receptions by tight end John Hulecki, allowed the Redmen to control the ball for several long drives.

But the real story of this victory lies in the UMass defense. Anytime a defense holds the opposition scoreless for an entire game, it is obvious that every member of the squad is doing his job well. Such was the case Saturday. Maine was only able to gain 90 yards on 51 attempts, less than two yards a try, as the front four proved almost immovable for the smaller Black Bear offensive linemen. The UMass secondary proved just as tough for Maine as quarterback Ron Cote was intercepted three times, twice by John O'Neil and once by linebacker Dick Dyer.

To complete the picture, even the Redman kicking game was outstanding. Punter O'Neil complimented his interceptions with a fine afternoon with his foot, averaging 39 yards a kick on three attempts, with his longest being measured at 44 yards. Place-kicker Denis Gagnon, who became No. 2 in all-time extra points for UMass with his four successful conversions, also did a fine job on kick-offs. On one notable boot, the junior kicker drew many oohs and aahs from the crowd as he drove one completely through the end zone.

UMass got on the scoreboard midway through the first period. After a Maine drive had stalled after Cote was dumped by defensive lineman Jim Kelliher, who was outstanding throughout, and Bill DeFlavio, the Redmen received the Black Bear punt on the Maine 43. After a Ken Hughes-to-Hulecki pass had fallen incomplete, Scavone ran one of many sweeps to pick up six. On the next play, Hughes hit split end Joe Lang for seven yards and a first down on the Maine 30-yard line.

UMass kept the drive going as Scavone took a pitch from Hughes and ran niftily around the left side, evading at least two would be tacklers, and picked up thirteen yards. After Cummings had picked up three rough yards in the middle, Hughes found Hulecki open at the two and the big tight end rambled in from there for what turned out to be the winning score. Gagnon converted and, with 5:59 left in the quarter, the Redmen led, 7-0.

Less than six minutes later, UMass started another TD drive. This one was typical of the way the Redmen played all day as they controlled the ball well and drove 62 yards in fourteen plays. The drive began with UMass on its 38 as Scavone scampered around the left side to the 40. After Hughes was hit for a short loss, the senior quarterback came right back with a strike to Hulecki on a third down play. The reception picked up fourteen yards and put the Redmen in Maine territory.

With almost tedious regularity, Scavone continued to operate the sweep successfully as he followed the blocking of Sawyer and Cummings around left end for eight more yards to the 39. After an incomplete pass and a penalty, UMass had a second down and fifteen on the Maine 34. Cummings picked up four on a draw play and then, on fourth down, with a little over ten to go, Hughes calmly hit Hulecki again for a pick-up of fourteen and a first down at the 16.

Hughes picked up three on a quarterback sneak and Scavone got six more on the sweep. With a third-and-one situation, Cummings took the handoff and lowered his head as he drove thru the middle of the line for six yards and the touchdown. Gagnon's kick made it 14-0.

Later in the second period, Hughes was racked up after he had thrown a pass and had to be removed from the game. What was immediately thought to be a dislocated shoulder was not, and Hughes was able to return to action in the second half. During his absence, Mike Marchev directed the UMass attack.

The third quarter turned out to be scoreless with neither side able to put together any substantial attack. However, late in the quarter, UMass started to move. Due to another great effort by the Redmen defense, Maine's punter Bob Marchildon was forced to kick from his own end zone. The boot was short and UMass took over with tremendous field position on the Maine 31.

With Hughes once again at the helm, the Redmen used a variety of Scavone sweeps and Cummings and Heavey runs up the middle to bring the ball to the Maine two yard line as the third quarter ended. Scavone got UMass on the board once again as he went off left tackle for the Redmen's third touchdown of the game. Gagnon made it 21-0.

The last score was directed by Marchev. Maine had the ball deep in its own territory at the seven and were faced with a third-and-fifteen situation. Cote gave the ball to halfback Bill Swadel on the draw and he made it to the 17 before he was really racked by UMass linebacker Tim Edwards. Swadell eventually was carried off the field and Maine

"We've Got a Long Way to Go." -- Fusia

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

There is a room in the football players' dressing hall in that low, long building to the south of Alumni Stadium designated "COACHES". It's the room where UMass' football coaches change from their parkas, chinos, football cleats and baseball cahs of game time into their street clothes. It's also the place where head coach Vic Fusia can be reached by the sports writers for post-game comments.

On Saturday he was very warm and cordial and reachable for questioning - especially to a band of cub reporters who threw out questions at him from various stations in the room. He was happy with the 28-0 victory over Maine, but he wasn't estatic; he was proud of the Redman successes of the afternoon but he was concerned with the failings commenting, during a pause in the early questioning, "We've got a long way to go yet."

In comparing the defensive effort shown against the Black Bears to that shown in the 21-7 drubbing by Cornell in last week's scrimmage, he thought that UMass was "a little bit better." Speaking further about the defense he said, "We did many things better", but pointed out that Cornell had not been scouted by UMass while, Maine, the regular-season foe, had been studied intensely.

Fusia cited that Redman offensive sweep that worked so well all afternoon with Pat Scavone carrying the ball behind the blocking of the two guards, Bob Pena and Dick Etna, as one of the key offensive plays used against the Black Bears.

This particular play on which Scavone gained most of his 105 total yards, is called a "buck sweep" by the coaching staff. Fusia indicated that UMass used two basic rushing plays in this tilt; the other was the power run, employing fullbacks Dick Cummings and Dick Heavey on jolts up the middle.

Fusia was asked the following question, "How would you rate the play of the three UMass quarterbacks (Ken Hughes, Mike Marchev and Len Matuza)?", and he answered thusly: "Fair." During another pause he reiterated what he had said shortly before, "We've got a long way to go yet."

In explaining his expectations for the team before the tussle got under way, the coach remarked, "I wanted to win decisively, but wanted to play as many players as possible." He mentioned the importance of the Maine contest as an opportunity to "get others in there to get rid of the jitters."

There won't be much time for the Redmen to reflect on this win for, right around the corner, is Dartmouth. UMass will be the opening dish of the Indians, at the Big Green tepee no less. Fusia made it clear that the triumph over the Black Bears will have been shelved at approximately midnight of Saturday; Fusia must get his forces mentally and physically prepared for Dartmouth.

In one of those pauses toward the end of the scribes' conference with the head coach, he stated: "But we're still a long, long way off."

SHUTOUT SHAVINGS - Fusia is very interesting to listen to during those pauses, during those precious moments after a question has been answered and before a new one is asked...During another one he was pouring over a copy of the game's statistical sheet and muttered: "You mean we only attempted 20 passes...That's terrible."...The coach had praise for offensive guard Bob Pena, pointing to the big role this guy plays on the buck sweeps, "We count on his excellency in this department (blocking) on this play."...The Redman kicking game looked very good, with Denis Gagnon kicking off and converting the points-after-touchdowns in fine style and John O'Neil booming three excellent punts...The UMass defensive line was stone solid against the Black Bears' rushing game, holding it to a net 90 yards on the ground...Jim Kelliher had a solid game at defensive end for the home team...He played the Maine sweep extremely well, often forcing end runs back into the interior of the action where the defensive tackles and linebackers were waiting in anticipation...The Redmen's offensive line played just as well as its defensive cohorts, forming great protection for the three passing arms; two of the few times UMass quarterbacks ended on the seats of their pants came when they tripped and fell in some mysterious area near midfield...Scavone earned the honor to represent the displaced Nick McGarry as the Redman co-captain for the game, joining John Farrelly, UMass' regular co-captain....John Hulecki led all receivers with five catches, and well he should have, for he demonstrates the perfect way to receive a football, always plucking it from the air first before tucking it into his body...Mike Sawyer didn't see any action after the first quarter...It was believed that he had a

CEQ To Launch Action-Goal Projects

CEQ launches its new year of activities Thursday night with a mass meeting and project convention in the Campus Center Auditorium beginning at 7PM. Projects to be started include everything from navigating down the Connecticut River on rafts Tom Sawyer style, to workshops on nuclear pollution of the same river.

In keeping with the group's hard-learned experience that standing committees do little more than stand, this year's programs are action, goal oriented projects. Some are already rolling. Others are past the planning stage and ready to go. Still others require a shot in the arm from an environmental expert to get started.

Where an action project needs the advice of an expert CEQ has set up a workshop and invited an expert to attend. A complete schedule of workshops is scheduled for release prior to the Kick-off Convention.

Here is a rundown of projects that will be up for grabs Thursday night:

HIGH SCHOOL PROJECT-Speakers, projectionists and organizers will form teams to visit high school assemblies to present a program and organize ecology groups. Another group will plan and organize a state wide high school eco-conference to be held at the University during the Spring Vacation in March. (Training Workshops Sept 26 and 27)

LECTURE PROJECT-A staff will contact well known environmentalists and arrange for them to come and speak at the University in cooperation with DVP and other organizations.

RAFT PROJECT- A group of hardy river ramblers will raft down the Connecticut stopping at key sites to publicize river problems with leaflets and media coverage. (Fast action needed; cold weather coming.)

NEWSLETTER - Staff will publish weekly CEQ newsletter and later a separate edition for high schools we've contacted, in addition to covering other projects (like the Raft Project) and handling press releases.

OFFICE - For administrative types who aren't afraid of a typewriter and a mimeo there's lots of work to do.

POLLUTION INVENTORY-This team will be examining the University's own environmental "dirty underwear" and reporting back to CEQ with action projects to correct the problems.

REGIONAL MEETINGS - An opportunity for workers to start some sort of area group made up of the various organizations now dealing with the environment. CEQ would join such a group once started.

AWARDS COMMITTEE - Members would investigate pollution problems and present monthly awards for the worst offender and the best improvement effort.

BICYCLE CLUB-Members will start a new RSO to promote bike riding to cut down on auto pollution. Also work on campus bike paths, more bike racks, used bike sales, bicycle outings, etc.

BIRTH CONTROL- This group will work with other campus efforts at getting BC information to students, and also deal with family planning and political activities.

POPULATION GROWTH - For certain reasons, this project must remain secret, but promises to freak out the whole campus and bring the population question back into the lime light.

FILM MAKING-For people who dig cinema, films on environment are in demand. Equipment, facilities and film stocks can be arranged. Project ideas and guidance are available.

POLITICAL PROJECT-Critical work on politics and the environment. Work under consideration; an evaluation of political candidates and their records and positions on the environment, working directly with Representative Wetmore (Dem-Barre) and his legislative committee on environment to investigate the activites (or lack of them) by government agencies, and working with an intercollegiate organization to introduce legislation on the environment.

More projects will be started in October after workshops on the following topics:

WASTE RECYCLING-(Projects on Hatch and Coffee Shop throwaway dishware, recycling non-return bottles, community compost piles, etc.)

DETERGENTS-(Get the bad ones off the shelves, inform the public.)

SUMMER SCIENCE PROJECT GRANTS - (The National Science Foundation is offering grants for undergraduate initiated and operated summer research projects for the first time. Proposal Deadline is November 30. Workshop on how to get funds Sept. 30, 7 PM, Campus Center rm 162)

NUCLEAR THREATS TO THE CONNECTICUT VALLEY

PUBLIC AND UTILITY USE OF CHEMICAL AGENTS

ZONING IN AMHERST AND ADJACENT COMMUNITIES

There will be opportunities Thursday night to write up new proposals and have them offered to interested people. In addition, projects may be started at any time during the coming year. CEQ is open to every member of the University Community, and everyone is welcome to the Thursday Convention.

THE STALLED ECONOMY – President Richard M. Nixon, (right), told a group of labor leaders last week that his plans for improving the nation's economy were moving along well. Meanwhile, assembly lines of cars remained backed up in Detroit factories, as the UAW's strike against General Motors continued into its second week.

His Desk Patiently Waiting, Thelwell Starts To Work

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

(Editor's Note: Michael Thelwell, the Chairman of the W.E.B. Dubois Black Studies Department, has returned to the campus after several weeks of being un-certain whether he would be granted a visa from the American Embassy in his native Jamaica.)

Slouched behind a cluttered desk, located in the corner of a large bare office, Mike Thelwell hooked his feet on the desk writing leaf and waited passively for the reporter to attack.

Thelwell had arrived back in the States three days ago, after much effort and influence from many levels of official bureaucracy, and the apparently effective lobbying of Asst. to the Chancellor Dr. Randolph Bromery and Dean Seymour Shapiro, acting Dean of Arts and Sciences, who, on a special visit to Washington D.C., made the crucial contacts which lead to the granting Thelwell's visa.

"If the Administration hadn't responded as emphatically as it did, then I should not be here now," commented Thelwell, adding that his contact with the U.S. Embassy in Kingston, Jamaica with their "arrogance in dealing with people" had instilled within him thoughts of not returning to the U.S. at all.

"If I hadn't made a committment to the Black community here.. I wouldn't have been interested in coming back." said Thelwell.

The technicality which had delayed his visa in Jamaica is "frequently relaxed." He explained his plight in getting the visa as a process of "every time I met their objection, they would find another."

Thelwell is now adjusting to his office. The Black Studies Department was moved from Herter Hall to the third floor of Mill's House. His office walls are bare, save a poster or two and a blow up of poet Clarence Reed's "Where Beauty is At". He is satisfied with the University's attitude towards Black Studies which he characterizes as "more than tokenism".

"There are lots of reasons why I wanted to come back to UMass... the University is committed," said Thelwell about the relationship of the "institution to the needs of the Black community." When asked about the apparent discrepancy between the number of blacks and whites on campus, Thelwell shot back "Its not a question of being an integrated University, but whether the University serves the needs of the Black community. It doesn't have to be integrated, but a democratic institution." He deemphasized "social integration" and said that it was "important to "reflect not only the different races, but the different interests, cultures..." UMass has "established a beginning, has begun towards positive" programs and ideas.

Thelwell has great hope for the Five-College co-operation on Black Studies. It "has the potential as a major institution, a magnificent institution for the education of Black people." he commented.

He sees the establishment of a Black Studies program as first "a radical attack on the assumptions that have gone into American scholarship in the past" about the Black experience in America. "Since the 17th century" the books on Black people "have been tainted by overt racism," emphasized Thelwell; the second major goal of Black Studies is "to train young blacks who are to be responsible for administrating in the Black community, especially in the area of education," to turn the community "creative, viable, and peaceful." It will require "a generation of aggressive, self confident black professionals", added Thelwell.

The Black Studies department now has approximately 300 students enrolled for courses. The areas of study range from history to Swahili.

Perhaps Thelwell represents the generation which will rid America of the "relationship of the white community to the black" that "has been and continues to be that of the oppressor to the oppressed, colonizer and colonized," as Thelwell once wrote. Moreover, as his article on "Black Studies: A Political Perspective," states, perhaps Thelwell is part of a movement which will convince this nation that "to pretend anything else is merely to prolong the social agony that society is currently experiencing."

Miles Begins Militant Forum Series

By BETH GOODELL
Staff Reporter

Black Nationalist Joe Miles, a founder of GI's United Against the War in Vietnam and candidate for the U.S. Senate, spoke last night in the Campus Center.

He addressed himself to "The Need for Black Control of the Black Community." The lecture was the first of a series to be presented by the Militant Forum, on alternate Monday nights.

Active in anti-war and black liberation movements since his days as a student at American University in Washington, D.C., he continued his activity at Fort Jackson and Fort Bragg when drafted into the Army. His involvement in helping to organize GI's Against the War led to a transfer to Alaska which he found comparable to a Russian banishment to Siberia.

Having just received his discharge, Miles is a candidate for Congress in the seat being vacated by John McCormack. The Socialist Workers Party under which he is running considers itself to be a real alternative to both the Democratic and Republican Parties. Unlike these capitalistic parties, the socialists call for complete structural change of society from one interested in producing for the profit of a small ruling class to one interested in producing for the welfare of all its citizens.

In the opinion of Miles, even individual peace candidates are of no help in bringing about improvements in American society because they are not willing to challenge the capitalistic structure. To him, they are only "vultures who don dove's clothes" to get votes for themselves. They talk in the abstract but offer no signs of concrete activity.

Miles says that his recent experience in the Army has shown him that the anti-war and black-consciousness movements within the Army are at their most active level ever, and growing steadily. He sees that the key to all success and positive action lies in involving the masses in the movements. It takes the involvement of the masses to worry the rulers due to their uncontrollability.

The Socialist Workers Party is organized around three basic issues: 1) withdrawal from all imperialistic involvement of American troops; 2) Black control of the black community; and 3) the liberation of women.

The socialist anti-war movement is independent of political parties. As Nixon has stated, the majority of the American people are in favor of the withdrawal of American troops from Vietnam. The only way to mobilize this majority is through mass actions in the streets, independent of political affiliation. Only then will the "silent majority" find its voice and demonstrate its position.

Under the issue of black control of black communities, the Socialist Party works for consciousness so that the oppressed can unite in masses powerful enough to run themselves completely independently.

The Socialist Party totally supports the struggle of women to liberate themselves from their economic and emotional dependence upon their individual family units. Women are becoming aware of the completely archaic structure of their lives and are demanding sweeping social changes that strike at the heart of capitalist economy.

For Miles, socialism is the way to involve people in ruling their own society. The capitalistic system would be all right except that it's inhuman. Society must be brought to produce socially what it is now producing for individual profit. Over the past ten years, there has been a tremendous increase in independent movements, all of which are interconnected. Miles sees that all of these movements can learn from the black movement in their attempts to restructure the country.

Homecoming To Be Held On Different Weekends

The 1970 Homecoming will a little different this year than it has been in past years. Due to the Princeton Plan that was agreed upon by the Trustees and the faculty, it is necessary to hold Homecoming on two different weekends.

The first weekend will be primarily alumni oriented and will be October 23-25.

The second weekend will follow the University of New Hampshire home game and will include the more tranditional events.

These events include a Homecoming Queen, for which applications are now being accepted, a bonfire, a parade and of course the usual concerts.

This student oriented weekend is the weekend of November 13-15.

The dual Homecoming weekends were brought about because of the policy the University adopted for the Princeton Plan. It was feared that there would be a mass exodus of students from the campus on the weekend prior to the elections and since no one wanted to be left holding the bag, financially speaking, it was agreed that there would be two seperate weekends of fun and games.

Sargent Orders Start Of Rate Reduction

BOSTON (AP) - Gov. Francis W. Sargent said Monday he has ordered the state insurance commissioner to "start the process for the 15 per cent rate reduction" in auto insurance so the rates can be set in time to avoid confusion.

The governor said he asked Commissioner C. Eugene Farnam to order the companies to file information needed for setting the new rates so that public hearings required by law may be held.

The across the board reduction in all types of motor vehicle insurance rates is part of the state's new no fault auto insurance plan, signed into law by the governor at the end of the last legislative session.

Eight insurance companies objected to the reduction in rates and announced they will not insure motor vehicles in the Bay State next year.

The industry also filed suit in the state Supreme Court last week asking that the reductions be ruled invalid.

Sargent termed the companies decision not to write insurance "political strategy" but said, "I will set up a state auto insurance fund if necessary." The governor also said that despite his urging, the insurance companies have sent bills to motorists for back payments on 1970 auto insurance.

The insurers were permitted a rate increase by the state Supreme Court this summer after being denied the hike at the beginning of the year by Farnam.

"The public is being confused by the insurance industry, hoping we'll back off," Sargent said. "I'm trying to clear up that confusion. And I don't want any delay."

Speaking at symposium at MIT in Cambridge, Sargent had a few words for the oil companies.

He said he believes " we in Massachusetts are being gouged by the oil companies of America."

He told a conference on oil supplies for the Northeast that he believed the industry and the federal government should take steps to assure the region adequate supplies at reasonable prices.

"Most of our municipalities have no contract for oil with a supplier this year," he said, "have no assurance as to the price they will pay for that oil, or, indeed, whether there will be oil available."

Sargent contended Massachusetts consumers "will pay $110 million more than last " for oil this winter.

McNamara Urges Action on Population

COPENHAGEN, DENMARK (AP) - World Bank President Robert S. McNamara urged Monday the prevention of the births of a billion babies by the year 2000 to brake the world population explosion.

McNamara told the opening session of the annual meeting of the bank and international Monetary Fund that a massive birth control drive should be mounted to meet the population problem. He also said rich countries should shift more resources into foreign aid.

The former U.S. defense secretary , who forecast the gap between the rich and the poor nations would continue widening, said birth reduction of a billion would cut the population growth rate to 1 per cent a year.

"The most imperative issue for the long term is population planning," he warned.

McNamara rapped tight fisted attitudes to aid for developing countries. He said the world's current level of military expenditure of $180 billion a year had gone "beyond the point of diminishing returns."

It was tragic, he added, that rich countries hesitate to keep on spending even their present $7 billion annually on aid to prevent "lethal revolution."

After demonstrations Sunday by militants who hurled stones and Molotov cocktails at police cars to protest the World Bank and IMF meeting, police with dogs threw a security cordon round the hall for Monday's opening.

About 2,000 demonstrators, mostly in their teens or early 20's marched to the meeting hall Monday with shouts of "Hang McNamara." About 600 police protected the building. McNamara was not inside at the time.

The first session was attended by King Frederick and Queeen Ingrid of Denmark and by many finance ministers from the 116 member countries, including U.S. Treasury Secretary David M. Kennedy.

Pierre Paul Schweitzer, head of the IMF, breached a potentially hot issue by suggesting that the United States take action to prevent other governments having to hold too many dollars. Its international deficit, he said, should be financed by the use of other reserves instead.

Schweitzer did not spell out the consequences of such a policy, but experts said it would require the United States to sell some of its gold or draw on its credit with the IMF, or both. Neither measure would be popular with American officials.

Hussein Orders Ceasefire

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - King Hussein once more ordered his royal Jordanian army to cease firing Monday in Amman while Palestinian guerrillas and a tank force from Syria were reported hammering royalist armor in Irbid, Jordan's second largest city.

Amman, the capital with half a million people, was described in one dispatch as a city in terror, with the cries and shouts of trapped wounded victims ringing across the valleys and hills.

Dead were reported still lying in the streets from the first days of fighting last week.

The 34 year old Hashemite ruler said he was ordering the shooting stopped in the capital as of 5:15 p.m.- 11:15 a.m., EDT- because of his own conscience and historical responsibilities to enable the wounded to be treated and because of the grave situation in the country.

Hussein had called a cease fire throughout Jordan on Saturday at the behest of President Gamal Abdel Nasser of Egypt but the king said the guerrillas didn't stop shooting.

The army lifted its curfew briefly in Amman and women hastened out with shopping baskets in search of food. The city has been isolated since last Thursday when the war began. A pooled dispatch of foreign correspondents trapped there said the army had continued to hunt snipers. Guerrilla resistance has weakened but the commandoes, or fedayeen, still at large remain fierce, the dispatch added.

Earlier in the day Radio Amman broadcast appeals for workers in essential jobs to report to army posts for transportation to work. Amman has been without power, water and gas. Food is short.

The first wounded of the Jordanian fighting reached Beirut on a Red Cross flight from Amman

The fighting was reported heavy in the northern sector around Irbid where Jordan claims two brigades of tanks from Syria had helped the guerrillas hold out against almost certain defeat.

Before announcing the Amman cease fire, Hussein said the royal army had the guerrillas all but defeated when the tanks rumbled across the border from Syria.

He accused Syria's leaders of treachery and hatching a plot that would allow Israel to occupy all of Jordan.

The king made this charge in reporting that Soviet built tanks of Syria had thrust 10 miles into Jordan and dealt a sharp blow to outnumbered royalist armored forces at Irbid, about 50 miles north of Amman, the capital.

The Palestinians had held the center of Irbid against Hussein's 40th Armored Brigade until Soviet T54 tanks pushed across the border from Syria late Sunday in the second of two reported armored thrusts. Israeli military informants, watching Jordanian developments closely, said Irbid had fallen to the Palestinians, and the tanks.

The Syrian government formally denied that the tanks belonged to Syria's armed forces and alleged that Syrian prisoners of war taken by the Jordanians were captured in a Jordanian raid into Suria.

Radio Damascus claimed the tanks belonged to Syrian based units of the Palestinian Liberation Army which, in fact, are completely under Syrian control although they fly the Palestinian flag.

While the rebels appeared to hold the upper hand around Irbid, the southern and eastern parts of the country and the center of Amman were under Jordanian control.

Despite guerrilla accusations of impending U.S. and Israeli involvement, the U.S. 6th Fleet in the eastern Mediterranean and the Israeli forces only 13 miles from Irbid on the Golan Heights thus far were keeping out of the conflict.

But the United States and Britain warned the Soviet Union of the dangers of a widening war and urged the Russian leaders to use their influence with Syria to have the intruding tanks withdrawn from Jordan.

Draft Counselor's Corner

How To Use IV-F, I-Y

GILBER J. SALK
Staff Reporter

As more and more young Americans become concerned about the cancerous growth of militarism in the United States, the question of alternatives to serving in the armed forces assumes greater and greater importance. Men are seeking ways to avoid supporting the abhorrent war against Vietnam, and both men and women are disturbed by the disruption and channeling of their lives caused by the Selective Service. Draft Counselor's Corner will provide information about alternatives through general information and by answering questions submitted by readers. NOTE: We recognize that the draft does as much as disrupt the lives of women as it does of men. Therefore, a special effort will be made to provide information for women also.

Probably the most frequently used deferment is the IV-F and I-Y. Both of these deferments are given for medical and psychological reasons. An understanding of what these deferments are and how to properly request them will make things considerably easier for those using this alternative.

It is important to be aware of the difference between the two classifications. The IV-F means that you are unfit for military service. The I-Y means that you are eligible only in time of declared war or national emergency. While the IV-F is nearly always a permanent classification, the I-Y is frequently used as a temporary deferment and the holder is called back for re-examination periodically.

Recently, it has been very difficult to obtain the IV-F classification. It is used only for those who would be clearly unable to perform in a military capacity under any conditions--amputees, deaf, blind, retarded, etc.--people obviously afflicted with permanent handicaps.

The I-Y has thus become something of a catch-all for a large number of infirmities. It is important to remember that the military regularly places people in situations which make extreme demands on their physical and emotional capabilities. This is the key to the medical deferment. If you have a problem which MAY be aggravated by extreme physical exertion or climatic conditions, or which could, at times, render you unable to perform your duty, then you in all likelihood qualify for a I-Y.

Let's consider some examples:

You have braces on your teeth. This isn't really a handicap unless you get too close to a girl who also wears braces. However, consider some military situations. In a combat area, you can't always be careful about what you eat. If you pull your braces loose, the dangling pieces of metal could obviously become a distraction and possibly a hazard.

You have a large scar as the result of an operation. You can go through your daily routine without any problems. But what happens when you're faced with the rigorous training routine of boot camp? There's the possibility that the scar tissue will weaken and separate. This would obviously incapacitate you, and make the army liable to be sued. They don't particularly want to be placed in such a situation.

You are allergic to insect bites. In most cases, you are able to avoid situations where you are likely to be stung. And in any event, proper medication is probably not too far away. But in the jungles of Southeast Asia, for example, there are hordes of hungry insects which seem to be more attracted than repelled by most insect repellants. An insect bite could incapacitate or even kill you. Thus, if you have ever had a serious reaction to any kind of insect bite which required medical attention, you may be eligible for a I-Y.

You have hay fever or asthma, or are allergic to certain foods or fabrics. As a civilian, you can control to some extent what you eat or wear, and can take pills to control other allergic reactions. In the military, you eat what you are given, wear the clothes that everyone else wears, and could thus be incapacitated. Pills which make you drowsy will make you useless for guard duty or other duties which require alertness.

The list is nearly endless. Suffice it to say that many things which are merely annoyances, or less, in civilian life can become a matter of literal life or death in many military situations. If your health is going to be a real hassle for the army, the army doesn't want you. You can protest this all you want, but the draft laws clearly state that they cannot draft you if you have any of the ailments on the Surgeon General's list of deferable conditions. If your draft board makes a mistake and tries to draft you, you have the right to appeal. However, if you prepare carefully, it is unlikely that you will need to use the appeal process.

If you feel that you have medical or emotional problems, either current or old, consult a draft counselor. He or she will be able to give you advice suited to your particular situation. The following will provide a general guide, however. The most important thing for medical, or any other, deferments is proper documentation. You should have letters from every doctor who has ever treated you for the ailment or condition for which you are seeking the deferment. The letters should state in both medical and lay terms the nature of the problem, how often the doctor has seen you, what treatment has been prescribed, and the prognosis for recovery. If at all possible, the letter should also state the doctor's belief that military training or duty either will or could possibly cause an aggravation or recurrence of the condition, and/or that the condition will or could possible interfere with your performance of duty.

If your doctor is a super-patriot and is reluctant to help prevent you from being forced into a situation where you might have to kill somebody, do not remind him that his Hippocratic Oath requires him to act to save lives. This might annoy him and complicate the matter unnecessarily. Instead, tell him that the draft board requested that you obtain letters pertaining to your physical condition to help them to reach a decision in classifying you. This is not an untruth. In the order to report for a physical, you are told to bring such letters with you. You might also remind him that it costs the government a tremendous amount of money to train each GI, and that they do not want to waste this money on men who will have to be discharged for medical reasons. They also will not want to pay you any disability pensions which you would be entitled to if you were damaged in any way while you were in the service.

Other documentation, such as x-rays, etc., should also be obtained if pertinent. You should keep copies of all documentation, of course.

Next, make an appointment with your Medical Advisor. Each draft board should have one of these, and will make an appointment for you at your request. He cannot give you a physical examination, but he will review all of your documents and tell you if he feels you should be deferred. He will also make a recommendation to your board.

Finally, you will probably have to report for a physical examination. Bring two copies of your documentation with you (but be sure that you still have one copy at home in case both of these sets are misplaced.) When you are asked to turn in any doctor's letters give them one set and keep the other for safekeeping in case the first is accidentally mislaid.

CAF To Meet Wednesday

Wednesday, September 23, from 8:00 P.M. to 11:00, the Community Action Foundation will hold an open meeting in the Student Union Ballroom. Composed of five autonomous groups, Northern Educational Service, Committee on Poverty, Racial Seminars, and A Better Chance, C.A.F. serves as an umbrella organization, enabling these social action groups to coordinate their programs towards common goals. The organization as a whole works to establish closer ties between the campus and the community, to provide a more relevant educational experience for students, and to direct student action into constructive channels dealing with the social problems of the immediate community and larger society.

At this meeting the groups will jointly make presentations, including a summary of their actions to date, and their present programs and goals. They will then break down into the separate groups to form wokshops to discuss new ideas and sign up new members. A continuous multi-media show will accompany the presentations.

N.E.S., as a tutoring service for Springfield, provides students with the opportunity to teach and communicate on a one-to-one basis with elementary and high school students who are unable to receive such attention in the public schools. The Committee on Poverty will be doing extensive research in the problems of poverty this semester, as well as establishing an educational program on campus dealing with poverty and related issues, with particular focus on Massachusetts. Racial Seminars will concentrate on arranging seminars and dialogues on an informal basis concerning racial practices and attitudes and also will invite speakers to the University, with the program as a whole being aimed toward campus. Action Lab is working in the Springfield area setting up Street Academies for the education of high school dropouts, and has already had one such academy successfully operating for over one month. They plan to set up more academies and are considering ideas for prison education programs and organizing a prep school in the area based on the guidelines established by Hariem Prep in New York City. A Better Chan-ə (A.B.C.), which will not get underway until January, plans to train facilitators for sensitivity groups concerning race and will establish these groups on campus.

All five of the groups belonging to C.A.F. will work this year to establish and strengthen the concept of "communiversity" and thus open the channels of communication between campus and community, allowing both to work together and benefit each other.

Move It or Lose It!

Due to the extreme shortage of parking space available on the campus, and as a result of greatly increased commuter traffic and other factors, it is vital that we have the cooperation of all students, staff, and faculty. Surveys taken of all lots on Sept. 10 and subsequent days show a large number of unregistered vehicles parked in lots reserved for registered student vehicles. Therefore, beginning on Thursday, Sept. 24, and continuing until this problem is alleviated, all unregistered and illegally parked vehicles will be towed from the campus. This action taken after consultation and agreement with the Student Senate Services Committee, the Office of the Dean of Students, and the Chancellor's office.

The Silent Spring

To prepare a face to meet the faces that you meet;
...Time for you and time for me
And time yet for a hundred indecisions
And for a hundred visions and revisions
Before the taking of a toast and tea."
- T.S. Eliot

"Now I'm finally able, you know," Herb was saying, "to do the things that I wanted to." He had graduated last June and was sitting in on courses he felt he wasn't able to before.

"What I'd really like to be," he said, "is a dirt farmer. It's the Lithuanian peasant in me. Yea, a farmer. A farmer."

Stroking his beard, he sat back in the chair in a chic's room. The beard had grown in well over the summer.

"I'm going to leave the country," he pronounced. "I don't want to have anything to do with a system that kills people." He began scratching at his beard.

"Of course, I can't go before spring. Spring. The farming doesn't start until spring. It's so cold in Alberta. So flat and so desolate and so cold."

Behind the beard, his face was beginning to appear haggard. He wasn't eating much - "didn't have to," he said. Rather work down the layer of body fat which he carried.

"Look, I'm starting to come down. Anyone out there want some?"

"Well, I don't agree with your politics," said the chic, "but I'll see.".

She walked out and he reached for a leather tobacco pouch.

"The spring," he said.

"And indeed there will be time," another Eliot had said,

"To wonder 'Do I dare?' and 'Do I dare?' Time to turn back and descend the stair,
With a bald spot in the middle of my hair."

"A farmer, said Herb again. "Yes, a farmer." "For I have known them all already, known them all," Eliot had written when he was twenty-two. Twenty-two and Herb was twenty-six.

"Have known the evenings, mornings, afternoons, I have measured out my life with coffee spoons."

Herb lit the cigarette and seemed almost comical as he struggled to hold the smoke in his lungs. He passed it to the chic who had come in to share it with him.

"It makes me see so much I could never see otherwise. But I can stop - I did in the summer.

"The summer - what a drag. My parents won't let me have chics in my room. Got to sneak down the basement."

He was offered a sandwich and refused. Was eating some kind of special foods only, he said.

Herb began to look as if he wanted to go. Down the hall, freshmen girls were running and screaming, dragging one of their number toward the shower.

"They don't know what they're getting themselves into," he said slowly; he looked sad and tired. "I've got to get out of here."

He pulled on his Army jacket and turned to go. "Did you see the zig-zag man on my back?" he asked.

"We have lingered in the chambers of the sea," Eliot had said,
"By sea-girls wreathed with seaweed red and brown
Till human voices wake us, and we drown."

Beware The Center Sanctum!!

It came upon a midnight dreary, as here I trudged weak, wet, and weary. My face mirrored in dripping despair, mind throbbing, the outlook.....far from fair.

But wait! What was that ahead? A gaping maw, rising out of the fog. Inward I chose to go, or rather, was irresistably drawn. Ever inward, down down, downward I trudged, deeper, ever deeper into the bowels of this most malevolent castle. The air was heady and damp. The echos of my footsteps, trudging, trudging, trudging, came up behind me. My scalp bristled, and I felt an erection coming on.

When suddenly, like the sickly wail of a forlorn Banshee, the most pious cry of despair I heard. Sobbing, sobbing, calling out for merciful help in the suffocating opaque, then collapsing back in convulsive throes, somewhere behind me, and to the left.

Quickly I turned, eyes wide, heart pounding within my anxious only half-hearing the sound of my voice, "Hello?".

"Over here! Oh God, over here!", she cried. There, there in that corner, I thought. I struck a match, blinding myself temporarily; my eyes cleared, and in the faint flickering of that fragile flame, I saw her, huddled miserably in that damp cement corner, face staring up at me tearfully, hopefully, fearfully.

The match flickered out. I quickly struck another. "Oh God, oh thank God!" she rushed to me, burying her head in my armpit. "Oh God!". She was incoherent.

Suddenly, she screamed "Look out!", and pushed me to the floor. A rush of air behind me and I felt a ripping, searing pain on my temple. I was bleeding. "What?"

"The bats.... they're everywhere!"....Look out!" The little emissary of evil was coming back for more of my O-negative. Dynamically, I lashed out with my arm, catching the vicious little beastie right between it's beady little eyes. "There," I said matter-of-factly, "don't worry, I've got my books and my poetry to protect us."

"Far out" she purred. It was obvious that she was developing a deepseated father thing for me.

"Just in case, though," I mused, "here, take my enchanted ring, it will protect you, should we ever become separated." I slipped it on her quivering finger.

"It's too large."

"Don't worry, it will become smaller." I cast a third-class benign spell on my ring, and it reduced itself in size until it fit perfectly. (Being a Wizard of Blue magic has it's useful moments - I took a flower out of my pocket and gave it to her.

Thusly reassured, she explained her situation to me. Her name was Purity Snow, and she, as myself had sought shelter from the storm inside this mysterious edifice. This was hours ago, it seemed, and then the bats (and, as I was later to learn, the harpies) came. And they came, and they came, giving no quarter, no respite, darkly squeaking and flapping, tearing and clawing, they came upon this miserable blonde innocent. She also related to me something that I had half-suspected already...the doors were locked from the outside. Anyone could come in, but leaving, yes, that was the issue.

The hair on my matted chest bristling, I decided upon a bold course of action. We would travel together, the way God planned it, and, together, we would chastise this evil, and regain our freedom.

We started out, moving by matchlight, slowly, stumbling occasionally. After several hours of this forward groping, she grasped my arm urgently.

"I don't like it here, I've been here before, I think."

"We've all been here before." I added reassuringly.

"No. Something was breathing in the dark here, something big, and .....evil." She was shaking.

"Well, we've got to get out of here. No two ways about that. Don't worry." Actually, I was worried. My ring on her finger was glowing, a worrisome sign.

We walked on a little way. She was getting more anxious. We stopped again. There was a strange odor hanging in the air, something very earthy, yet, at the same time, unearthly. It was then that I saw it. Two fire-red coals, glowing in the dark. I quickly reached to strike another match. There were no matches left. Oh God! I fumbled in my pockets. There must be another pack somewhere.....Yes, there they were. I struck one and beheld a sight that sent a shudder to the very marrow of my bones. There, in the corner, dressed in a tattered blue uniform, gore all over his face, was a gnarled old man, standing on all fours, his face contorted in a wild, animal look.

"I am the keeper of Center sanctity. You have dared transgress. Give me your mind!" He lept at us.

"Quick! Up this convenient escalator!" I directed, as I turned to face this new menace. But, too late. He was on me. Hot breath in my face, we struggled. Locked in battle, we tumbled down, hard. My shoulder was bleeding from a savage bite. I managed to throw him off, and at least i could bring my wizardry into play! I sent him reeling with a quick, off-the-cuff spell. Then I laid a more holding spell on him....."Out, Demons, out, back to the depths of Corporate degradation from which thou were't spawned!"

His resistance ceased. I calmly walked over to him and laid a fresh flower on his heaving breast.

This nasty affair dispatched, I rejoined Purity at the top of the escalator.

"Look! Over there" she exclaimed, "a light!"

We walked over to it, and there it was, an exit sign, like a beacon from heaven. From there on, it was relatively simple. A quick blast from my ring opened the door, and out we stepped into the cool, star-filled sky of the early morning.

"Bless you, kind sir," she said, "thank you for saving me." The stars in her eyes out-shone those of the heavens.

"Think nothing of it".

"It's way past my bed-time" she purred.

"Mine too." I said. A pregnant silence followed. "Hey, wanna ball?"

She came over to me, a wry smile on her sweet, innocent face. She embraced me and raised her ruby lips to my ear.

"Wiz?"

"Yes, my dear....."

"Fuck off"

"Aw.....shit!"

MUCH PEACE TO YOU. HAVE A GOOD DAY.

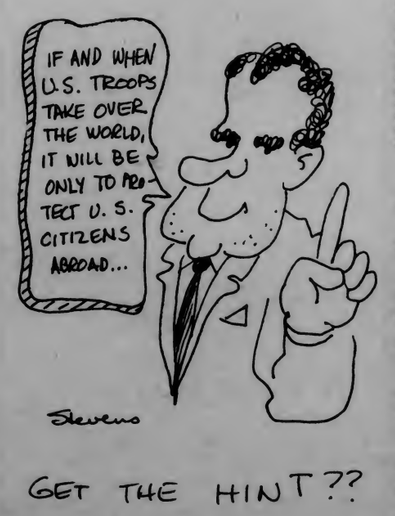
BENJAMIN FIEMAN

Education at UMass

The following article is directly quoted from the Massachusetts Gazette of May 22, 1970.



WHO?

"The crowd of students and legislators milled around Whitmore Lobby as the events of Legislators' Day began, as state representatives and senators were assigned the right places to be at the right time. One diligent student host approached a spectacled middle-aged man with distinguished graying hair and asked, "Are you a representative or a senator?" The man hesitated a moment; then turning the pages of a Gazette, pointed to a photograph of himself he asked, "Recognize him?" The embarrassed student did, then. The man's name was Tippo."

Dear Chancellor Tippo,

This incident was reported and has been the knowledge of the entire University community since late May, and there still has been no word in the press from the "diligent student" who committed this colossal blunder. It is true that due to the unfortunate concurrence of the reporting of the incident and of the latter part of the Strike, it may not have come to the individual's attention but this certainly should have been rectified by the inclusion of this report into the Parents Newsletter of June, 1970. Thus, I feel that it is my duty as a conscientious student to correct this matter as soon as possible to the limits of my ability with a public letter of apology. It might be argued by a small radical minority that this letter must be written by the culprit himself, but I know that both you and I realize that one student is much the same as another and I do admit that with our quaint cultural costumes we do all look alike. Consequently, I would like to extend to you the deserved apology from all of us of the student body. I assure you that no such mistake could ever occur again, mainly because of the great predominance of your benevolent face upon the majority of the posters attached to trees and buildings on the campus. It certainly is a positive joy to note the amount of publicity and recognition that a truly "unambitious" man such as yourself is deservedly finally beginning to receive - it kind of restores one's faith in robber barons. Who, indeed?

Obsequiously yours,
MARK SMITH

Campus Comment

To the editor:

The Sunday afternoon boogie at the pond was a mixed experience. It was a beautiful day with good music but the bad vibes hanging in the air overshadowed things to a great extent. Eric the Rat initiated the event but by the end of the day, he was acting very hatefully toward both the crowd and the musicians - and the crowd, at least, was reciprocating his emotions. It started on a very small scale by what he called a "reactionary force" which obviously took shape during the many events he sponsored last semester. These relatively few people shouted him down and refused to let him speak even during the break time between bands and Eric's counter reaction fed the fire and created the incredibly bad scene at the end which was Eric vs. everybody else.

The thing is, why were some people against letting him speak. One person said it was because Eric is "fucked up". But when you think about it, this is possibly only with regard to himself or to the established order around him. With respect to himself, that's his own problem, but with respect to the establishment it's pretty obvious - Eric is about as "fucked up" as they come. In view of the shape society is in, however, that might not be such a bad thing. It's a fact that it usually takes a deviant to institute change in a society and therefore it seems that Eric has great potential for changing the established order. But what changes would he want? After hearing him speak on many things it is possible to believe that he would screw up things even more. But now we must be a little honest with ourselves in deciding what the issue was this particular time. What did we think Eric was going to be discussing Sunday afternoon at the pond? For along with everything else, Eric was directly responsible for one very good thing on this campus last year. During the strike when he called his "tribes" together by the pond and gave out pinwheels to everyone who would take their clothes off, there was a healthy mental reaction in those who were present. It's been happening for a few years on the West Coast but for most of us it was the first time we experienced a lot of people running around naked, swimming in the pond and having a good time. As it happens with the initial experience, it was surprising how natural it seemed, how very different from what one might have expected even though we've been well exposed to nudist philosophy. It drew people together, emphasized similarities rather than differences, put people more at ease with one another and the basically open and honest atmosphere allowed people to get their minds a lot straighter than they ever had been. The good vibes passed very easily between everyone. Clothes are fine and all the colors can be very beautiful but when it reaches the extreme of not ever being able to take them off, to let down your guard momentarily so to speak, it can be a definite barrier between people and a serious sickness. It's no secret that this society is very sick with regard to anything relating to sex. And this campus, being a microcosm of the society, is basically no different.

But we have the advantage of being in transition. We haven't quite been assimilated into the society yet and as such our values aren't so rigid as the rest of its members. It's still possible to institute change among ourselves. And it would be wise to try and change ourselves in some ways. The thing that people find most difficult to be straight or honest about, as a result of the repressiveness of the society, is sex. One reason for this is that the sexual instinct cannot merely be repressed and forgotten as society would prefer. Without repression sex will manifest itself naturally, with it the only question is what other shape it will take. It is generally accepted that public nudity does not lead to indiscriminate and irresponsible sex but to more open and healthy attitudes toward it. Last year Eric took his clothes off, got a few others to join him initially and the practice started to gain a little momentum. But it died along with the strike, waiting for the start of the new semester for another chance to begin. This Sunday a small force overpowered any chance he had of pulling this off again and as it happened, the hate generated by that force was what spread through the crowd instead of any of the things which might have resulted from a few hundred naked people boogying to the music. Aside from the question of Eric being obnoxious, it seems that the force which made itself felt is simply a manifestation of society's rules regarding nudity.

It took the shape of a few of us being afraid to hear anything but the music, even between bands when there was no music. This is not meant to defend Eric Walgren but merely to question the motives and reasons for a few people being so unreasonably uptight about him.

It is not clear what will result from this. Maybe Eric got so pissed that he'll never come back to scream about "bullllllshit" or anything else. This is doubtful. But it might be a good idea, if and when he does return, to listen objectively (for a little while) and sort out any possible ideas of intelligence from the things he says and does. The music that afternoon was out of site but we passed up the opportunity for something even better. For no harm would have come from experiencing ourselves a little more openly along with the music. The fact is that UMass, in most ways, is not a very progressive school to say the least and it will take a deviant of at least the magnitude of Eric to institute any sort of meaningful change in our values.

Making Voices Heard

To the editor:

Involvement - working within the system or against it -- changing and improving the communities where we live be they cities, small towns or a college campus.

The strike last spring for the first time made many aware of the channels open to them for effecting concrete changes and improvements.

Many people over the summer took advantage of election year campaigning as a means to improve our political system.

With the November elections only a few weeks off, students should not pass up this opportunity to campaign for the candidate of their choice - and to effectively make the democratic process function by making their voices heard.

Candidates, like Kevin White, democratic candidate for Governor, need manpower and are willing to accept young people into the political system where they can acquire the experience necessary to effect the changes that can make our state and country a better place to live.

The outcome of the election and ultimately what becomes of the University and our country is dependent on the role that the young people of this country choose to play. We can affect our lives, our universities and the communities in which we live only if we care enough to get off our asses and do something about it.

If you give a damn about your fellow man, act now. The rewards are worth it.

To the editor:

The pig within the so-called "university hip community" ripped off three 20" x 30" silk American flags from the Universal Life Church last Sunday at the rock-and-roll scene at the Campus Pond. These beautiful flags are irreplacable because the Church has no money. All friends of the Church please open your eyes for these flags. Dear thieves, if you were simply mindless, please return your scurrilous prize to the Daily Collegian Office in the Student Union.

Do people not realize that Church equipment is not part of a give away show, that this equipment forms an essential part of the Church's program to develop a path whereby the cynical heads may reconnect with their bodies and the integrated Self may reconnect with other people, and finally the universal life force? Or are many people so repressed that they are inwardly threatened by the glorious freedom that the Universal Life Church expresses and blackly avenge the exposure of their own tin freedom.

A pig cannot distinguish between pig property and community property, he rips off the world.

Here the community property belongs to the dancing community which is as yet tiny, Joe Hip College has not begun to dance. If dancing is part of believing in yourself, can a crowd of well-fed, faithless, sardine-canned American rock-and-roll fans ever get themselves together? Open up the tribal space, let the dancers dance and the banners fly, the commercial hippie musicians on their star-with-fans trip, then let the tourists see what life is all about.

Try Harder

To the editor:

The death of the Holyoke coed from an attempted abortion has hit this office in a very hard way. I share with Dr. Gage of the University Health Service feelings of both remorse and some guilt. But each tragic experience is an opportunity to learn, to learn about life and love and concern, and to flee death, ignorance, distrust and oppression.

Abortions for women should be free and available at the request of any woman. But until they are, some of us work to provide both counselling and referral services to women with problem pregnancies. Along with the Health Services we solicit your trust and confidence. Clergy Consultation Service is a nationwide movement and can be contacted in Massachusetts at 617-527-7188. Referrals are available for in state care or clinic care in New York City where laws have recently changed. We also are able to discuss with you all the options including marriage and adoption.

Let us all learn by this experience to try harder and love in new ways. Spread the GOOD NEWS!

Road Show Brings Award Winning Play To UMass

Connecticut Valley theatre audiences will have an opportunity to see the New York production of Lorraine Hansberry's "To Be Young, Gifted and Black" at the UMass campus Friday and Saturday, Sept. 25 and 26. A special matinee has been scheduled for 2:30 p.m. Saturday in addition to 8 p.m. performances Friday and Saturday, all in Bowker Auditorium.

"To Be Young, Gifted and Black" is the first offering in the 1970-71 UMass Fine Arts Council Series which will bring to the campus some 40 major professional events in popular, classical and chamber music, theatre and contemporary dance.

Critical acclaim for "To Be Young, Gifted and Black" has been high wherever the production has appeared, including a year off-Broadway at the Cherry Lane Theatre. Clive Barnes, writing in the New York Times, has called the production "wonderfully moving and entertaining."

"To Be Young, Gifted and Black" is the story of the black author Lorraine Hansberry, who died at the age of 34 of cancer. At 29, she became the youngest American, the fifth woman, and the only black dramatist to win the coveted New York Drama Critic's Circle Award for the Best Play of the Year, "A Raisin in the Sun."

Her husband, Robert Nemiroff, has adapted "To Be Young, Gifted and Black" from letters, diaries and notes of Miss Hansberry. The cast will include Justitia Davis, Margaret Ochwat, Tina Sattin, Garn Stephens, William Suplee, Bernard Ward and Camille Yarbrough (see photo at right).

Reserved tickets are available from Fine Arts Council Box Office at 125 Herter Hall, 5-0202. Ticket prices are $1.50 for undergraduates; $2 for graduate students and students from other schools; $2.50 for faculty and staff; and $3 for the general public. Mail orders should enclose stamped, self-addressed envelope.

University Chorus Begins Fifth Season

The University chorus is actively seeking members to help with it's fall schedule.

The initial purpose of the University Chorus which is beginning its fifth year as a performing organization, is to perform major oratories with orchestra.

But just as important, according to Director Alan Harler, the chorus provides an opportunity for fellow graduate and undergraduate students, including non-music majors, to congregate, sing and get to know one another.

The chorus, consisting of approximately 100 mixed voices, begins its fifth year this fall. During the first semester, Henry Purcell's FUNERAL MUSIC FOR QUEEN MARY II and the Haydn TE DEUM will be studied and presented in concert in December.

In the past, Haydn's LITTLE ORGAN MASS, Vivaldi's GLORIA, Leonard Bernstein's CHICHESTER PSALMS, and Mozart's SOLEMN VESPERS were performed on campus.

Last year the UMass Chorus also had the opportunity to sing at the Helen Hills Chapel at Smith College and at Chicopee and Frontier Regional High Schools.

Distinguished faculty soloists such as Dorothy Ornest and John D'Armand are often featured in the various works.

Rehearsals for the one-credit course are twice per week: Tuesday from 7:00 to 9:00 p.m. and Wednesday from 4:40 to 6:00 p.m. The chorus still has openings for male voices.

Mr. Harler studied at Wesleyan University, the University of Cincinnati, and the University of Salzburg. He is presently in his fourth year of directing the University Chorus and also the University Women's Choir and the Madrigal Singers.

Film Festival To Present Outstanding German Works

The German Expressionist Film Festival (GEFF) is a series, presented by the Art History Group, of the outstanding German films made between 1919 and 1931.

The Twenties were a period of extensive innovation for the cinema, and, as in virtually every other creative medium, Weimar Germany was far ahead of the rest of the world.

While the studios of other countries regarded films as primarily commercial entertainment for the masses, German production companies strove for works of artistic excellence and enlisted the efforts of leading artists for costumes and set design. By using strikingly imaginative lighting and technical innovations such as the moving camera, they established the movie camera as a creative rather than recording instrument and achieved some extraordinary effects which haven't been duplicated on the screen since.

Aside from their technical wizardry, leading German directors such as Fritz Lang, F.W. Murnau, and G. W. Pabst, used extremely imaginative thematic material for their screenplays.

Whether in the Fritz Lang science fiction thrillers or in the dream-like Germanic legends and horror stories, audiences are still carried away by the phychological expressiveness of the German film. For it was the aesthetic creed of Expressionists at that time to lay bare the recesses of the soul in terms of the external development of the story -- hence the similarity of the early German films to the works of Franz Kafka.

On Wednesday in Thompson 104, the series gets underway with the presentation of DR. MABUSE, DER SPIELER, by Fritz Lang (8:00) p.m. and THE GOLEM by Paul Wegener (9:45). DR MABUSE, DER SPIELER, made in 1922, is the fantastical account of an international arch-fiend. Lang's skill in lighting and plot pacing in this film has often led to comparisons between him and Alfred Hitchcock. Like many Expressionistic works of this time, Lang's film shows a strong concern for psychoanalysis, hypnosis, and the newly discovered depths of the subconscious.

The German Expressionist Film Festival gets underway tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in Thompson. The festival is sponsored by the Art History Group.

Recital To Feature Flute, Marimba

A recital featuring the unusual combination of the flute and the marimba will be given tomorrow night, Sept 23, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The recital will be given by a husband and wife team from the U-Mass Music Dept., Dr. Peter Tanner and his wife Joanne.

The program for the evening includes: Franz Schubert's Opus 137, Sonata in B minor for flute by Bach, Diversions for Flute and Marimba, and Berlioz's Reverie et Caprice.

Dr. Peter H. Tanner was born in Rochester, N.Y., and is a graduate of the Eastman School of Music, where he studied percussion with William Street. He holds a Ph.D in Musicology from the Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C.

He has played with the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, the United States Marine Band, and the Chautaugua, N.Y. Symphony Orchestra. As a marimbist, he has appeared on the Ed Sullivan and Arthur Godfrey television programs.

Before joining the staff at the University of Massachusetts in 1969, he formerly taught at Kansas State University and Wisconsin State University, Eat Claire, where he was the chairman of the Department of Theory-Composition. His present professional activities include the position of tympanist in the Springfield Symphony Orchestra.

Joanne Dickinson Tanner is a native of Winchester, N.H., and is a graduate of the Eastman School of Music. She has studied with Marcel Moyse, Joseph Mariano, and Wallace Mann (of the National Symphony Orchestra, Washington, D.C.). While still in high school she was a member of the Pioneer Valley Symphony and a participant in the Old Deerfield Summer Chamber Music concerts. She has played in the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, and has been on the music faculties of Kansas State University and Wisconsin State University, Eau Claire. Presently she is a Visiting Instructor of Flute at the University of Massachusetts and is also a member of the music faculties of Smith College and Mt. Holyoke College.

This concert marks her first solo appearance in this area in several years.

By SYDNEY OMARR

Leo natives should, where possible, avoid lifting heavy objects. The vulnerable point for Leo is the back. Aries is associated with the head, and many natives of this sign often appear to be frowning. In many cases, they are squinting. Pisces is related to the feet. Notices of this sign can often be heard complaining about "aching feet."

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Accent on what you own. Secure possessions. Take no chances on others. Be there "in person." One you trust is not infallible. Build on solid ground for future security.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): You are on the move. Ideas flow. Key is to follow through. Shake off recent lethargy. Read and write — take notes and get thoughts on paper. Unusual offer comes your WAY.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Accent on finances, possessions. You are able to get what you need through diplomatic approach. Avoid trying to force issues. Time your moves. Profit is indicated.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Cycle high: take initiative What was delayed begins rolling. Make most of contacts. Keep hole card covered. Means spring surprise at right moment. You will know.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Your ability to maintain a confidence is put to test. Older persons may appear slow, but the wisdom is present. Do some hard listening. Postpone direct action.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): You may end one relationship and begin another. You are able to define your tastes. You hear your own voice, dance to your own tune. This is all to the good.

LIBRA (Sept 23 - Oct. 22): Stress on business affairs, honor and achievement. Your original approach is appreciated. No need to take a back seat. Adhere to principles. Believe in yourself.

SCORPIO (Oct 23 - Nov. 21): Good lunar aspect coincides with publicity, advertising and publishing. Submit long-range plans. Build for future. Short cuts now will not suffice. Act accordingly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Spotlight on public relations, legal affairs. Read between the lines; study fin print. Keep guard up; don't lean with your chin.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): You may be required to perform extra duties. Take overtime request in stride. fine print. Keep guard up; don't try in do everything at once.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Change, travel and variety are featured. Nothing appears the same. You have to make some adjustments. To so with good humor. All indicated from member of opposite sex.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have learned to follow through on beliefs no matter how unpopular. Your charm lies in your individuality. Challenge is your stimulant. Confusion will evaporate. You soon will have clear outline of objective.

Offense, Defense Sparkle In Redman Romp

THE BIG "O" – UMass Mark Russell delivers the offensive running punch, neatly following a block on Maine's Joe LeVesseur by Mike Marchev. It was a combination of the UMass attack and its defense that did in Maine, 28-0.

AND THE BIG "D" – Curt Bristol (82) and Bill DeFlavio (76) come through for the Redman defense, enveloping a Maine back. (MDC photos by Rich McIntyre)

Landry Stars, Yastrzemski Hits 40th

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Daily Collegian
Sports
VOLUME XCVIX, ISSUE 9
TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1970

Just taking a few side glances at some happenings in the world of sports and offering various comments, wry, witty and worth the paper their printed on, on their significance.

EVENT: Former UMass great Greg Landry rambles 76 yards with the football as the Detroit Lions roar past the Green Bay Packers, 40-0. COMMENT: Landry was probably the greatest of all Redman quarterbacks, starring in his collegiate days of 1965-66-67, and was drafted number one by Detroit in '68. In only his third pro year, the rangy Landry (6'3-200) understudies the veteran Bill Munson but may have the starting job soon; he didn't score a touchdown on this long dash, being pulled down from behind on the 11-yard line.

EVENT: Boston Patriots, losers of all four exhibition games, surprise the Miami Dolphins, 27-14. COMMENT: The Pats' defense, bolstered by the addition of defensive end Ike Lassiter in a trade with Oakland, was the major factor in this victory, setting up two vital scores with an interception and a fumble. Boston plays the New York Jets on Sunday, followed by the Baltimore Colts and the Kansas City Chiefs on consecutive Sundays. Then.....

THE BIG ONE!!!....The Patriots host the New York Giants in a matchup that will pit New England fans loyal to the Pats against N.E. people sympathetic to the Giants. No matter who wins this one, tavern and armchair arguments will persist for a long time to come as to which is the superior team.

EVENT: Boston Red Sox third-baseman George Scott is currently sporting a plus-295 batting average. COMMENT: The likeable Scott deserves a world of credit for hoisting a once enemic .191 average in 1968 to his current mark of '70. The hope here is that he can crack the .300 level and match his .303 achievement of '67. In the area of attitude toward the game itself, Scott always bats 1.000, a great guy to watch.

EVENT: The Pittsburgh Pirates hold a slim lead in the race for first place in the Eastern Division of the National League, followed by the Chicago Cubs and the New York Mets. COMMENT: It looks like the Cubs will be Pittsburgh's toughest opponent the rest of the way, but either team should take it on the chin from the Western Division winners, the Cincinnati Reds, in the N.L. Playoffs. It looks like the Baltimore Orioles all the way in the American League. The World Series?..... Anybody's bet!

EVENT: Boston College defeats Villanova in a regionally-telecast football game this past Saturday. COMMENT: The Eagles look very strong with a whale of a passing attack, spearheaded by senior quarterback, Frank Harris. UMass hosts BC in its last home game, on Nov. 21. Both squads should show up for that tilt with winning records; could be a big crowd-pleaser.

EVENT: Connecticut runs all over Vermont in another game on Saturday, 47-0. COMMENT: UConn's Vin Clements registered four touchdowns in this affair. Look out for the Huskies! Watch for them when they come to UMass for that big Yankee Conference tussle on Oct. 24!

Detroit QB
Greg Landry

Red Sox Star
George Scott

EVENT: The Minnesota Vikings score a revenge win over the Kansas City Chiefs, 27-10. COMMENT: Die-hard followers of the old-style National Football League enjoyed this outcome, and well they should. Old-style American Football League backers can still cling to KC's solid victory in last January's Super Bowl, 23-7, bragging that the Chiefs possess the best personnel in all of pro football. Many experts agree with them on this count.

EVENT: Metawampe manufactures a sizzling 7-1-1 mark in his college "Grid Picks" of Friday last. COMMENT:.....

EVENT: Carl Yaztrzemski belts 40th homer and drives in his 100th run as the Red Sox win their sixth straight, 2-1, over Cleveland. COMMENT: "Although Yaztrzemski is a lengthy name, it fits quite nicely in a hall of fame...." An excerpt from the Carl Yaztrezemski theme song as SUNG ON THE LP album, "The Impossible Dream".

EVENT: Slippery Rock shut-out Geneva, 39-0, in another college grid clash on Saturday. COMMENT: Where's Slippery Rock?

Valiant Effort

In the waning moments of Saturday's Redman-Black Bear tilt, Art Corsaletti of UMass made a diving attempt for one more score. (MDC photo by Gary Slickman).

Interviewing Dr. Wood were Mark Mills, WFCR News reporter John Zizis, WMUA News Director and Peter Pascarelli, Editor-In-Chief, Massachusetts Daily Collegian., Massachusetts Daily Collegian. The interview took place September 17, 1970 at the studios of WFCR, Five College Radio, Hampshire House, UMass, as part of the WFCR news programming.)

WFCR: Dr. Wood, perhaps you could tell us something about your background in education and out of education that would make you a good man for the job?

Dr. Wood: Well, I can tell you something about my background in education and I think we'll lead to future events about what goes on. Essentially I'm a political scientist, did my college work at Princeton and Harvard. I come originally from Florida, and went back to Florida for practicing politics and as associate director of of state legislature bureau there. I then moved back to the budget bureau and to education. Much of my professional life has been a political scientist at MIT and most of my concerns have been directed toward urban affairs, politics, and problems and policies and concerns of the city. The other part of my professional life has been in one form of government service or another, at state, federal and local levels. There is a combination I think of knowing something about problems of the academy and something about the problems of large organizations, and the University of Massachusetts has both these charateristics.

MDC: The last months have shown many presidents in New England and around the country leaving their positions. Therefore why did you assume the presidency a large university such as this one?

Dr. Wood: Well, there's a general answer and a specific one. You're right about the casuality rate, I came on board fulltime Aug. 27 and by my calculations if one more president resigns in Massachusetts, I'll be the senior university president. Generally the challenge of leading an institution of higher learning at right this present time with the present atmosphere of crisis, is very hard to say no to, if you care for these institutions. Specifically I have a sense that UMass is at the beginning of a period of enormous opportunity in terms of its resources, in terms of its faculty, and personnel in terms of its capacity to grow, in terms of the commitments of the people of this state. I think we are in a relatively superb position and you combine with general challenge with specific opportunity, you come out with an affirmative answer.

WFCR: That description you gave would indicate that university is on the brink of doing a great thing and could blossom into a fabulous institution, and yet for some reason there is a set of circumstances that offset the university against community outside, against the populations off campus. If we are in the position to do something positive on campus, why is there animosity?

Dr. Wood: You find us at a stage when there is a major confusion of roles about what a university should be doing and its expressed between generations that express at times very strong and conflicting views about it, so that the sorting out of the expectations of the community at large, the general population, middle americans, hard hats, viv-a-vis the students enrolled on campuses now, accounts for the dissidence that you get in your signals. That doesn't mean howevr, that the future isn't bright or that out of this apparent turmoil you don't come out with any plusses.

Two things to hold in your mind is the repetity of a decade of growth under John Lederle and that the university is moving forward from not particularly being identified to a position of national acknowledgment. Secondly is the liberality of the state and the resources made available. The three campuses have 161 million dollars of construction authorized and underway. This is 68% of the state budget. The faculty level of salaried are not the best in the country but they are going up rapidly. The Commonwealth still invests far too little in education, in terms of amounts of money its far behind. But in terms of increase its coming on strong. And, the question now is not necessarily the resources acquired, and we need much but our wise and effective use of them in a way that will allow the university help change the community and society around it and still maintain most of its classic functions.

WMUA: Dr. Wood, you've been talking principally about growth the last couple of minutes. There is one aspect discussed here and that is it possible to obtain a livable atmosphere at this university where it is approaching enrollment of 20,000 especially when we have seen at other universities like California, Wisconsin, N. Y. with political and administrative difficulties. Is it possible to allow universities to grow this large and maintain a livable community?

DR. WOOD: The answer is we don't know. The problem of this country in the 1960's for universities and communities at large for one quick fast decade they suddenly had to come to grips with the problems of numbers in this country. At the same time population added 36 million and university students from 2 million to 7 million and we have to accomodate an onrush and expansion and duplicate by three across the country and we've had the same kind of experience here at Amherst. Now by and large in the 1960's handling numbers was not the university's bag. Administrators were not people who had to worry about their universities handling numbers. I think compared to the experiences of other campuses my predecessors did a superb job at that point and brought it up from small to moderate size.

At the same time you have to discover when you look at the California experience and wrestling with the Ohio State problems and Michigan and the others, that really went on they consciously assumed there would be an academic community whatever the number and they consciously assumed there was a unity between faculty and student and administrator and alumni that was whistic and came spontaneously. We know now in the 1970's that that's not true. We know now that you have to work for that community. The issue of how you do this, the issue of how to decentralize into groups and into viable organizations that give people the sense of identity, that give people a sense of belonging that has a sense of fraternity that doesn't suffocate and at the same time provide the options of a great society is really the classic problem that we have come to face in academics. The function of the university system and what challenges me, with 3 campuses and with state colleges and regional colleges, is that if you properly make these accomodations, you got a chance.

So I think the advantage of Amherst being the part of the system and flagship of the fleet is that it has the opportunity now to experiment with the problem of critical mass and then turn to enriching the society. I agree is critical. I think that the things that blew Berkley in 1964 is the admin-

MICHAEL DUKAKIS, the Democrat's candidate for Lieutenant Governor, makes a point during his talk on campus yesterday.

Dukakis Confident of Win For Democrats In November

By BOB CARMEN
Staff Reporter

Michael Dukakis, the Democratic nominee for Lt. Governor, made a campaign appearance intended to elicit support for himself and gubernatorial aspirant Mayor Kevin White, in the Colonial Lounge yesterday morning.

Dukakis began his remarks by pointing out that he, Mayor White, and also Senator Kennedy were all young and that it has only taken them a short period to time to gain important political positions. Dukakis contended that this fact helps to prove that people can quickly become active in the American political process and that it is possible to be an effective political figure without becoming corrupted.

After discussing the youthfulness of the Democratic ticket Dukakis emphasized that Massachusetts' problems cannot be solved by reconstructing the governmental framework, but rather by electing more qualified and capable men to public office.

It is Dukakis' opinion that the Sargent administration had available the machinery with which to initiate change and reform, but failed to take advantage of it.

When asked to prove this allegation Dukakis stated that legislation has been passed to solve most of the state's problems, but that the present Governor has not enforced this legislation.

As an example, Dukakis stated that proper executive implementation of anti-air pollution act passed over ten years ago could solve the problem of bad air, but that Sargent has failed to pressure companies such as Boston Edison which are pollutors.

To cover up for this defeciency Sargent has according to Dukakis created a "public relations fog" by submitting anti-air-pollution legislation to the General Court, which in fact would not be neccessary if existing legislation was enforced.

Dukakis stated that if he and White were elected they would solve the environmental problem and many other problems such as inadequate housing, needed funds for higher education and the welfare crises by enforcing legislation already made into law and would not unfairly blame the legislature for the state's woes.

After his short address Dukakis fielded questions concerning the various issues related to the gubernatorial election. Among the positions that Dukakis articulated include a desire for withdrawl of American troops from Southeast Asia, liberalisation of birth control and abortion laws, and the establishment of day-care centers, especially for the benefit of welfare mothers.

With regard to the automobile insurance controversy Dukakis stated that he agreed with the new law except for the part that provides for a mandatory 15% decrease on all premiums. Dukakis expressed optimism, however that the courts would rule this part of the bill to be unconstitutional.

Dukakis expressed confidence that he and White will be elected in November despite the fact that the Democratic organization cannot compete financially with the Governor's.

Dukakis said that he and White would attract voters by an intensive door-to-door effort and campaigning at every place where large numbers of people meet such as football games and supermarkets. He also said that both he and the Mayor would use television and radio to convince people to vote for them.

He emphasized, however, that neither he or White would use billboards because such advertising does not give the voter any real information about the candidates and because it is hypocritical to espouse environmental reform and destroy much of America's beauty with hundreds of ugly billboards.

Before Dukakis left U. of Mass. for an appearance at Mount Holyoke he emphasized that college students are desperately needed to help with the campaign and to go out and talk with the voters about the candidates and the issues.

Work Study Explained

For those eager beavers who want to work as well as study, the University work-study program offers paid student employment to the limit of available funds.

Applicants must be full-time students and the total family income should not exceed between 12 and 13 thousand dollars per year. There are a few exceptions to this rule, but first preference is given to those students with the greatest need. Need depends not only on annual family income and the resulting income bracket (low, middle, or high), but also on the number of dependents in the family and the number of dependents attending school.

Funds provided for the work-study program, which cam into effect in 1964, are 80 per cent federally allocated funds. The remaining 20 per cent is matched by university funds issued for student labor, known as 0-3 funds.

The range of jobs available is quite varied, although most are located on campus. Students can be employed as security guards, research assistants, lab assistants, clerks, librarians, faculty assistants, groundskeepers, and babysitters to name just a few.

During the academic year, students are allowed to work a maximum of 15 hours per week, averaging about 10 hours. On vacations and in the summer, employment is available for a full 40 hours. Many summer jobs are in non-profit organizations involving community action, such as civil service and public works in several cities and towns. Jobs are also available in camps and other youth organizations such as YMCA.

About 325 students are now employed under the work-study program. Hundreds more eligible students have applied and there are job openings to accomodate them. Unfortunately, funds are not as readily accessible as work. If a student wishes, he may work on a volunteer basis. Tutoring, for example, could be good experience for teachers-to-be. For those on a wage scale the pay rate ranges from $1.60 to $3.50, with most students averaging $1.70 per hour. Wages are usually on a graded scale, that is, after about a four or five month period, a raise is given above the minimum.

Most students who apply for work-study are satisfied with their job arrangements. When looking for a part-time job almost any job will be suitable. For those who are more concerned about the nature of their work and would like to obtain employment relating to their major, there is the undergraduate assistantship program, with fewer opportunities available. Students with high academic standing are given first preference, depending on the number of applicants. In the past few years, there have been 200 undergrad assistantships given out to twice as many applicants.

Under this program, a student obtains a scholarship grant in the form of 600 dollars per year. In return, the student agrees to work approzimately 8 hours per week in the department of his choice.

News Analysis

Campus Housing "Confused"

By DENISE ST. JEAN
Staff Reporter

According to a hesitant and somewhat confused Housing Office, the housing condition on campus is somewhat relieved.

On Sept. 7, 350 triples were anticipated most of which were located in Southwest. Extra students found themselves shipped to Orchard Hill where the Area Coordinator placed them in triples or in rooms where some student did not show up.

Today, triples mushroom all over the campus with Central, Northeast and Southwest being the victims of overcrowding. Supposedly, no more than 20 female triples exist today on campus. In Mary Lyons, seven students live in the dorm's lounges, while the Southwest triples are labeled as "voluntary."

Because most of the new co-ed dorms were previously occupied by males, there developed the problem of what to do with these students not wanting to live in the co-ed dorms. The solution--there are more male triples on campus than female. Central Area has the most male triples, while Thatcher in the Quad is clogged with 23 of them. Overall, Southwest is the location of most triples because of the greater number of dorms in that complex.

Although the Housing Office forced some students into a triple, that same office now plans to penalize any student who likes his triple. If a trio does not wish to separate when space becomes available in his living area, he will not receive his rent reduction.

A thorny bureaucratic problem arises when the Housing Office must discriminate between the Central and Northeast dorms which it lumps together as the East Area. Suppose a student lives in Brett and a room becomes available in Hamlin to which he refuses to move.

Housing is in a quandry whether or not to give the student his rent reduction. Pending a group decision, this problem remains to be solved along with Housing's other mass confusions.

The answer to the housing situation next semester hinges on the new dorms under construction in the Northeast area. While Housing itself admits that it has long been "led down the primrose path" concerning those mythical dorms, word is that one dorm may be ready for occupancy in the Spring.

Of course, more problems crop up when the question of who will live there is considered. A priority list gives the names of those students who signed up last semester for a room. Housing believes that the number of flunkouts will exceed the number of swing-shifters and that some students on the priority list will no longer want to live in the new complex.

The people on the list will first fill the dorm and if there are any vacancies the dorm will be opened to the campus.

Next year, if the new dorm is really completed, and if Housing solves its problems, the University housing situation should be somewhat bearable.

Nixon Asks For 1,000 FBI

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon asked Congress Tuesday for 1,000 more FBI agents and authority for instant federal action in cases of bombings or burnings on college campuses.

Republican congressional leaders got the word-and applauded it-at a conference with the President, Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell and FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover.

As House Republican Leader Gerald Ford of Michigan put it to reporters, the administration wants legislation that would allow the government to move in, investigate and prosecute bombings, arson and other acts of terrorism at any institution of higher learning receiving federal funds.

Almost all colleges and universities get federal help, Ford said.

Nixon recommended that the force of FBI agents be boosted from 7,000 to 8,000 to deal with the kind of campus violence Ford described as well as to help combat airplane hijackings.

Both Ford and Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania predicted Congress will give Nixon what he wants by attaching the necessary language to an anticrime bill the Senate has passed and the House Judiciary Committee is considering.

"I think it will have a beneficial effect," Ford said. The proposal, Scott and Ford told newsmen, would let the FBI intervene with or without a request from college officials or local authorities.

Scott said the Nixon program would require about $14 million for the remainder of the 1971 fiscal year and nearly $23 million for a full fiscal year, 1972. The two congressional leaders attributed the new move against violence on campuses to a deep concern they said has been growing in the Justice Department.

Muskie Leads Senate On Pollution Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) - Passing the toughest air pollution control bill ever considered by Congress, the Senate Tuesday told the auto industry to produce a nearly pollution free car by 1975 or face a possible assembly line shutdown.

The bill, geared to a policy judgement on minimum steps needed to safeguard public health, does not take into account economic or technological feasibility.

It now goes to an uncertain but likely prolonged conference with the House which earlier passed a completely different and weaker measure.

The measure passed 73-0. The Senate bill is largely the work of Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, (D) Maine, and his air and water pollution subcommittee. It includes national air quality and emission standards and enforcement tools aimed at curbing pollution from all sources. But it is aimed particularly at curbing of noxious and potentially dangerous emissions from the automobile which Muskie termed "that pollution monster."

Throughout a day of debate, all attempts to dilute the 1975 deadline for the auto industry were brushed aside as were attempts to change the committee's provision for a one time, one year extension of the final date subject to judicial review.

Balloon Missing Over Atlantic

NEW YORK (AP) - Three balloonists trying for a first transatlantic crossing in a helium filled balloon were missing without a clue Tuesday after apparently going down in the ocean south of Newfoundland.

No trace was found during the day by seven planes and three Coast Guard cutters searching the area about 500 miles south of St. John's, where they were last reported.

The crew of the big orange balloon, "The Free Life," was Rod Anderson, a New York commodities broker; his wife, Pamela Brown Anderson, 28, and a British aeronautical engineer, Malcolm Brighton, 32. They took off from a pasture on Long Island Sunday afternoon.

Radio reports picked up by commercial aircraft indicated the balloon kept an altitude of from 3,000 to 6,000 feet during the first day of flight, which took it about 900 miles along the northeast coast.

Monday night the three radioed that they were "at 600 feet and descending."

"Signing off," the message added. "Will try contact after landing."

No radio contact came after that.

The craft evidently had run into a severe cold front and rainstorm that combined to cause it to lose altitude.

The gondola, made of a buoyant material suspended beneath the gas bag and holding the balloonists and all their gear, was described by its builder as unsinkable.

The balloonists planned to rely on a propane gas heating system in an outer sac to stay aloft during the cold northern nights, when helium in the ballon's inner sac contracts. But early in the flight, they reported the heating system defunct.

The balloon's builder, Mark Semich of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, said the loss of radio contact probably resulted when the envelope the gas filled balloon fell to the water or was cut loose by the crew. The radio antenna, he said, was attached to the envelope.

However, Semich said by telephone from Idaho, the balloon was supposed to have another type of antenna in the gondola with which the crew should have been able to restore radio contact.

Nixon Appoints Marland Education Commissioner

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon made the long expected and long delayed appointment Tuesday of Dr. Sidney P. Marland Jr., of New York to be U.S. Commissioner of Education.

Marland moves into the post once held by James E. Allen, who was sort of elbowed out as education commissioner and assistant secretary of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare after he criticized the U.S. military operation in Cambodia.

Marland is 56 and president now of the Institute for Educational Development in New York. Before taking that position in 1968, he was superintendant of schools in Pittsburgh. He also had been superintendent in Vinneta, Ill., and Darien, Conn.

White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler was asked why it took the President so long to decide to nominate Marland. He said that HEW Secretary Elliot Richardson had been on vacation and it was decided the announcement would not be made until he had returned.

Richardson is back, Ziegler said, and has been in touch with members of the Senate committee that will consider the nomination, and felt the nomination should be considered.

Voluntary Population Control Urged

SHERBROOKE, QUE. (AP) - A U.S. biologist said Monday that unless every person accepts population control as a personal responsibility, the day may come when governments will have no choice but to impose restrictions on the number of children a couple may bring into the world.

Dr. R. O. Greep, of the Harvard School of Medicine and director of Harvard's soon to be completed Laboratory of Human Reproduction and Reproductive Biology, said with the world population figure, edging towards an estimated seven billion by the end of this century, the need for individual responsibility is obvious.

"If voluntary methods of controlling the population fail," he said, "then legically involuntary controls will have to be imposed.

"If people abuse their rights to have children, then the rights of society will have to receive first consideration. That would be an unhappy state and one we hope we won't have to be faced with."

Dr. Greep is among 200 scientists and medical doctors attending a three day international symposium on reproduction and population control being held at the University of Sherbrooke.

He said that ideally no family should have more than two children today. Families which have four eight and 10 children are nothing less than irresponsible.

Fighting Continues, Diplomats Seek Solutions

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Street fighting raged in Amman on Tuesday and Jordanian tanks battled invaders from Syria near the northern city of Irbid as diplomats, fearing an international explosion, sought without success to end Jordan's civil war.

King Hussein's army sent 100 tanks and much of Jordan's small air force into the mounting battle for Irbid, 50 miles north of Amman. Palestinian guerrillas reinforced by armored columns that entered north Jordan from Syria drove Hussein's forces out of the city Monday.

Informed sources said Israeli tanks were moving toward the Jordanian frontier 10 miles west of Irbid.

The guerrillas said Israeli artillery in the occupied Golan Heights fired into Irbid, but Israel's military command denied it.

Amman, ripped by a week of savage house to house fighting, was under a 24 hour, shoot to kill curfew imposed by Jordan's military governor, Field Marshal Habis Majali, but pockets of guerrillas still battled royal army troops.

Arab leaders postponed their Cairo summit conference and sent a four man delegation to Amman to try and arrange a cease fire. The delegation, headed by Sudan President Maj. Gen. Jaafar el Numairi, met with King Hussein soon after arriving in the Jordanian capital.

It also was scheduled to meet with guerrilla leaders but there appeared to be little chance the delegation could gain a truce.

Yasir Arafat, head of the guerrillas' over all command, cabled the delegation saying he could never reach an agreement with the Jordanian government because "20,000 dead and wounded and a sea of blood separate us from them." Cairo, apparently accepting the guerrillas' figures, put the death toll at 10,000 but there was no way to confirm the report. The Jordanian government has given no casualty figures.

Arafat predicted American troops would land in Jordan in "a matter of hours."

Informed diplomats in London said the Soviet Union had advised Britain it opposes any foreign intervention in Jordan. Informants at the United Nations said the Soviet Union had refused to join the United States, Britain and France in asking Syria to withdraw tanks and troops from Jordan.

The reinforced U.S. 6th Fleet was massing in the eastern Mediterranean ready to go to the rescue of the 400 or so Americans in Jordan. Washington was still trying to find a diplomatic solution to the conflict.

Ronald L. Ziegler, White House press secretary, said in Washington the United States had received a request from Hussein for diplomatic assistance in the crisis. He did not deny there may also have been a bid for military help.

Eighteen large U.S. Air Force cargo planes flew out of a base near Frankfurt, Germany, in the last 48 hours, leading to speculation that they carried U.S. Army advance units to a staging area at Incirlik, Turkey, near the Syrian border.

Military sources said it would be a routine procedure to move an advance party for the possible evacuation of Americans from Jordan.

The U.S. 6th Fleet was in the eastern Mediterranean and U.S. Army units in Germany and the United States were on alert. There are an estimated 700 foreigners in Jordan, including some 400 Americans, plus 54 airline hostages held by the guerrillas. There are 38 Americans among the hostages.

Some of the 54 hostages from the multiple airline hijackings of last week were believed to have been held for a time at Wehdat. The camp is a strong hold of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, which hijacked three Western planes Sept. 6 and 9.

There has been no word from any source on the whereabouts of the hostages since the fighting began.

The British Foreign Office said the Red Cross was authorized anew to conduct negotiations to secure their release.

The authorization, from the United States, Britain, West Germany, Switzerland and Israel, took into account a statement Tuesday by the front terming the hostages "prisoners of war," a Foreign Office spokesman said.

Arafat said all foreigners would be considered "guests, who have no connection with the policies of their government." He said the guerrillas Central Committee "issued instructions to guarantee the guests' safety and provide them with all necessary help." He did not mention the hostages.

At the United Nations in New York, diplomatic sources said the Soviet Union had refused to go along with the United States, Britain and France in an appeal to Syria to remove troops from Jordan. A State Department spokesman in Washington said, however, the Soviet Union had told the United States it "is in touch with the Syrian government."

Any major move by Syria to crush Hussein could bring U.S. intervention to save the monarch's pro Western government.

Jordan charged that Syria sent two armored columns into northern Jordan on Sunday in support of guerrillas at Irbid and the border town of Ramtha. Syria denied the charge and said the troops belonged to the Palestine Liberation Army composed of Palestinian guerrillas.

Some 7,000 troops under Syrian control were reported linked up with the invading tanks. The United States concurred with Jordan's charge against Syria and demanded that Syria withdraw all its invasion force.

Jordan was being isolated by other Arab countries, with even Egypt declaring it would "not allow the liquidation of the Palestinian liberation movement."

Egypt, Jordan and Israel agreed to a U.S. sponsored cease fire that went into effect Aug. 7. The truce enraged the Palestinian guerrillas who vowed to destroy it, and they increased their attacks against Hussein and his government.

Hussein's army, better trained man for man than the Palestinians or Syrians, can probably clear the isolated Palestinian pockets in central Jordan. But the Syrians outnumber them in the north.

Diplomatic sources report as many as 250 Syrian tanks have entered Jordan from the north the last three days. Jordan's 53,000 man army has 320 tanks and 350 armored cars and troop carriers but many of these are still committed around the capital and in central Jordan.

The guerrillas probably can hold on in the north and maybe establish a "Palestinian state," but they are given little chance of overwhelming the entire Jordanian army.

The carnage wrought by Hussein's Bedouin generals around Amman, however, has dealt Hussin a moral and political blow which he will have difficulty surviving.

"This bloodbath has been long coming but none of us expected it to be as bad as this," one Western diplomat said. "The wounds it opens will not heal soon."

Another diplomat said: "Hussein's a tough guy, but how long can he last in the face of all this?"

GUERRILLAS DIG IN — Two Palestinian guerrillas set up their automatic weapons in foxhole near the north Jordanian city of Irbid, the Hashemite Kingdom's second largest city, Tuesday, as heavy fighting once again erupted between Jordanian regular Army forces and guerrillas. One major battle was reported at Zarga, 15 miles north of Amman, Jordan's capital, while guerrillas were reported solidly in control of Irbid.

Prouty Slams S.S. Benifit Revisions

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Winston L. Prouty, R Vt., told the Senate Finance Committee Tuesday the increase in Social Security benefits in a House passed bill is meaningless for those at the bottom of the scale.

Prouty urged the panel to write into the measure a $100 minimum monthly payment for an individual, a more than 50 per cent increase over the present $64.

The House bill would raise the benefits five percent effect next January, boosting the individual minimum to $67.20.

"Congress has fallen behind in caring for the aged, because the number of our elderly poor as a percentage of all people has actually risen, from 15 per cent in 1959 to 18 per cent in 1968," Prouty said.

"A retired person could barely buy a month's supply of food on $67.20, let alone pay for the necessary utilities, rent and clothing."

Prouty proposed a 10 per cent hike for most Social Security recipients above the minimum scale, except that the boost would be scaled down to one per cent for those at the highest benefit levels.

In addition, he urged the Committee to expand Medicare coverage to include prescription drugs, dental care and the cost of eye glasses.

He said his proposals would cost $2 billion more than the House bill and that the Social Security trust fund has an adequate reserve margin to finance the proposals without additional revenue.

Sen. Henry Bellmon, R Okla., told the committee a provision in the House bill reducing federal matching funds for Medicaid patients after 60 days in a hospital and 90 days in a skilled nursing home would deal Oklahoma "a severe financial blow."

He estimated his state would lose at least $6 million annually in federal funds for skilled nursing homes and at least $418,000 for hospital care in state schools for the mentally retarded.

John F. Nagle, apparing for the National Federation for the Blind, asked the senators to liberalize the rules governing eligibility of sightless persons for disability benefits under Social Security.

Dr. Martin R. Steinberg, professor at the Mount Sinai School of Medicine, New York City, testified for the American Hospital Association. He criticized a provision of the House bill which would limit Medicare payments to hospitals to "the cost actually incurred, excluding therefrom any part of incurred cost found to be unnecessary in the efficient delivery of needed health services."

This, he said, "constitutes a most dangerous and unwarranted invasion of the administrative authority and perogatives of hospitals."

Turning Battle Over to South Vietnamese Seen Key

SAIGON (AP) - A top ranking American field commander said Tuesday he is trying to drive enemy troops out of four provinces east of Saigon so that he can turn the area over to the South Vietnamese and "posture our forces for the President's withdrawal program."

Lt. Gen. Michael S. Davison, commander of the U.S. 2nd Field Force, said in an interview that he has concentrated the equivalent of more than a division in the four provinces far removed from the Cambodian frontier where U.S. units have been operating.

The force includes two brigades from the 1st Air Cavalry Division, a brigade from the 25th Infantry Division and a squadron from the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment.

"This was a deliberate part of our strategy," Davison said. "There were a number of reasons.

"First of all, it was to clear the border areas and turn those over to the ARVN Army of the Republic of Vietnam.

"The second reason was that it begins to posture our forces for the President's withdrawal program.

"And the third reason was that it enabled us to bring some increased pressure to bear on a few remaining tasks that had to be done. One was to clean out War Zone D, and the other was to continue the pressure that had been put on the 33rd North Vietnamese army regiment in Binn Tuy province."

The 2nd Field Force is a tactical headquarters controlling 86,000 American combat troops in the 3rd military region comprised of Saigon and 11 surrounding provinces, including coastal Binh Tuy Province. The zone covers an area of 10,000 square miles sharing 231 miles of border with Cambodia and having 137 miles of coastline on the South China Sea.

The other provinces where American forces have been concentrated are Long Khanh, which includes War Zone D, a long time North Vietnamese supply base and staging area northeast of Saigon; Bien Hoa, just east of Saigon; and Phuoc Tuy, southeast of Saigon on the South China Sea coast.

Davison was asked if the move meant that the 25th Infantry Division, the 1st Air Cavalry Division, and the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment would be withdrawn from Vietnam by next May 1 when U.S. strength is to be reduced from its present 395,000 to 284,000.

"When you look at the total figure that the President has announced" he replied, "and you realize in 2nd Field Force that I've got roughly 34 per cent of the forces in Vietnam, you can see that in order to meet the President's figure, I've got to cough up a few folks. So, as time goes by, we're going to have to eventually start moving out some of the divisions."

"What I'm trying to do is to get our divisions and our combat troops into a position where they can not only accomplish these remaining tasks, but also be in a position so that when they do withdraw it causes the least disruption to the Vietnamese.

He estimated the enemy's main force combat strength, even though their units are short handed, at about 3,500 troops.

Despite the American patrols in the four provinces, there has been little major action.

In Cambodia, enemy troops who have stalled the government's first major offensive, lashed out at heavily reinforced Cambodian forces in two shelling attacks Tuesday the military command reported.

A spokesman said the Cambodian troops, estimated at about 6,000 men, were pressing against light opposition into positions to try to envelop the enemy strongpoint at Taing Kauk, 47 miles north of Phnom Penh.

Noted Broadway Play Hits UMass Saturday

--"To Be Young, Gifted and Black," the highly-successful play that ran off-Broadway for more than a year, will be performed by the New York company at UMass this weekend.

Three performances under the auspices of the University's Fine Arts Council will take place in Bowker Auditorium, including a special matinee performance Saturday at 2:30 p.m. The evening performances will be at 8 p.m.

"To Be Young, Gifted and Black" is the story, told in her own words, of Lorraine Hansberry, the brilliant young author of "A Raisin in the Sun" who died in 1965 of cancer. Presented with poignancy and humor, the play, a major statement of the black experience in America, recreates the world of a great American woman and artist who touched the taproots of the human condition.

Boldly contemporary in form, this work was woven together from letters, diaries, notebooks and portions of her plays by Robert Nemiroff, Miss Hansberry's husband and literary executor. The production played to consistently sold-out houses in New York for over a year and has toured at college and university campuses with immense success.

Reserved seats for the three performances of "To Be Young, Gifted and Black" go on sale at the Fine Arts Council Box Office on Friday, Sept. 11, and are priced at $1.50 for UMass undergraduates; $2 for UMass graduate students and students from other schools; $2.50 for UMass faculty and staff; and $3 for the general public. Mail orders may be directed with stamped, self-addressed envelope to the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

Borman Talks

Prisoners Release Aided By Red Cross

WASHINGTON - (AP) - Former astronaut Frank Borman told an unusual joint meeting of Congress Tuesday he sees hope the International Red Cross can become a go between in securing proper treatment by Hanoi of American prisoners.

He said that hope and a vast amount of sympathy around the world are the only success he can report from his trip as President Nison's emissary to a dozen nations to try to better the American prisoners conditions.

If the peace groups are really concerned about the treatment of prisoners, he said, they should urge their contacts in North Vietnam to deal with the International Red Cross which is really the only proper representative.

The remark brought spontaneous applause from the galleries filled with spectators and 80 wives of prisoners and from a low turnout of congressmen.

About half the 100 senators were on hand for the unusual House

About half the 100 senators were on hand for the unusual joint meeting which House Speaker John W. McCormack said reflects the extraordinary sense of moral outrage held by the American people.

Also on the floor in the section normally reserved for the Joint Chiefs of Staff were nine former prisoners released or escapee from North Vietnam prisons. The military chiefs were in the galleries.

Borman said North Vietnam is not now allowing the International Red Cross in its country, much less the prisons where Americans are being held.

But he said he found the organization to be a particularly hopeful third party in dealing with North Vietnam and said the United States should try to convince that country of its sincerity in reaching accord on prisoner treatment.

Shariff Tells of Second Manson Family Arrest

LOS ANGELES(AP)-Charles M. Manson and 18 members of his hippie type clan were arrested less than a week after the Sharon Tate slayings but were not connected with the crimes, a sheriff's deputy said Tuesday.

The group was released for lack of evidence after being jailed for investigation of grand theft and contributing to the delinquency of minors, the deputy said.

Among those arrested-while a nationwide manhunt was on for the killers of Miss Tate and six others-were all six of those later charged with the murders.

The deputy, William C. Gleason, said the arrests were made Aug. 16, 1969, in a raid on the clan's movie ranch commune. The Tate murders were Aug. 9 and 10.

The group was suspected of stealing dune buggies, Gleason said. Taken into custody with the adults were five children ranging in age from 10 months to 10 years.

Manson, he said, was found hiding under a porch. Manson, 35, is on trial with three women followers. One of the others charged won immunity from prosecution for being a state witness. Another awaits a separate trial. All were indicted last December after another round of arrests.

In another development the trial judge was reported to have declined to cite the chief prose cuter in the case, Vincent Bugliosi, for contempt of court.

Defense attorneys told newsmen the judge said at a bench conference he did not feel the allegations against Bugliosi were sufficient.

Manson's attorney requested the citation Monday, saying Bugliosi had cursed and threatened a defense witness. Bugliosi was said to have told a conference in the judge's chambers that he was irate because members of the Manson family tried to poison a prospective state witness with LSD. Bugliosi in a statement to newsmen has admitted cursing the defense witness, a manson family member, but said he had justification.

President Wood

A university president must be many things to many different people. He must be someone willing to listen and respond to students. He must be a stern disciplinarian to taxpayers and legislators. He must be a glib and convincing fund-raiser to alumni. He must be a fascist to Spire Agnew. And he must be an enthralling educator and academician to his colleagues.

It's impossible to be all these things at once. Therefore to survive as a president, you must be a great politician. And by the attrition rate of college presidents, they don't make very good politicians.

UMass has a vew president, with whom I joined others to interview. And, happily he probably won't be a total success as president.

For, Robert Wood is not much of a fascist and he seems like too nice a guy to be a stern disciplinarian.

Dr. Wood doesn't look like a president. In the movies (except for a Marx Brothers film in which Groucho was the prexy, a perhaps ideal choice) college presidents are usually the Gary Cooper type, tall, dark and handsome, a sheriff in academic robes.

Wood is a rather unassuming sort, who is more than willing to let you do the talking. He'll sit, rattling his Greek worry beads (a habit many leaders have assumed) and have quiet conversation. This may not seem very unique, but when you're a student, and you're talking to the president, conversation has a tendency to be rather one way.

Robert Wood, in essence, seems like an administrator genuinely concerned with the university and genuinely willing to listen to all concerned, students, faculty, administration, legislator, to try and improve them.

Wood's appointment last spring, was not met with hosannahs or even murmurs from students other than strong objection with the lack of student participation in the choice. Therefore, a lot of people had their minds made up not to like Robert Wood.

I was one of those. But I've met Robert Wood talked with him, and he seems like a good choice. (And again an arbitrary selection process is lucky). He is vowing to be a visible president, teaching a course on campus ((when was the last time a college president taught a course) and has succeeded rather well in overcoming my initial prejudice.

Of course, this could all change. He is an administrator, and students can never agree with administrators all the time, or even half the time.

But I'm willing to bet that Spiro Agnew won't like Robert Wood too much. And that could be President Wood's greatest compliment.

EVERYBODY GETS INTO THE ACT when they select a new president for the University of Oklahoma.

A page one story in The Oklahoma Daily lists 15 persons selected by the Board of Regents to find a new president. The search committee was chosen from slates of nominees submitted by the University Senate, Student Association, OU Association (alumni) and Employee Executive Council.

Breakdown of the committee is 8 faculty, 4 students, 2 alumni and one non-professional employee.

Sounds better than the Electoral College.

YES, VIRGINIA...There's a gal-type grad student at the University of Oklahoma who has discovered the truth of the adage, "ask and ye shall get."

Virginia Bailey is doing an MA thesis on the travels of Charles Kuralt, who finds off-beat stories to film and narrate for CBS-TV. She joined the four man caravan earlier this month for a three-week trip to collect material, including sound tapes and film footage for Oke City's KWTV.

How did she swing this dream assignment? "I just called him and asked him," she told The Oklahoma Daily.

The title of her thesis is "Charles Kuralt on the Road: A Study of the CBS Television Feature."

She's a journalism major at OU and assistant manager of the campus radio station.

FROSH A NO-NO...a blackened page one of Student Life, campus paper of Washington University at St. Louis, covered the first issue of the year.

The headline read, "WU Welcomes 1,000 Incoming Freshman."

The rest of the page showed a picture of the towers and arch into campus. Superimposed was the text of a permanent injunction of the local Circuit Court against persons "united in the common purpose of disrupting the orderly function" of the University.

Welcome, Frosh!

FAN MAIL...our first Carousel picked up this reaction from Dr. R.W. Gage, director of University Health Services.

"The staff of the Health Services will be glad to provide answers to any health questions which the Collegian or any other campus organization wishes to solicit. Our interpretation of 'health' is broad enough to encompass about any questions you can unearth and we have no objections to publication. As a matter of fact, this was tried a couple of years ago, and we ran out of questions.

"Incidentally, the restrictions on what can be discussed are not so close as you somewhat humorously suggest. Birth control information is legal in Massachusetts, now, and we can provide general information about abortions, etc."

Y'all hear this? CC will forward all "health" questions to HC. Who knows, we may discover that there are some Umies who don't know everything they need to know about sex 'n stuff.

Brother Rat

Seems like folks are upset with Eric. Brother Rat had a hard time Sunday. He's upset people before around here and he'll upset them again.

What is Eric, that he should get everyone so upset? Perhaps he simply hits too close to home.

To me, Eric is quite simply a down home cultural revolutionary who loves his fellow man, and would like to see people here liberated. No one is more peaceful than Eric. If you've ever looked closely, he's quite thin, and bishops from the Universal Life Church are notoriously gentle.

So why the hassle?

When people talk about Eric they frequently mention nudity. There is on the campus a saddening amount of Victorianism. Bob&Carol&Ted&Alice was about those poor folks the '50's generation who need Esalen to free their heads. Umies seem content to join them. We supposedly are young and free from such hangups. If God wanted you to run around naked, you would have been born that way. You'd think Eric never heard of original sin. Actually he has, so have the rest of us and that's where the problem started. Eric would have you love your bodies. Does this in Brother Rat seem annoying?

Eric wanted people to dance Sunday. Now concerts are the best part of life around here. You go to the Pond or the Cage, get high, and hear music which seems appropriate to 1970. How many othee things on this campus are up-to-date? But a concert can stay dead, like too many other things on this campus. Dancing, particularly tribal dancing, can bring people to life, make them glad to be here, to be alive. People who go to concerts are the hope of UMass. (The rest are sitting in the dormitory, doing, three years of this school has taught me, absolutely nothing, except on days when the magazines come.) We who have just had the Campus Center added to our landscape can ill afford to reject those would bring joy to our campus. Until the tribes come together, this place will remain a collection of buildings. You don't meet twenty thousand people in Psych 101 or in Mary Lyon. You can't enjoy UMass without people. Eric wants people to meet and enjoy other people, among other ways by dancing? Does this in Brother Rat seem annoying?

Sunday people were annoyed that Eric had the microphone. He was promised use of it by one of the groups beforehand. But even so, what is sacred about a microphone? One of the key differences between Woodstock and Altamont was the use of the microphone. At Altamont, it was used to intimidate, to threaten, to control. The results were disastrous. At Woodstock, it was used effectively, contributing to the formation of a real community. Everyone had access to the mike there, and the feelings were good as a consequence.

The Campus Pond is one of the few gathering places on this campus. It is there, on a day like Sunday, that you'll find those people who would be interested in having a community in which life was celebrated, not merely endured. Life affirmation is what cultural revolution is all about. A restatement of our humanity, a firmly states "no" to the encroaching jaws of totalitarian technocracy. Anyone who can help others live better should be allowed use of the mike. Eric can.

Eric wants us to love ourselves. Don't be mad. So did Jesus

To Off My Chest

Dear Off My Chest,

Yes, perhaps the young man couldn't cope with a complex situation. Mais qu'est-ce que c'est que cope? The human body can't cope with iron or shrapnel when it is wounded. The Chancellor can't cope with the fly in my bedroom. (Every night when I go to bed it lands on my arm or face. I'm flipping out.) To say the young man couldn't cope, then, does not, I think, dismiss him as you seem anxious to do. He is, cope or not cope, dead as a sideshow to the Southeasteastasian twentyfourthannualblack whiteandmostly yellowhumandecapitationrigor motizationdefoli ation and light show. This gives me an Excedrin headache, and another ache, somewhere inside. I, too, can think. Can you feel?

If I may answer for for Gil, it would seem to me that to do what Suzie did, she would have had to PREMEDITATE. I'm sure Suzie Williams gave much thought to her actions before they became a reality. And anyway, you do not know what Suzie herself thinks constitutes vandalism. What you do know is what Gil had to say. But if we take vandalism as a synonym for no-no, then it would seem that breaking and entering and destruction of property ought to be as illegal in Asia as in Rochester.

Parking Fines

A very interesting fact came to our attention yesterday when we learned that the mountains of money obtained from parking violations is not used to line the pockets of those conscientious, brown-shirted, young men of the Parking Authority.

What really happens to the money is that it is put into the Parking Fine Scholarship Trust Fund (really). Now this is no small matter since the funds, according to Robert Morrissey, Director of Finances was used to pay expenses for students in need.

There may be a couple thousand left in the fund. Morrissey said, and he cited the figure of eighty-four students who benefited from the Scholarship Fund.

So the next time you have to cough up a little bread (and in a few cases, a lot of bread) just remember that it will probably help a few of your fellow students.

And maybe you can talk the Bureau of Internal Revenue into letting you deduct your parking violation fees as charity. You can simply tell them that UMass is the college of your choice.

Peace and Successful Parking To You All.

Art Buchwald
The Naked Man

WASHINGTON - A new book will soon appear on the market which will cause a sensation in scientific circles. It is titled "The Naked Man" and it was written by Frederick the III, a chimpanzee attached to the Rockefeller Institute. Frederick III was involved in some enzyme experiments at the institute which took up only a few hours of his day. Because he was restless, the directors gave him a typewriter to play with. You can imagine their surprise when instead of just messing around, Frederick wrote a book.

Frederick's book, and this is the shocker, claims that all chimpanzees, monkeys and apes evolved from man. He says that man was the first primate before there were apes of any kind.

Frederick is not certain when man first appeared on earth, though he suspects it was at least 30 million years ago. As time went on and man went through many stages, he started to develop many apelike qualities until today it is easy for apes to identify with man and realize how much they have in common.

Many apes and chimpanzees are horrified to think they resemble man in any way and a chimpanzee named Treetop, with the National Institute of Mental Health, has written a paper denouncing FrederickIII's thesis. Treetop maintains that although in some respects men are looking more and more like apes, the ape could not have possible evolved from man. He has attacked Frederick III's research on the grounds that except for the few men he has come into contact with at the Rockefeller Institute the only other men he has observed are flower children in the park that he can see from his caged window.

Frederick says in his book that the similarities between apes and man are greater than one might think. Man today is behaving like apes used to behave before they were civilized. Man puts great emphasis on territory and seems to be willing to kill to protect his turf. As a lower form of ape, a man is unable to deal with any situation without screaming and shouting. Frederick cites examples where men have been placed in large apartment buildings for lengths of time and have gone berserk.

Treetop says that man's behavior is more similar to rats than to apes, and while man behaves irrationally in almost any situation and may resort to extreme measures when endangered, it does not follow that just because men beat their chests and growl that they belong in the ape family.

Frederick thinks that the primitive personality traits of man have been adapted by apes. Having studied man under laboratory conditions Frederick has discovered that the eating habits and sex life of homo sapiens follow a pattern similar to those practiced by modern apes. Survival seems to be the basic principle in man's jungle, and while apes do not resort to violence unless provoked, man has not yet evolved to a point in his development where he can tell why he behaves the way he does.

Treetop disagrees. He maintains that man has gone as far as he'll ever go, and hasn't changed from the day he was born. The instinct in men to destroy is so strong that it is slander to class them in any way with apes.

Frederick's response to that is to cite King Kong's destruction of the Empire State Building as something man might do.

Treetop says King Kong was an exception to the rule, and it's unfair to use one gorilla's behavior as a sample.

In any case, when the book comes out there will be a continuing controversy on it. One side will be the apes who would hate to acknowledge they have inherited any characteristics from man. On the other side will be those monkeys, chimpanzees and gorillas who will admit that some of their traits are possibly man-evolved, and will now try to deal with the problem in an ape-like way.

Campus Comment

Campus Center

In recent days a great deal of caustic criticism has been directed to our newly-conceived bastard child-the campus center. And one need only sit, or wander around, in its vast maze of vaulted chambers to become convinced that the pandora's box of unrestrained disapproval does not lack a certain credibility. The cool breezes that glide curiously around in its bland, frigid passageways serve as a constant, whispering reminder of the dwarfing impersonalization that one phase of modern architecture so nobly defends.

Certainly such monstrous structures are not new. They are being conceived, in the heat of many labor pains, along the whole length and breadth of America. And in your despair, many infamous architects acclaim it a success, a pure gleaming contribution to our lives.

And those architects justifiably do so. For our very own campus center stands as a symbol of a very real, very awful alternative for the human race, now, during the second industrial revolution.

The first industrial revolution was a phase in man's development when the machine, and the energy of the machine, began to penetrate the entire realm of human endeavor. And, while not discounting the machine's obvious contributions, it may leave a deep, ugly wound in the spirit of all mankind. It has, in truth, made man experience the marrow pangs of meaninglessness, hopelessness. It has made man experience the dull, vacant routine-ness of the machine.

And, horribly enough, the second phase of industrialization is a variation on the theme of the first - only magnified tenfold. If we are to follow mass industrialization, unchecked, to its ultimate conclusion, there will be nothing left for those who make it. Only sterility, only total isolation, only absolute despair, only a horrible, clanking living death...we, the megamachine.

The campus center is a symbol of the age of the megamachine. It says something about the impersonalized, dehumanized, inept, unfulfilling, uncompassionate, mechanized, non-human, mass-produced, grade-A certified world of ours. It says something real to the faltering, oppressed, unchallenged spirit of life within us.

What are we to do, then? What chance have we against the massive cumbersomeness of the campus center, and all it represents to us?

We could give it the traumatic burial that we gave the Banks of America. But no! We won't! We could instantaneously obliverate its ugly presence as we did to a research laboratory on the campus of the University of Wisconsin. But no! Something inside, something attune to the spirit, cries out that this is not the answer. It is the ultimate fury of those of us who have despaired, and we must bear the despair, and sob in our quiet moments.

Instead of killing the campus center and living only our despair of life, let us rather overwhelm it with the joy and the hope of life that is within us all. Let us throw back its tall, heavy imposing doors, and carry the sun into its black corners, for the sun can not enter there by itself. Let us decorate the halls with our own spirit of life. Let it be a reminder of a non-living alternative that we must categorically reject, and, through the power of our own free wills, transform it into a temple of joy, and understanding, and compassion, and brotherhood, and creativity. Every time we enter into its hideous belly, let us remember that we must try even harder to be kinder, gentler, softer, more alive.

And if we can do these things, perhaps, someday, the campus center will be a beautiful place to be...

Talking Fools

Dear Editor:

This letter is being sent in a very depressed and violent mood. For a year now there has been a campaign against the environmental ills and against the people who supposedly are the blame for this man-made death trap. In this area much concern and talk has been shown by college students. However, I guess the whole campaign was short-lived. By looking at Southwest this weekend and last, it is obvious very few people really care about our environment. A lot of people are mouthing off and doing little, which to me represents hypocrites. In Southwest you can find thousands of empty bottles and cans, piles of paper and trash, paths of garbage and anything else you can think of can be seen or stepped on in Southwest. I suppose now many people are agreeing, like we always do, but I am sure some are also laughing and taking credit for their contribution - CONGRADULATION FOOLS! - your boastful laugh will probably turn into regretful tears because of your stupidity. Lecturing about the environmental crisis would not do any good now, enough has been said already to be able to comprehend the seriousness of this problem. But let me say that if what I have seen is indicative of our responsible, concerned population, which we claim to be, we are doomed. We were fast to blame the generations before us for the environmental crisis but it looks as if generations after ours will be blaming us for the same ignorance - if we make it to these generations!

Sunday . . . Sunday . . .

To the Editor:

Regarding Peter Bradlee's letter to the editor of Tuesday, September 22, there should be two corrections. The first is that Eric "The Rat" did not initiate the event. All planning and arrangements were handled by John Donahue. Therefore, in taking the microphone Eric was intruding on someone else's thing, not running or doing his own.

Secondly, Eric was not shouted down by anyone. After he threatened to throw mud on the crowd which plainly wasn't interested in moving, the more legitimate sponsors of the event gave the crowd an alternative, to stay where they were.

As far as Sunday's concert is concerned, nudity seems neither here nor there. At least one person who really wanted to take off his clothes did. Those who didn't take them off didn't. Eric in shouting for everyone to be free shouldn't expect everyone to be Eric.

To the editor:

In response to the article by David Williams about the concert on Sunday, I, as one of the organizers, would like to tell my version.

The people occupying the "travel area" did not move because the sound system had a limited audio range. The people had a choice whether to be in the best position to hear the music or to see Eric. They chose the music. Most of the people that did move did so under stress of Eric's threat to "go down to the pond with a barrel and get some mud."

I personally have seen Eric wreck two free concerts, with red berry juice a year ago and with mud this summer. Eric had nothing to do with organizing the concert Sunday, and was allowed to speak uninterrupted following Chammish's set. To correct two obvious omissions of Mr. Williams, I would like to make clear that (1) the mob action that was mentioned was people restraining the man Eric hit with a stick and (2) the group which played after the incident and apparently went unnoticed was Clean Living, a fine acoustical group.

Exchange Program Works

By LINDA SELICK
Staff Reporter

Why wait for summer to travel? Thirty American exchange students plan to explore New England during their college year.

The Domestic Exchange Program rejects the notion that school vacations and joining the Navy are the only ways "to see the world."

Students from the Universities of Oregon, Alabama, New Mexico, Hawaii, Montana and Illinois State have come to the University of Massachusetts for one or two semesters while paying the same tuition as they would to their state school. Approximately thirty UMass students are at the other universities.

Reasons for students coming to UMass have been as varied as reactions to the new environment.

"I've lived in Oregon all my life and I really was attracted to Massachusetts because of the historical and cultural aspects," remarked Joyce Jensen, from Eugene, Oregon.

Other students from Oregon acknowledged that their stereotypes of "cold, strict, New England Puritans," had been gratefully shattered. "I was really scared that people would be hard to get to know here," said Jeanne Cernazanu of John Day, Oregon, "but I was so impressed with everyone's friendliness, that I had to write home about it immediately."

Differences in expressions have caused some laughs but no difficulties. Most of the exchange students were not familiar with the term "grinder" or "frappe". A student from the University of Alabama, lamenting her loss of grits, was pleased to discover that Maltex is the Northern equivalent.

Cathy Hee and Cheryl Wong, both from Honolulu, couldn't believe they were really coming to Massachusetts "until we got our bills." The change in the weather has been exhilarating for them. Cheryl confessed that the early morning New England mists were confusing to her. "I looked out my window and saw the mist and thought it must be very cold, so I put on all my warm clothes only to discover that it was hot outside," she said laughing.

University Of Montana student, Barbara Hamm, is amazed by the pace of living here. "Everything moves so much faster, even students walk faster," she observed.

Social activities and New England sightseeing trips are being tentatively planned by Crampton Dorm, under the direction of Mrs. Leavitt, for the Domestic Exchange Students.

Homecoming Schedule Released, Concert Dates To Be Announced

(EDITORS NOTE: The following is a corrected version of a statement made by the 1970 Homecoming Committee)

The 1970 Homecoming will be bigger than it has ever been before. This year Homecoming will be two weekends - the first primarilly for the alumni; the second primarily for the students. The two-weekend split was necessitated by the possibility of the Princeton Plan. This Plan was the proposal of cancelling classes the week prior to elections so students could campaign for their preferred candidates. This plan would inevitably lead to an exodus from campus, disabling a large number of students from attending Homecoming. Although by the end of August, the UMass. Board of Trustees had voted the Princeton Plan out, it was apparent people would leave school to campaign that weekend anyway--Homecoming was postponed until our University of New Hampshire home game, November 13-15. Because some of the alumni activities already planned couldn't be changed, they are still scheduled for October 23-25.

Among the events presently scheduled for the alumni-oriented weekend are a campus bonfire, ralley, and float parade on Friday, October 23. Saturday's festivities will include a tailgate picnic before the University of Connecticut game, special half-time game show, presentation of the five Homecoming Queen finalists, and special alumni evening programs.

Be prepared for an onslaught of talent for November 13, 14, and 15. Tentative plans include two concerts and the crowning of the Homecoming Queen for Friday night, another tail-gate picnic before Saturday's game, two more concerts, and the presentation of the Homecoming Queen and her Court on Saturday night. An innovative play on Sunday will be the 1970 Homecoming finale.

Pres. Wood Talks On Various Topics

istration at that time believed that every individual could be self-sufficient in the academic surroundings without help and that proved disasterously wrong.

MDC: You were talking about the university system. Do you foresee in the near future a sort of intellectual and financial competition between the Amherst campus and the growing Boston campus?

Dr. Wood: I'll answer in two ways. One, in words, second in numbers. I'm partial to both when I have both. A rising tide floats all boats if the waves don't prove too choppy. At this point clearly the capacity for allocating among the campuses is better when your budget has gone up and when it's in a stable state. I expect that kind of condition to continue. This acknowledges in the numbers side there are some hard times ahead. The Commonwealth is going to face a deficit in its financing total revenue-wise from 160 million to 200 million dollars in the next year. But people who look at revenues and people who look at taxes ought at the same time look at income and the key fact about this country between 1970 and 1980 is that we will move from a gross national produce of 900 billion dollars to 1.5 trillion dollars and we'll move at a time, state, and local taxes of the last ten years have not substantially increased and the federal has decreased. So the country and the commonwealth have the kind of funds if the effective action goes on to afford quality education of a public nature.

The other point to say is that one of the appeals of this university system is that we're not a cookie cutter set of campuses. Every time we have a simple increase it doesn't replecate itself in each of the three campuses. Amherst is the established campus with a strong core of graduate instruction, a strong residential tradition, a state-wide image that means it can develop along a particular path. Given intellectual action, Boston ought to respond to a quite different environment; in the fact that we're not having dormitories in the Columbia Point site, the fact we'll have interchange with community means that you'll have a different experience there. You can foresee from Worcester's medical school a whole set of resources, and instructions at various levels around the issue of health and environment. And you can foresee an institution finding out how to build a healthy nation. So there won't be the direct tradeoffs that beleaguer other systems. And I don't look forward to a competitive atmosphere of a dog-eat dog nature. If I did I'd realize this would be the type of job no one would endure.

WFCR: Well, the group that will be making decisions that will be effecting most of these campuses is the board of trustees. A frequent complaint on campus is that the board is not receptive to student needs or desires because they are very rarely here, very rarely in contact with students, and there is not much communication and its almost as if this governing body is completely seperate from that which they are governing. I'd like to hear your opinion of the nature of the relationship between the board now and the campuses.

DR. WOOD: There's Mills Law which says where one stands is where one sits, and you can understand the different perspective between students and trustees. Clearly, there is the view from the student's point of view that this is the removed, aloof, difficult to get along with, group of men and women who meet once a month and hurl down bolts from high and decrees. Actually there are people who serve without real compensation in a complicated job for their own reasons of personal satisfaction and who deal with a complicated set of facts in a traditional structure. I think the problems you outlined on this point were recognized in the estblishment of the university system-wide president's office and with the fact that plans developed from the Amherst office, the trustees intend that the president's office first, be off-campus, secondly, be fulltime and thirdly have some capability of its own to be able to do a little bit better in these exchanges of views. It will also allow the trustees to focus on the major policy issues that have been on campus and should get a calibration of priorities or help in this.

But you have to realize the tension between the body with the official responsibility and the governor and general ocurt and the customers and clients that is a general way of life.

WFCR: Do you think the clients and customers perhaps should be rubbing shoulders more frequently with the administrators and that the trustees should be here more often?

DR. WOOD: They come more often than you'd think. The question here is how to get the best communication. On a part-time board and you'd look at the arithmetic, you're not going to find a friendly trustee breaking donuts and coffee with you every other week on a personal basis. What I think is enormously important is for our people who are receiving the education, whose lives are bound in it, who have the sense that in these 4 years whether the university is alert whether it can teach, whether its flexible., they have a sense of responsiveness to it. I've never been one to believe that the small town, the fraternity, the small block, liberated people or gave them the opportunity to develop. I've always been committed to the city, the large organization, when its structured. So the real key here is to have an effective flow on important matters rather than familiarity and that is what I hope we can go forward on in the next few months.

MDC: Last year was the first year of a student member sitting on the board and it is the opinion of many students that increased student members should sit on the board to give students some identification with the board and help them accept more decisions. One suggestion has been to have a student from all three campuses sit on the board and faculty members.

DR. WOOD: This is something we have to look at, something that is obviously an appropriate question. You balence this off by the size of the board, what you can effectively work with when it is a policy-making board and the time that can be committed. And you balence this off in other ways of participation. The key questions to ask in my judgement in an academic community is whether you are putting together the particular capabilities of contribution to the particular needs of the people. The key question to ask is not whether students should participate, or faculty or administrators should have the final say. It is in what aspect of academic life people get involved. The key point of the organization of the president's office which we are now working on is to try and to put in campus hands those problems of campus life best handled there and the president's office make some decisions within policy guidelines that give some kind of sequence of operation so that our slippages don't look so bad at times and reserve for the trustees the issue of the identity and relationship of the public university to the policy. That way I think you're going to have a level of increased participation, vis-a-vis students, up and down the line, but it can also include the trustees.

WMUA: We touched on this briefly, but it bears repeating. In his convocation address, Chancellor Tippo started the address with a list of legislative proposals and passed measures across the country, notable in California of actions cutting budgets, cutting faculty salaries and tenure in universities who experienced difficulties last spring or earlier. The Chancellor seemed to indicate such a thing could happen in this state although they have not happened yet. You will be much closer to the legislature in Boston. What are the chances in this state for legislator reaction to any campus difficulty whether on this campus or any campus in the state to cut budgets, to make recommendations about salary and tenure?

DR. WOOD: There is no doubt in my mind that its not just the legislature and I might say never equate geographical location with legislative contact. There is always this tendency in Western Mass. that if you go to Boston you disappear into some malestrum of influence you'll see me on this campus.

There is no question that a generation of middle age, middle weight or overweight hardworking and concerned Americans who regarded education as something the lucky ones got, that was a privilege not a right, and who are represented in the personalities of legislators and congressman across the country, find disturbance and agitation on the campus difficult to comprehend. They found it difficult to comprehend when it spoke to student and administrative problems of education. And they find it difficult to comprehend when it turns to questions of priorities, politics, the war, what have you. And its clear that the need for the legislator and the citizen to recognize the anguish felt on the campus so strongly and so frequently has to be counterbalanced on campus to understand these forces.

When you make the point as so many people make today that the university has a role and a responsibility to society and it isn't an ivory tower that it can't remain aloof, must have a point of involvement, you acknowledge a reciprocal symbolic relationship which is that the university therefore will receive pressures and influences from the offiaials and polity at large. The posture that Chancellor Tippo was expressing as I understand it and the posture I express, is that we should be very sensitive in the years ahead about the cost and benefits and the character of expression and as I said when I took on this job officially last May, this includes a concern with the views of the people who are the ultimate supporters.

I quoted then and I believe now that John Kennedy said "Civility is no sign of weakness" and "sincerity is always subject to proof" and I believe that we must be more effective in interpreting, changing, reforming, improving, the American university when we begin to make these expressions to the legislature in those ways then we will if we exercise the tactics of the dramatise, the flamboyant efforts of the two year old whose mother read too much Doctor Spock.

WFCR: Do you think part of your job is to improve the understanding between the university community and the legislators, saying the outside community, so that perhaps one can understand the other better. I think there are too many people in the state who think this is a place that students should come, do what they are told, keep their mouths shut, and get out in four years.

DR. WOOD: Sure. That I think is the original question that made me accept this job. This is one thing that has to be worked at and a thing I enjoy working on. Three years in Washington with the U.S. Congress, two years in the Florida legislature, four or five years in studying politics and working for and with people here in the Commonwealth make me think that on both sides you deal with human beings and there is always hope. I think it is very important that the true concerns of the campus community get correctly stated and at the same time people understand that out there, there is a whole other would that must be listened to as well.

MDC: To keep this relationship on a tolerable level there must be campus peace. And this is impossible with the war, with draft, with remnants of the student strike of last spring, its demands still in evidence. Is it your feeling that as long as there is a war and draft, campus calm is unobtainable?

DR. WOOD: Let me put it this way. The war and the draft are two major factors that immediately contribute to unrest. But, take away the war and the draft, you have not removed some of the major sources of anguish on campuses. You haven't dealt with the problem of size and community, haven't dealt then with the problem of the length of education to the graduate student and the problems of identity that arise. The wife that says to her parents she is marrying a post-doctoral fellow. What kind of identity is that? That will be still there. The other characteristics of the problems of a generation of your size is that the problems and considerations are almost unique. The fact that you've lived under the existance of nuclear weaponery, is an unique factor. The fact that you lack an experience that is common, in the sense of the depression, in the sense of World War II which were unifying and common experiences for my generation. The fact that you have grappled with the use of leisure time and effective use of options and choices are problems that are going to continue, to change.

CAS Requirements Explained

On September 9, the Collegian reported on the recent changes in the University Core and College of Arts and Sciences requirements. It was specifically noted that each student in the University had three sets of requirements to meet, including those of (1) the University (University Core), (2)the College, School or Division, and (3) those of his Major department.

On Registration Day, each student received in his registration packet a list of revised University Core requirements. One item on that list has caused some confusion among the College of Arts and Sciences students. Although the University Core requirement in the Math-Sciences area is established as three "E" designated courses, the College of Arts and Sciences continues to require four (4) "E" designated courses.

Therefore, students in the College of Arts and Sciences should be advised that the Math-Science requirements have not been changed, not is there any suggestion that any change in this category is anticipated in the near future. Those who may have mistakenly dropped an "E" course may wish to add it again on this the last add day.

VW Cuts Price, Stays On Top

EDGARTOWN, Mass. (AP) -The Volkswagen, Germany's "people's car" that has retailed its beetle shape over the years may be more popular than ever with Americans in 1971. Its basic price has been reduced $59.

In addition, Volkswagen announced here Monday night that its 1971 line will include a Super Beetle, three inches longer than the 1970 model and THE "most dramatic change yet" in the company's 26 years of production, according to a VW spokesman.

The traditional VW will sell for $1780 in 1971, $59 less than the basic price for the 1970 model, and is "by no measure of description a stripped model," the spokesman said Tuesday.

To reduce the price, the company removed some of the trim items, including the rear window defroster, the lock on the glove compartment, the door pocket and some of the chrome.

Improvements include a 60 h.p. engine, 3 h.p. more than the 1970 models, and a flow through ventilation system.

The Super Beetle, which has almost twice the trunk space of the traditional model, will sell for $1899. It offers for the additional $119 more maneuverability and a smoother ride due to a new coil spring front suspension, and a forced air ventillation system.

The price of the Super Beetle compares with Detroit's new minicars, Chevrolet's Vega, selling at $2,091, including dealer preparation charges, and Ford's Pinto selling at $1,919.

Stuart Perkins, president of Volkswagen of American, Inc., said he expects Ford and Chevrolet to sell about 500,000 mini cars each, but that U.S. sales of VWs will be about 600,000 in 1971, surpassing 1970's projected total of 560,000.

The company said it also has made improvements on its bus like wagon, the Karmann Ghia Coupe and the squareback and fastback sedans. New features include power assisted brakes on the wagon, an anti skid device, self adjusting disc brakes on the front end, thicker rear brake linings, improved ventilation and automatic cut-off of the headlights when the ignition is turned off.

A company spokesman asserted that the lower price on the standard model VW was not caused by the competition from Detroit.

"We have always been an economy car company," he said. "This is an effort to stay in that area."

CC Garage to Open

By MIKE McWILLIAMS
Staff Reporter

The Campus Center garage should open early next week, if the final pieces of work are completed as scheduled. The opening of the structure, located near the physical plant, has been delayed on account of a missing piece of important equipment and slow completion of the acess roads.

The four million dollar structure which has spaces for 998 cars will be open to all students and faculty of the university as well as visitors to the Center. The rates for a space will be 25¢ for the first hour, 15¢ for each additional hour with a maximum of $2.00 for a 24 hour period. For those who intend using the facility on a daily basis or for long periods of time there will be a yearly rate of $185 a year for students and $215 for faculty and staff members. In addition a monthly rate will be offered. There are more than two-hundred of these reserved spaces available starting approximately two weeks after the opening of the rest of the garage. A specific space will be assigned to each car using the garage on this basis. However, any number of carowners may purchase a single space and share it.

So if all goes well the parking dilemna on campus could be relieved somewhat by next week.

CEQ Director Forms Plans For Campus This Semester

The environmental issue hasn't even peaked yet, let alone passed into irrelevance! We have only begun to feel the first ripples of the impending environmental crisis, and as slow and foot-dragging as our government and society is, things will probably get a lot worse before enough people wake up to turn the tide.

Environmental activist Dr. Robert Rienow, has said that the 'great age of Conservation' as he calls it is just a lot of bally-hoo--lots of people making lots of noise with no real commitment to the kind of changes in their own lifestyle that ultimately have to come about if we are to save the environment.

For these reasons, CEQ is back again this year with more ambitious programs than ever before. They will be offered at the CEQ kickoff convention tomorrow night at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

The organization accomplished a number of worthwhile things last semester including lecturers, a hearing on the nuclear threat to Massachusetts (held in the Student Union with the Special State Legislative Committee on the Environment), the "Sunderland Sewage Celebration," Earth Day program and numerous research and action projects. The record wasn't too bad considering that CEQ only got started late lest winter. But for the most part, the group could hardly get out of its own way and was plagued with organizational, manpower and financial problems.

This year the picture looks considerably brighter. CEQ has what seems to be an adequate budget from the Student Senate, grudgingly passed by the Board of Trustees, and a streamlined organization that does away with standing committees and promotes only action-oriented-projects.

Many students are highly motivated to work in the environment movement, but the problem is how to get them involved without bogging them down with committee meetings, or boring them with extensive paperwork or research before they get to the really productive action. The other side of that coin is how do you get action-oriented students to do their homework before they go crusading off to tackle the polluting establishment?

Hopefully CEQ has found solutions to these problems. Where homework is needed, nine times out of ten someone has already done it. By starting a project off with a workshop, activists can be thoroughly briefed by experts on the problem they want to tackle, and can plan a well-grounded project that can really succeed.

By defining "goals for a project" instead of "areas of concern for a committee," the problem of boring meetings dealing with "what can we do?" is largely circumvented.

Where there are disagreements about tactics and positions, those environmentalists who disagree with a direction CEQ has taken may join the group and work to change that direction. Every member of the University Community is a member of CEQ. All one need do is participate. Our only goal is a quality environment.

School of Education Slates Spanish Night

The Media Center of the school of Education is opening its doors to several hundred Puerto Rican migrant workers for a cultural evening, Friday, at 8:00 P.M. in the School of Education Auditorium.

JULIO TORRES, Puerto Rican actor, and producer of the Spanish language educational program for migrant workers "Que tal amigos? will read a series of short stories in Spanish from the book Terrazo, written by the acclaimed Puerto Rican writer Abelardo Diaz Alfaro. Terrazo was published in 1947 and is in its tenth edition.

It has been translated into English, French, Italian, Polish, Russian and Czech. These stories appear in many modern anthologies.

Renowned Spanish scholars like Juan Ramon Jimenez, Nobel Prize winner in literature, have lauded Diaz Alfaro's work. Inspired by many years as a social worker in the rural areas of Puerto Rico, Diaz Alfaro narrates the struggle and despair of the humble Puerto Rican 'campesino.'

The series of shot stories depicts the 40-year condition which caused the exodus of thousands of Puerto Rican migrant workers to the United States. The readings will be accompanied by live folk music by Puerto Rican migrant workers.

Julio Torres is a talented young actor who has appeared in over 100 theatrical works and recitals. 12 movies, and numerous television programs in Puerto Rico. He has been a movie script writer since 1967. His program "Que tal amigos?' is very popular among the Spanish-speaking listeners.

It contains music, poetry, news and information.

Note of Urgency

Rail Strike Action Taken

WASHINGTON (AP) - The government sounded a note of urgency Tuesday in announcing stand by emergency measures to transport freight and passengers by truck and bus in the face of this year's fourth threat of a nationwide railroad shut down.

The emergency provisions were announced by Interstate Commerce Commission Chairman George M. Stafford while Labor Department officials sought to head off the Wednesday night strike deadline.

"If it keeps on, we may have to be faced with a nationwide railroad strike," said a weary Assistant Secretary of Labor W.J Usery, the administration's key man in the recent spate of rail crises.

The latest strike threat is by the AFL CIO United Transportation Union in the long dispute over the elimination of some 20,000 locomotive firemen's jobs that the union is demanding be restored.

President Bixon already has used up all delaying measures under the Railway Labor Act in this dispute and only Congress could order a halt to a strike through a special law, which it has done in three previous cases in recent years.

Two previous nationwide rail tie ups were halted earlier this year after brief walkouts on several railroads.

Congress imposed a wage settlement in one dispute involving four shopcraft unions. Nixon last Friday invoked the Railway Labor Act to delay for 60 days another strike threat by the United Transportation Union and three other unions in a wage dispute, delaying that deadline to Nov. 16.

Nixon earlier this year used up the 60 day legal provision in the firemen's dispute and the union and industry then voluntarily negotiated for a while longer.

The White House had expressed hope the longstanding dispute could be settled by combining the firemen's job with that of head brake man and urged continued negotiations. But the union two weeks ago renewed its option to strike at one minute after Wednesday midnight-12:01 a.m. Thursday.

The approximately 20,000 fire men's jobs on diesel yard and freight locomotives were eliminated under a federal arbitration board set up by a special act of Congress in 1963. Some 20,000 firemen remain on passenger trains and some freights.

The union contends that it has the right to demand the jobs be restored because the 1963 law expired after two years.

The railroads call the union's demand "featherbedding," contending firemen haven't been needed since diesel engines replaced steam locomotives. The union's basic argument is that a fireman is needed in each diesel cab for safety reasons as a look out on the side opposite from the engineer.

"A flexible program will be established by which motor carriers may institute new or additional service in the interest of the public and the national defense, a general tempoary order will be issued to permit carriers to obtain authority, for not more than 30 days, to transport passengers or property," he said.

"Rates offered under provisions of the order would have to be no lower than those of existing rail, water or motor carriers in the territory in which operations were to be authorized," he said.

Agnew Assails Johnson For His "Puddle Head"

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) - Vice President Spiro T. Agnew assailed Tuesday "the puddle headed philosophy" of Federal Communications Commissioner Nicholas Johnson.

Agnew launched the second swing of his campaign to aid Republican congressional candidates with a speech in behalf of Rep. William O. Cowger of Louisville. He said he believed the political pendulum is swinging against the "political Hamlets" who dominate the Senate. But most of Agnew's text was devoted to an attack on Johnson, the FCC member who had challenged Agnew's Las Vegas, Nev., speech on the impact of the "drug culture" on American popular music.

Johnson, in a statement issued in Washington, implied that Agnew should be critical of cigarette advertising on television but said it is obvious that he wouldn't do that while raising funds in tobacco country. And he accused the vice president of preaching hypocrisy and repression.

Johnson's contention that increasing drug use is related to unjust forces in American society, Agnew charged, "is the sort of fatuous nonsense being perpetrated on the American public by the superpermissive officials that have been allowed to take so much control of our government."

And, he linked that viewpoint with the "political Hamlets"- presumably Democrats-controlling the Senate.

by SYDNEY OMARR

Women born under Aries often display a tendency to interrupt when others are talking. On the positive side, this can be put in category of enthusiasm. On negative side, it is very irritating. These women are dynamic, strong-willed, natural innovators and capable of fighting for principles. Some famous women born under Aries include Gloria Swanson, Bette Davis and Joan Crawford.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Concentrate on basics. Get ideas across by illustrating them. Factual material serves as ally. Meandering statements, pompous reflections cause others to lose confidence.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Emphasis on short journey, special messages from relatives. Straighten out domestic problems. Do so via diplomacy. Means make some intelligent concessions.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Protect valuables. Some would like to part you from possessions. Be sure you get money's worth. Be discriminating. Review earning potential — and savings program.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22) Strive to push through unique program. You will get backing from those in authority. But you must take first step. If you wait too long opportunity will evaporate.

LEO (July 23 - Aug 22): You may feel somewhat confined. Key is to look beyond the immediate. Be aware of how far you can go — if you apply yourself. Co-operate in charitable enterprises.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Welcome opportunity to meet people. Accent on social activity. Go places. Make contacts which will be valuable in the near future. Express opinions. Highlight sincerity and humor.

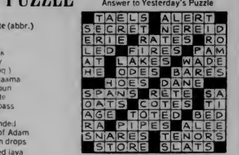
LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): You may receive offer which entails greater responsibility but opportunities also multiply. Deal with one who can make room for you at top.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Fine for writing, creating advertising program. In personal area, develop philosophy which fits current situation or dilemma. Strive for greater versatility.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Take special care in handling financial arrangements. One close to you should be made aware of bank balance, budget requirements. Be fair but firm.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): If single, question of marriage could arise. If married, a renewed understanding of matter is indicated. Best to play low key. Many around you are witrassentive.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Obtain hint from Capricorn message. Improve relatives with associates, coworkers. Remember recent health resolutions. Avoid extremes. You gain through moderate approach.



PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Accent on children, schools, affairs of heart and investments. Aura of adventure prevails. Enthusiastic approach helps shake off recent emotional setback.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you seldom stay in one place for too long a period. You are mentally and physically active. Opposite sex finds you attractive. You seem capable of loving more than one person at a time. This often leads to complications. In October, this situation could repeat.

O'Neil Defensive Player of Week

Yan-Con, ECAC Honor Redman Back

UMass safety John O'Neil, UConn halfback Vin Clements and Vermont defensive halfback Tom Nieradka have been chosen as the top defensive, offensive and sophomore players in the Yankee Conference for their performances last Saturday.

O'Neil also earned a selection to the first Division I college football team selected by the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference. Also on that squad were Clements, Boston College's Fred Willis, a running back, and offensive guard Darryl Hill of Boston University.

O'Neil, a 6'2-190 junior, intercepted two passes and averaged 39 yards on punts as UMass opened its Conference season with a 28-0 decision over Maine.

Clements, a 6'3-215 senior, gained 101 yards on 20 carries, caught four passes for 94 yards, scored four touchdowns and averaged 39 yards with seven punts to lead UConn to a 47-0 win over Vermont. Neiradka, a 5'10-160 soph, intercepted one pass and made seven tackles for a fine defensive performance despite the Catamount defeat at UConn.

Other nominations were: Offense-tight end John Huleck (UMASS), fullback Bob Marchildon (Maine) and end Vic Zollo (Vermont); defense-tackle Steve Naccara (Maine), tackle Gerry Elliot (Vermont) and linebacker John Salek (UConn); sophomores-defensive back Brian Herosian (UConn), linebacker Tim Edwards (UMass) and split end Dave Paul (Maine).

Dartmouth's Blackman Top-Notch Coach

Looks for 100th Career Victory With Indians

By FRED WYSHAK
Staff Reporter

This Saturday the Redmen and Vic Fusia's braintrust meet the Dartmouth Indians and their leader Bob Blackman, one of the most successful college coaches in the country, at Hanover, N.H.

Blackman ranks seventh among active major college coaches with 100 or more victories. In his twenty-one year career, he has amassed 141 victories, 49 losses and eight ties for an impressive .732 percentage.

Now in his sixteenth season at the helm of the Indians, Blackman has led Dartmouth eleven to a very respectable .715 percentage--winning 95, losing 37 and tying three and it is quite probable that this season will see his one hundredth career victory as head coach at Dartmouth.

His squads have shared or won the Ivy League title six times and have seen two undefeated seasons-1962 and 1965. Last year, the Indians, boasting an 8-1 record, won a share of the crown along with Princeton and Yale, and Blackman was chosen N.C.A.A. District One Coach-of-the-Year by the American Football Coaches Association.

In Ivy play, Blackman has directed the Indians to a 72-24-2 record for the best winning percentage in the league--.745. His '69 squad set the Ivy League rushing mark at 298.5 yards rushing per game and a single game rushing record of 509 yards, against Pennnsylvania. They also tied the Ivy record for total offense in one game--614 yards , also against Pennsylvania.

The squad ranked among national leaders in six of nine statistical categories, and set Dartmouth records in total offense (3,728 yards) and yards gained rushing (2,654). The offense scored at a rate of 31.3 points a game with the defense allowing only 11.

The success of the Dartmouth Green is attributed to the complicated offenses and defenses Blackman utilizes. His reputation as a complete coach is widespread.

Blackman coached at Pasadena City College for four years (34-6-3) and at the University of Denver (12-6-2) for two years before coming to Dartmouth.

Born in DeSota, Iowa, he played high school football in Long Beach, California, and played freshman football for Southern California. before being stricken with polio which ended his playing career. It is needless to say that neither Blackman's love for football nor his association with the game have been hindered by this occurence.

HE EVEN GOT THE BEST OF LANDRY – Bob Blackman has never lost to a UMass football team, winning this tilt against Greg Landry (11) and the Redmen in 1967, 28-10. He previously took the best of UMass in '66, 17-7, and in '62, 27-3. In fact the Indians own an 10-0-1 record in games between the two squads. (MDC photo by Paul Cihocki)

Sarge Hits The Trail

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

Late yesterday afternoon, arriving in the hot, sultry weather, Governor Francis Sargent delivered to the Mt. Holyoke College audience what promises to be his standard "off the cuff" campaign speech.

Sargent's greatest emphasis was placed on the needs of State government, which, he said, "will be where the action is in the 70's". Sargent also spoke at some length on the legislative accomplishments of his administration, including the auto insurance reform bill and a $320 million bond which will begin work on cleaning up the Connecticut River.

After arriving 30 minutes late from the Westfield airport, Sargent began his address lightly by quipping that "I'm sorry I'm late and I'm sorry its hot." Sargent then sought audience approval for relieving himself of his suit jacket.

The tone of his voice then changed markedly as he gave a brief outline of his feelings on the state of the world and the nation. "Being here...It's difficult to realize how many problems we have... how concerned we are", said Sargent. He ridiculed the extremists on both sides of the political spectrum and argued "Change?, Dissent? Yes! Disorder? No!" Later during the question-answer period, Sargent said that he is very cautious in making decisions about dispatching State Police or National Guard troops to campus or other trouble spots.

Turning to his political accomplishments, Sargent told the audience of the reform being brought about in the Massachusetts State Government, the reduction of the "more than 300" state agencies and divisions which report only to the governor, and establishment in its place of a nine man governor's cabinet. This measure would become effective next April.

Sargent urged the students present to join state government to "make it better." He said "at the present time I don't believe there is anyone here at Mt. Holyoke College who would want to go to work for the state government." He cited as the prime cause for this failure of State government to attract "bright, young college students" the "difficulties involved in becoming part of the state government."

Sargent continued by promising reform in the state employment red tape. "I think that in the 70's state government has to become more effective," said Sargent.

Environment was mentioned briefly, first by Mrs. Schuck of the Mt. Holyoke Political Science department in her introduction to the governor, and then by Sargent who credited the advances in pollution control to the "young people" and said that "20 years ago nobody cared about the environment."

The recent "insurance reform bill" passed by the legislature, was praised by Sargent who termed it "a better system than we had." The most controversial section of the bill, the "no-fault insurance" clause, was strongly supported by the governor. Yesterday it was alleged by the Democratic candidate for Lt. Governor, Dukakis, that Sargent "had stolen" the insurance bill credit from the Democrats, who were the major backers of the bill. Sargent did not mention the democrats once during his entire speech.

After Sargent finished his remarks, the floor was opened for questions. Among them was an inquiry as to whether he would welcome the campaign support of Vice President Spiro Agnew. The governor hesitated momentarily and then with typical political candor answered, "Well, I haven't invited him to come."

Governor Sargeant, in a campaign speech at Mt. Holyoke College, cites achievements of his administration, especially auto insurance reform and pollution control. He condemned political extremism and stated that he would be very cautious about sending National Guard troops on campus. (MDC photo by Joe Casey)

C.A.F. Seeks To Create Communiversity

By BETH GOODELL
Staff Reporter

Members of the Community Action Foundation (CAF) met last night in the Student Union for a briefing on the organization's present programs and goals and its actions during the past summer. CAF is an umbrella organization which coordinates the programs of five subdivisions. These autonomous groups, Action Lab, Committee on Poverty, Racial Seminars, National Educational Service, and A Better Chance are each oriented toward specific problems in the community outside the university and toward making better use of resources available on campus.

Last year Action Lab earned $7000 on this campus and in Springfield to use in their institution of a Street Academy. In the Street Academies in Springfield, educational programs are set up for the education of high school dropouts to help get them "off the streets." A pilot program was started this summer which was judged as being of mixed success. It was an eight-week program involving 16 students who were reportedly highly motivated at the end of the session. However, the program had not been developed fully enough to help the students academically. They were instilled with the desire to go on to college but received little scholastic preparation.

Action Lab now is working at the establishment of a sort of Preparatory School which would be highly structured as a small learning group in which intensive work would be done in the development of skills necessary for university survival. Twenty-four students would receive an apprenticeship in technical skills, and instruction in academics and testability. Tutors will work individually with students in specific areas of instruction especially needed for college preparation.

Other plans of Action Lab call for possible work in the rehabilitation of prisoners and in early child-development. Hampshire County Jail has already agreed to allow students to work inside the jail in educational and retraining programs. Action Lab is also considering work in bilingual learning, where Puerto Rican and Englishspeaking children could work together in the early learning of verbal skills. No specific plans have been made in either of these areas yet.

The Committee On Poverty is doing extensive research this semester into the complex network of issues included in the problem of poverty. They have already organized dorm-education programs on poverty and have published reports on such subjects as malnutrition. They are now doing research on conditions in Western Mass., examining them in a social, political, and economical context before any programs are implemented.

The group working on Racial Seminars recognizes two types of racism--institutional and individual. Channels for dialogue will be established so that the issues of racism can be examined and analyzed to lead to better understanding between the races.

The National Educational Service is the subdivision of CAF responsible for the tutoring which has been done in Springfield in past years and is continuing this semester. Orientation meetings have already been run this fall and work is progressing on pamphlets and other educational materials which will be used by tutors. Two Student Senate buses have been provided for transportation, which should make it more dependable this year than last.

A Better Chance will not be in action until the second semester. Plans call for the establishment of sensitivity groups on campus to deal with racial problems.

Together, these five components of the Community Action Foundation are working toward an ideal expressed by the word "communiversity." This concept calls for the opening of channels of communication between the university and the community. It is projected that a system can be developed in which students receive credit for their work in the "communiversity" programs. Currently, CAF is very short on manpower, especially at the higher and more involved levels of planning and organization. Hopefully, the installation of credit will allow more students to become more involved. At present, though, there is a great shortage of truly committed workers, so that all progress is slow.

Kick-Off Tonight

CEQ Goes Down The River

With the reappearance of psychedelic ten-foot monsters in the Campus Center and the Student Union, the Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ) announces a "Mass Meeting and Project Convention" tonight at 7 PM in the Campus Center Auditorium. The convention launches a new school year of environmental projects and "eco-action" and is open to anyone in the University Community.

Information will be available including various project outlines and copies of CEQ's new newsletter "The Coalition" which includes project discriptions, updates on environmental news, and a calendar of the year's scheduled events. In addition, sign-up sheets and information tables will be available.

One of the more spectacular projects to be announced at the convention is a raft voyage down the Connecticut River to dramatize old river problems.

The voyage, slated to begin somewhere in Vermont, will pass sewage plants, atomic power stations, paper mills, pumping stations, dams, dumps and numerous other sites that symbolize the destruction of the Connecticut River's eco-system. The voyagers will plan numerous stomps where they will receive press coverage and distribute well-researched fact sheets about the river problems.

The difficulties are numerous, but the crew is enthusiastic. Research on river problems, navigation, and landing sites must be done; supplies, itinerary and publicity must be planned; and the rest of the crew must be recruited (shang-haid?). Brother Rat, (Eric Walgren), a promoter of the project, sees the biggest problem as being "just getting the project going before the cold weather sets in."

Ric Smardon, an officer in CEQ and an environmental Grad Student, hopes to recruit more help at CEQ's Kickoff Meeting. Depending on what kind of vessels can be arranged, Ric assures us that, the project could well turn out to be a flotilla instead of a lonely raft.

When the project gets started, CEQ hopes to man a 24-hour-a-day "raft watch", in the CEQ office, publishing hourly reports on the progress of the mariners for radio coverage, and arranging media receptions at each of the stopping points.

Morale is high among the sailors already signed on and talk is enthusiastic, although the mention of "Going down with the ship" is conspicuous in its absence.

Brownout Greets Fall Along Eastern Seaboard

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Hot weather and equipment failures caused more power reductions or "brownouts" along the Eastern Seaboard from New England to the Carolinas Wednesday, leaving thousands threatened with new selective blackouts.

Only a few hours after the official arrival of fall at 6:59 a.m., Consolidated Edison Co. of New York cut power in successive stages by 8 per cent. Other systems reduced voltage 5 per cent some because of shortages themselves, others so they could sell extra electricity to beleaguered areas.

It was the second straight day of electricity shortages on the Eastern Seaboard.

Millions of customers were urged to cut back on nonessential use of electricity, particularly air conditioning. Although the brownouts had no direct effect on most individuals, large office buildings, including those in the United Nations complex, cut down lights and air conditioning, leaving workers squinting and sweltering.

Officials worked overtime to repair broken generators including the 820,000 kilowatt Keystone Station at Johnstown, Pa., serving the New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland grid, and a 690,000 kilowatt generator in the Virginia Electric & Power Co. system that failed Tuesday.

The new power cutbacks began early Wednesday.

Berkeley Youths Aid Firemen

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) - Young people from Berkeley's student and nonstudent communities won praise Wednesday for helping put out a $3 million Berkeley Hills fire that destroyed 37 homes.

Fire officials said several hundred University of California students and non student "street people" climbed two miles into the hills Tuesday and helped firemen drag hose lines and equipment.

"I assure you, if it had not been for their assistance Tuesday, we would have been in serious trouble manpowerwise.....• They really did a fine job," said Fire Marshal Lawrence Toellner of Oakland.

The fire, of undetermined origin, was the largest of several in timber dry California.

Guerrillas Reject Cease Fire

WASHINGTON (AP) - A chartered civilian airline will fly from Beirut to Amman Thursday to begin evacuation of Americans who wish to leave embattled Jordan, the State Department said Wednesday night.

Arrangements are being made for the first flight of a Lebanese Middle East Airlines plane to pick up U.S. citizens and foreigners of other nationalities, officials said.

In the meantime, radio broadcasts, including some by the Voice of America U.S. government radio, are telling those who wish to leave where they should gather and what articles they should bring with them.

Still unknown is how many of the approximately 400 Americans in Jordan will try to get to Amman's airport for the airlift. One estimate is the number could range up to 200.

The airliner slated to fly in Thursday morning has seats for 112 passengers, officials said. They indicated another rescue flight would follow after Thursday.

No U.S. military or security personnel will be flying into Jordan on the chartered craft, State Department officials said. They said it is assumed that the Jordanian government will provide security for those foreigners seeking to go to the airport.

Announcement of the evacuation flights came several hours after informed sources said such a plan was afoot, while the State Department through spokesman Robert J. McCloskey said at mid day no evacuation had been ordered.

. . Airlift Americans

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - The Jordanian army claimed it drove invaders from Syria out of Jordan Wednesday in a "chaotic retreat," but a cease fire proclaimed by King Hussein collapsed when Palestine guerrillas rejected it.

The cease fire was agreed upon between Hussein and five captured guerrilla leaders, and it had the blessings of an Arab peace mission dispatched from Cairo to Amman Tuesday.

But Yasir Arafat, powerful leader of the guerrillas, was not a party to the deal and he rejected it in a cable to President Gamal Abdel Nasser of Egypt.

He charged that the Jordanian army was still fighting the guerrillas in the streets of Amman and called on the Egyptian leader to end the bloodshed. He demanded a meeting with the Arab peace mission. Arafat is believed to be somewhere in Jordan.

President Norreddin Atassi of Syria also denounced the cease fire in a broadcast, saying it did not represent the opinion of the Arab people.

Maj. Gen. Jaafar el Numairi president of Sudan and head of the mission from Cairo said he had met with Hussein and the captured guerrilla leaders and found both "responsive and willing to cooperate to end the bloody tragedy," now in its seventh day.

The agreement between Hussein and captive guerrillas provides:

- Guerrillas would move their bases from the cities to the front with Israel.
- Guerrilla bases would be banned in Amman or any other town and restricted to the front with Israel.
- The Palestine Liberation Organization would be the sole representative of the Palestinian people in dealing with Jordanian officials.
- All Jordanian laws and regulations would apply to the guerrillas, and they would pledge to respect them.

Washington cast doubts on Jordanian claims that the last invaders from Syria had been driven out. The White House said its latest information was that Syrian units "are still in Jordan."

Sunday's invasion from Syria had prompted speculation that the United States might intervene to keep Hussein, regarded as a moderate Arab leader, on his throne.

Inflation Slow-up

WASHINGTON (AP) - Living costs last month posted the smallest rise in nearly two years, the government announced Wednesday, cheering President Nixon and his economists in their battle against the nation's worst inflation in 20 years. The August rise of two tenths of one per cent brought the government's Consumer Price Index up to 136.0, meaning it cost $13.60 last month to buy what $10 would buy in the 1957-59 base period.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Salk Answers His Own Questions

By GILBERT J. SALK
Staff Reporter

As more and more young Americans become concerned about the cancerous growth of militarism in the United States, the question of alternatives to serving in the armed forces assumes greater and greater importance. Men are seeking ways to avoid supporting the abhorrent war against Vietnam, and both men and women are disturbed by the disruption and channeling of their lives caused by the Selective Service. Draft Counselor's Corner will provide information about alternatives through general information and by answering questions submitted by readers.
NOTE: We recognize that the draft does as much to disrupt the lives of women as it does of men. Therefore, a special effort will be made to provide information to women also.

Since this column is, in part, a question-and-answer column as well as a straight rap, and because as yet nobody has submitted any questions I feel duty-bound to break the ice. Thus, I have written myself some questions for me to answer. If you feel you can write better questions, please read the final paragraph.

Q. You keep saying that we should consult our draft counselor, but you haven't told us how we can find one. Can you help?

A. On campus, through the benevolence and far-sightedness of the Student Senate there now exists an organization called the Draft Counseling Services. (You may not have heard of it because the Collegian has been lax in sending an inquiring reporter to do an article on it - a nasty letter to the editor may remedy this.) As yet, due to unavoidable delays in making room assignments in the SU and the CC, the Student Union Governing Board has not given the Draft Counseling Services an office. Gil Salk (me) has been hired by DCS as a full-time counselor and program coordinator. Until he has an office, he is making appointments through the United Christian Foundation. Call 545-2661 or 545-2789. His (my) services are free.

Another area counseling service is the Valley Peace Center on Cook Place in Amherst. (It's in the building behind Aubuchon Hardware on Main St.) The telephone number is 253-3683.

If you are not in this area, consult the Yellow Pages. First try the obvious and look under Draft Counseling or Counseling Draft. If that doesn't work, try Churches-Friends. This will connect you with a Quaker Meeting House. Many Quakers do draft counseling, and if they don't, they'll be glad to tell you who is doing counseling in the area. There are Friends Meetings in most large cities, so ask Information for help if you're in a town without one. The Mennonites are also heavy on draft counseling, so if they have a church in the area, call them.

Campuses are generally a good area to find a draft counselor too, so look for colleges in the vicinity. Campus newspapers can often help you find the counselor on a particular campus. 'Nuff said, students. You're on your own. If this doesn't help, apply a little Yankee ingenuity to the problem.'

Q. My own draft problems have been solved, but I'd like to help others. Is there any way I can get training as a draft counselor?

A. Strange that you should ask that. It just so happens that the Draft Counseling Services will be starting a Counselor Training Program for beginning counselors soon. It will be held on three consecutive Tuesday nights, starting October 6, from 7:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m. in room 175 of the Campus Center. Since you're me, I know that you are male, but it's worth noting that women will also be welcome to participate. There will be a charge of $2.50 to defray the cost of materials, but this can be waived if necessary.

There will be a limit of 25 people, so please register early. You may register by leaving your name and telephone number at 545-2661. Please do not register unless you are both able and willing to commit yourself to using your training.

Q. I stopped going to church about 6 years ago. Is there any way I can claim to be a conscientious objector?

A. There's nothing in the fact of your non-attendance to stand in your way. In the first place, it is no longer required that your claim have a religious basis. However, if you are seeking CO status because of religious beliefs, you are still not handicapped. Your beliefs can be based, at least in part, upon earlier training which helped you arrive at your present position. Whether or not you still attend church, or, for that matter, still believe in God, is not really essential to your claim. The training which shaped your beliefs is.

Q. Your earlier columns concluded with a pitch for letters and some nonsense about no personal replies unless accompanied by one dollar. What are you, some kind of capitalist pig?

A. You know me well enough to answer that. However, that's not the reason for the charge. Actually, I just hate writing letters, and thought that I might as well get paid for doing something I don't like. Unfortunately, that has apparently obscured the essential point that personal draft counseling is FREE, a pleasure, and available to all. Therefore, to avoid further confusion, from this date forth, there shall be no personal replies by letter. Letters to be answered in the column are welcome. Is that clear now?

Q. No.

A. Too bad. You'll have to live with it.

Q. A friend's father recently died in a VA hospital of injuries he received in WW II. He had not been in the hospital for several years, but the cause of death was clearly the result of the old injuries. My friend has three sisters and no brothers, and his mother is still living. What deferments, if any, are available to him?

A. As a sole surviving son, he is automatically eligible for a IV-A deferment and should request it immediately. This deferment is available to anyone who meets both of the following requirements: 1. the only living son in the family; 2. any one or more members of his immediate family (father, mother, brother, or sister) has died while performing military duty or as the result of injuries received while performing military duty.

Q. Isn't this enough for today?

A. Yes. You've been very helpful. Thank you.

Questions to this column should be addressed to: Gilbert J. Salk, c/o Draft Counseling Services RSO #395, Campus Center, Univ. of Mass., Amherst, Mass. 01002. Free personal draft counseling available. For appointment, leave message at 545-2661 or 2789.

End of Experience

It was Sunday night and the rock concert had begun to break up. The music had been floating in my window, and I decided to walk down to see what had been there.

I wouldn't know about the clownery with Rt. Rev. Rat until the next day. I had on my mind the loss of one of our most well-known performers.

I wrote these words that night. Please accept them as my tribute to the late Jimi Hendrix.

Stars are shining and an airplane blinks across the sky. The swans are floating placidly in the pond. Only a few cars are left on the grass, and only a few people are left huddling around the dying embers of a fire.

He would have liked that. He would have liked the cars on the lawn and the closeness which still breathes here. I think that he could have taken such serenity after a concert.

I didn't like the music of Jimi Hendrix too much. I didn't like the thought of people subjecting themselves to such awesome levels of sounds. Some of his lyrics I thought were a little crude.

And yet now he is gone and I feel that I have lost a part of myself. He was so inescapably part of our culture: the noise, the excitement, the union of performer and audience, the sheer destruction of material things.

They are pouring water on the fire now. The hundred white windows of the Lincoln center are grinning that silly-ass grin, but the stars are still out.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR must be typed, double spaced, at sixty spaces and must carry the writer's signature, address, and telephone number (all of which will be withheld upon request). The limit is one page and the deadline is 5 p.m. the day prior to intended publication. The editors reserve the right to edit all letters.

So meanwhile I had overslept that morning and had to hitch to the thing, and this chick with a really souped-up Ford stops and says "where you goin?" and I said "a funeral wanna come?" So I get in and we catch the tail end of the procession by the fenders--the justice of the peace's limousine. Let me say it was a twisted bash. The justice was shocked at the shape that his fender was in. He'd always bragged to the congregation that a Fischer Body could withstand a second great flood. But nobody told him to look out for the other guy.

The Incurable

"They really should have known better," my historian friend remarked.

"Yes?" I sniffed the air, for I seemed to sense burnt meat.

"Of course. But what age has really had any respect for precedent?"

The bearers arrived with another load just then, and we paused to watch. Once machines would have done this work -- not now. Just this year, machines were more valuable than men, metal more scarce than flesh, fuel more in demand than food (according to those who counted). A simple matter of economics. So men alone moved these incredible loads, and we watched, fascinated, hating ourselves for it.

I tried to break the spell. "Why, what kind of precedent is there?"

He continued to follow the spectacle, trying to pretend a sort of detached amusement. "Characterize this age."

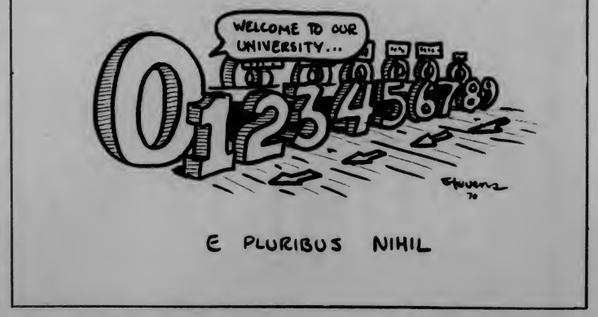
"Goddam your lectures." (Bad slip: with anyone else, it could have meant a loss of face.) "The age of overpopulation," I answered more calmly.

"All right. Consider the first overcrowded nations--China, India, Egypt. Egypt was an historical treasure house, once. What happened?"

A game: he was keeping reality from the satisfaction of having him break. I played along. "Egypt just couldn't afford to be a museum any longer."

"Quite true. Egypt decided she needed the Aswan Dam more than a few old tombs, and so went the temple of Abu Simbel... There's another precedent you should recall."

We'd been shouting over the voices of the bearers already, and now the sound of hammering was added. The loads were on the ground now, and the bearers were opening those loads, with all the deliberation of insects working on a live crab's shell to get at the meat inside. It wasn't the meat inside that mattered here, of course: the bearers were after the shell. They were in the process of discarding the meat.



"What other precedent?" I murmured, dazed. "Auschwitz," he snapped. "Dachau. In our time. Remember the ovens? Remember how the guards used to rip the gold teeth out of the corpses, cut the rings out of the fingers?" He mumbled something.

"Man the incurable," he shouted, his voice finally breaking. "No, man never looks forward, and he never looks back. What a brave, bold creature is he. He could have seen this coming, and stopped it. But did he trifle to?

"When we were young this would have been 'unthinkable.' Now it's routine. Do you think those workmen have any qualms about what they're doing? Of course not. And do you think those men inside the freezers the workmen are after knew what would happen to them?

"Those fools," he sobbed. "They were too sick for their own time to help them, so they blithely quick-froze their own bodies and waited for the wise men of the future to kindly awaken them when they could be cured. Those poor, damned, incurable fools..."

I didn't have to sniff this time. Burnt meat, no question.

Canceling Insurance

WASHINGTON -- There has been a rash of automobile insurance cancellations lately by the major companies, and everyone is very nervous about it. The other day my wife was notified that her auto insurance policy was being canceled. The notification gave no reason for the cancellation, and since my wife had not been in an accident or had ever made a claim, she was perplexed.

She asked me to get to the root of it and I took the next plane to visit our insurance company. The company is housed in a 56-story aluminum and tinted glass skyscraper on a 30-acre shopping plaza overlooking most of the state of Connecticut.

I arrived on the 35th floor where one made inquiries concerning canceled insurance policies. After browsing through the company literature, which told how insurance was making America great, I was ushered into the office of Clyde Featherstone.

I gave Mr. Featherstone the cancellation notice and he clucked once or twice and then disappeared. He returned a few moments with the folder.

"What did my wife do wrong?" I demanded.

Her records are all up to snuff."

"Then why did you cancel her insurance?"

"Because of Trembling and Trembling, her insurance agents."

"Trembling and Trembling?" I said.

"Yes," said Featherstone, going through the folder. "They've been very naughty boys, very naughty indeed."

"Did they steal any money?" I asked.

"Worse! They've written too many policies this year that people have made claims on. We've had to pay our $1,897 to Trembling and Trembling clients in the last 12 months."

"But what's that got to do with my wife's insurance policy? She didn't get any of the money."

"Ah, but since you are with Trembling and Trembling YOU are now considered a bad risk. Their record is your record."

"That's nonsense. I hardly know Trembling and Trembling," I protested. "I wouldn't recognize them if I saw them on the street. This is guilt-by-association."

Featherstone smiled. "You came to us through Trembling and Trembling and you will leave with Trembling and Trembling. This company will not put up with people who make insurance claims against it."

"But that's what you're here for," I said. "To pay people off when something happens."

"That's a foul lie," said Featherstone, losing his smile. "We're here to build buildings and real-estate developments, and finance ships and airplanes and ball parks. If we keep paying out claims, where would we get the money to construct this 56-story building with its beautiful shopping plaza and underground computer center?

"Do you realize," said Featherstone, "that every dollar we pay out in a claim is a dollar we have to take away from our advertising budget which tells the public what wonderful insurance people we are?"

"I appreciate all that," I said, "but surely you have to pay some claims in order to stay in the insurance business."

"That's what Trembling and Trembling thought," Featherstone said, as he tore up my wife's folder.

I thanked Featherstone for his kindness and understanding. He got up to shake my hand. "If you're staying in town for dinner we have a great restaurant on the roof garden which is bringing us 15% profit a year."

BERKELEY, Calif., Sept. 19 (UPI) - Eighty per cent of the graduating seniors on 10 diverse college campuses across the country believe confrontation tactics - ranging from non-violent mass demonstrations to physical violence - are necessary to bring social change, two University of California researchers have reported.

They released the results of a survey of 1,542 seniors taken last spring among predominantly white, middle-class young men and women with above-average academic records attending campuses in the West, Midwest, and East with varied characteristics.

The researchers, Sarah Clrese and Jeff Koon of the Center for Research and Development in Higher Education, asked this question: "Considering social conflict within our society and its expression on certain campuses, to what degree do you feel confrontation tactics are necessary or effective?

Offered five possible responses, 52 per cent said, "Non-violent mass protests or demonstrations are the only feasible way to persuade officials to respect the will of the people." Nineteen per cent said, "The use of disruptive tactics and the destruction of property is often necessary in order to change the status quo." -

Which Way Did 'Dey Go, George?

The intelligence and maturity of the people in the Quad escapes me. Because of the screaming and yelling of the males for those important items in every man's wardrobe, bras and panties, we were not allowed a quiet conducive to sleep until sometime around 2AM. This morning, around 5:30 or 6:00, the males wonderful counterparts, the female, found it necessary to leave their comfortable rooms to scream, "We want a pantie raid." I am taking this opportunity to thank both parties for their consideration to the other people in the Quad, and to say that we, too, have a demand.
WE WANT SOME SLEEP!!!
(Name withheld by request)
(Ed. Note: Aha-ha it's not the panties & the bras they want!)

To the Editor:

You are a naughty!

The cutline under the picture on page 5 (Sept. 23 edition) of MDC indicated it showed "The Winner - Boston City Councilwomen (sic) launched her final campaign for that city's ninth congressional seat yesterday at a campaign rally with her two sons."

Of the three persons pictured, two were definitely female.

Are you trying to tell us something?
CURIOUS

(Ed Note: Well CURIOUS I'll concede that the figure on the right is a woman, but as for the other two, it's anybody's guess.)

Ripley's Believe It or Not

(Ed. note: The following editorial by Henry J. Taylor is reprinted from the Record American for your entertainment.)

Are part of the campus disorders a Red plot? You be the judge. For a perilous feature of our day is that too many people are either too civilized, too inexperienced, too distrated or too dense to grasp the documented truth. We are being brainwashed whenever we are told that the thrust here is not organized. The CIA and FBI both know that the center for it is in Prague, within the shadow of the Ruzyne Airport. There the immense so-called International Union of Students, financed and braintrusted by Moscow, is supporting university anarchists here and throughout the free world.

The Kremlin departmentalizes this place into "country desks." Each section supervises a country. Cunningly, each tailors the "issues" for each country. Naturally, the I.U.S. drums on the Vietnam issue here and "Peace! Peace! Peace! to further a Red victory in Southeast Asia. A Pole, Vlod Konarski, a man with a bite like a saber tooth tiger, supervises the British thrust. The I.U.S vehicle there is the militant Radical Student Alliance in London. In Ireland, the I.U.S. thrust, locally called the Internation Movement, is based at Trinity College, Dublin. The IUS supervisor is Hardial Sinh Bains, a naturalized Canadian born in India. A Bains sidekick is Ralph Schoenman, the student shepherd of the Bertrand Russell Peace Foundation--the man who concocted the mock trial of President Johnson in protest against Vietnam. Iron-fisted Schoenman served a stretch in Montjoy Prison Dublin. Britain banned Schoenman and Scotland Yard caught him. To the dismay of the CIA and FBI Schoenman had an American passport.

In France the IUS thrust is supervised by Daniel Cohn-Bendit ("Before you can build you must destroy") who is not even a Frenchman. He's German. The success, typified by the March 3 Natarre campus mayhem which saw Dean Paul Ricoeur kidnapped and 125 policemen injured, has all but paralyzed French education. University faculty members are brutalized and kidnapped almost daily. President Pompidou himself has stated, in desperation, that "there is no security on many major campuses in France."

I had lunch in New York not long ago with Italian Foreign Minister Aldo Moro. Italy has enacted a new university reform law, and Mr. Moro, himself a professor, sponsored it. "But what can we do?" he asked. "In my country, as in France, your country, and throughout the world, the Reds' technique is always to up their demands with every concession they gain."

Japanese Premier Eisaku Sato spoke similarly on his visit here. He said that last year student arrests in campus disorders exceeded 14,000 (ours exceeded 3600) and that the IUS thrust has reduced Japanese educaton to a shambles. The IUS vehicle there is the immense Zengakuren student organization along with five other factions.

There's no Alfred Hitchcock mystery in what is happening here, nor the brainwashing that accompanies it. Of course, none is so blind as one who will not see. But wake up, America! Our enemies are promoting a civil war in the United States. "It can't happen here" is a total dangerous philosophy. It will happen if we refuse to wake up and call a spade a spade.

Belchertown Program Needs Volunteers

The Belchertown Volunteer program serving the mentally retarded successfully got under way Saturday. However, more volunteers are needed to devote their time and effort to helping the handicapped and retarded of Belchertown.

No experience or definite commitment is required of anyone interested in the program, just a willingness to help when possible. Volunteer work consists of anything from playing football with a group of boys to playing bingo with elderly ladies from teaching a class to working on a one-to-one level.

Most inmates at Belchertown have almost no contact with the outside world or their families. The volunteers are their only hope and to fulfill this hope we need your help. Bus leaves Whitmore at 12:45 p.m. each Saturday and returns at 4:30. Please help. For any further information, contact: Roger Lynch 546-8966

UMass Consumer

Fraud Common In Auto Repairs

BILL MATTHEWS

One out of every five consumer complaints received and investigated by the Massachusetts Attorney General's Office involve automobiles. Most consumers feel that their cars were poorly repaired and charged for unnecessary repairs, that they paid too much for the work done, or that their warranty should have covered the costs.

Upon closer observation the Attorney General's office revealed some very interesting techniques that must have made a number of auto repair shop owners wealthy in a short period of time. Since space does not permit full descriptions of what amounts to fraud, we will give a general outline of auto repair deceptions. The most common practice is "low balling". This occurs when the mechanic working on the original complaint "finds new problems with the car and will recommend their repair. Depending on ones' level of gullibility and lack of knowledge, new problems can be found indefinitely, and at low enough prices for you not to want to take a chance driving.

Once the garage has your car, there are a number of other possibilities open to them. Mechanics can make repairs with second hand parts and charge you for new parts; replacements can be made so they'll break down shortly, which creates more work and a steady flow of income. Unauthorized repairs can be made and charged to you whether you wanted them or not. You can be charged for repairs when none are made. Padding labor charges is quite easy and lucrative. Some dealers will deliberately tag their cars with inflated charges so they can offer you a "discount", thusly guaranteeing your future business.

In the past three years, a half dozen states have been prosecuting various transmission repair firms, some nationally known. These companies normally advertised free transmission inspections, and if repairs were required they would be done at a low price. The problems for the consumer began once the transmission was disassembled. Sometimes good parts would be replaced with defective ones to show the need for repairs. Most often, the mechanics would refuse to reassemble the transmission unless the customer paid (usually in cash) in advance for repairs or service costing at least as much as advertised price but most often, for considerably more.

We should keep in mind that the five college area is a seller's market. It is up to you, the student (staff or faculty)-consumer to assure the honesty of businesses in this area. Few of us realize that we have legal recourse with repair shops, but we do. The State Attorney General is very concerned with the auto repair business and has set up a commission to investigate and report on the most frequently alleged abuses in the motor vehicle industry for possible future laws.

If you feel you need or are told you need repair work, get a diagnosis and written estimate from several auto repair shops. An awareness on the part of you, the consumer, is your job.

NOTE: If you have gotten, or are getting your motor vehicle inspected in the college area, take a few minutes to write down the name and address of the station, whether or not it was passed any repairs they said that you needed, and your status (student or staff, etc.), and send it via campus mail to YAHOO. RSO#106, or bring it to the YAHOO office. With more than 12,000 registered vehicles on campus we should get some valid results.

Bicycle Club To Roll

There is no organization for people interested in bicycles on campus. Why? There are more bikes on campus this year than in any other year. There are so many obvious benefits in having a bicycle club that it is surprising there isn't one as old as the Outing Club (founded in the 20's). A bicycle club could:

-organize day trips and overnight tours of the area and other areas if enough people show an interest in touring them,

-provide information on bicycle accessories; which are best for which uses, where to get them, maybe even get discounts,

-compile information on bicycling conditions in the area; good roads, best areas, areas to avoid,

-sponsor or organize racing teams (in the Metawampe 500, in regional and/or national competition),

-test of all, have fun together.

Room 171 is reserved in the Campus Center on Thursday Oct. 1 at 7:00 p.m. to hold what could be the organizational meeting of a Bicycle Club. If you can't make the meeting, leave a card with your printed name, dorm, & phone in R.S.O. box 347 (CEQ) and they will be brought to the meeting.

This latter work, produced in 1916, will have a revival on September 27 when the University Film Study begins its seventh season. The film, which manages to be both anti-war and anti-German centers on the prosecution of Christ in the guise of a soldier striving to restore the world to peace and features a secret women's army dedicated to ending the carnage of World War I by refusing to bear cannon fodder.

The Film Study Series will, as in the past, bring to the University community both contemporary and early works representing the experimental and documentary as well as feature film genre.

Other film programs for the semester include John Ford's THE IRON HORSE (October 4), Eisenstein's ALEXANDER NEVSKY (October 18), King Vidor's HALLELUJAH (November 8), Arne Sucksdorff's THE GREAT ADVENTURE (November 15), Noel Coward's IN WHICH WE SERVE (November 22), Ingmar Bergman's WILD STRAWBERRIES (December 6), Jan Kadar's THE SHOP ON MAIN STREET (December 13) and a program of experimentals on December 20 which will include works of Brakhage, Breer, Emshwiller, Mekas, Nelson and Vanderbeek.

Experienced Defense, Strong Backfield, Tough Offense . . .

A Few of Dartmouth's Strengths

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

What can you say about a team like Dartmouth? In 1969 the Indians were sixteenth in total offense, fourth in rushing offense, second in pass defense, twenty-second in scoring, ninth in total defense and tenth in scoring defense in the entire nation. Add to this the fact that there are twelve starters from last season's 8-1 squad returning, and you come to the conclusion that UMass will have its hands full with the Indians this Saturday at Hanover, N. H. at 1 p.m.

Coach Bob Blackman is optimistic about his club's chances in 1970. And why shouldn't he be? With eight men returning to the vaunted Indian defense of 1969, points should be difficult to put on the board against Dartmouth. At the same time, Blackman claims that he has potentially the best backfield not only in New England but in the East. Together, that makes quite a combination.

If there is a weakness to be found on this team, it is probably the lack of backfield depth. After the starting foursome there is little to choose from among the replacements. Thus a key injury could prove costly to the Indians.

And before the season has begun injury has struck the backfield. Star quarterback Jim Chasey, an All-Ivy and All-New England selection last year, and the leader in Indian total offense, is said to be suffering from a severe twisted ankle. However, the UMass coaching staff is of the opinion that the 6'1-185 lb. senior will still see quite a bit of action come Saturday. If Chasey is unable to play, inexperienced sophomore Steve Stetson will get the call.

Joining Chasey in Blackman's dream backfield will be another All-Ivy selection, 5'11-200 lb. senior John Short. Blackman describes Short as "the best all-around player on the squad". Although Short will probably do the bulk of the running, UMass will also have to beware of the other halfback, junior Brendan O'Neill, 6'-180 lb., averaged over six yards a carry last year and scored two touchdowns.

Rounding out the backfield is another returning starter, fullback Stu Simms. A 6'1-215 lb. junior, Simms is a tough blocker and a dangerous power runner. He averaged 4.4 yards a carry in 1969.

Any offense, however, is only as good as its line. Dartmouth is front line will probably prove to be as tough as any unit the Redmen will face all year. No less than five of the starters on last year's offensive line are back.

Anchoring the unit is a second team All-Ivy selection, center Mark Stevenson. Stevenson, a 6'1-205 lb. senior, has been a starter since midway in his sophomore year. Flanking Stevenson are guards Bob Cordy and Jim Wallace. Cordy, 6'1-195 lb., is another experienced competitor and, should Wallace not be able to handle the other guard position, junior Bob Bassett will probably get the nod.

At the tackles will be Bob Peters and Joe Leslie. Peters, one of the Indian co-captains, is the most experienced returning offensive lineman and is expected to be one of the top linemen in the Ivy League. Joining the 6'1-225 lb. senior at tackle, Leslie is one of the biggest men on the squad at 6'5-240 lb.

Chasey will have a pair of experienced receivers to throw to this season with both of last year's starters returning. Darrel Gavle, 6'3-210 lb., caught seven passes last year including two for TD'd against Cornell. Bob Brown, 6'2-190 lb., snatched ten passes for a team high of 201 yards in 1969 as well as scoring five TD's. Gregg Brown, a 6'4-205 lb. sophomore, should also see some action.

As strong as the 1969 Indians were on offense, they were even better on defense. And although seven men have graduated from this unit, it is unlikely that the 1970 Dartmouth defense will be a great deal weaker.

Starting up front at defensive tackle will be 6'3-235 lb. Barry Brink and 6'0-230 lb. senior Bill Skibitsky. Blackman feels that "this position has the best combination of quality and quantity of any of the team." Among the reserves at this position to watch is 6'6-265 lb. sophomore Tom Tarazevits, the biggest man on the squad.

Although Dartmouth is inexperienced at the defensive end position, that does not mean that it will be weak. Senior Jim Price, 6'1-210, is rated as a strong and agile pass rusher and should get a great deal of help from the other end, 6'1-200 lb. Tim Risley. Giff Foley, an All-Ivy selection at defensive tackle in 1967 before spending time in the service, has been shifted to end. The Silver Star winner will likely get into the game at one time or another.

Blackman employs a basic 4-4-3 defense which includes two "anchors", a middle linebacker and a rover. The anchors will be 6'1-205 lb. senior Bill Munich, a periodic starter for two years, and Joe Jarrett, 6'1-200 lb. one of the most seasoned members of the defensive unit.

Wayne Young, a 5'11-195 lb. junior, has emerged from a four-way battle and will be Blackman's choice as the starting middle linebacker. Senior Bill Brooks could also see duty against UMass.

At rover, Blackman has co-captain and second team All-Ivy selection Murry Bowden, a player whom he describes as "in a class by himself". He played much of the 1969 season with injuries and he is said to play with "reckless abandon".

The defensive backfield should be another strong point for the Indians. Leading the unit is another All-Ivy selection, 5'11-170 lb. senior Russ Adams. He intercepted three passes in 1969 and is the lone returning starter in the backfield. At the other halfback will be Mike Hannigan, a 5'11-175 lb. senior.

The safetyman is 6'4-205 lb. Willie Bogan. Blackman feels that Bogan is "the team's best pro prospect" if he can overcome a chronic back problem.

So that's the 1970 Dartmouth team. Maybe the Indians are not the world beaters they were in 1969, but they are still among the powers in New England, if not the East.

BOSTON (AP) - "It takes two hands to handle the Whopper," the Boston Patriots like to say about big Ron Berger, and the 6 foot 8 defensive end showed what they mean in the Patriots' 1970 National Football League opener Sunday.

Berger, biggest lineman ever to play for the Pats, led the charge as Boston's front four dumped Miami quarterbacks eight times and pressured the Dolphins all day in a 27-14 upset victory. The performance earned him the first weekly designation by The Associated Press as NFL Defensive Player of the Week.

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) - Ground was broken Wednesday for Schaefer Stadium, the new $6.2 million home of the Boston Patriots of the National Football League.

Pena, Kelliher Nab Awards

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Highlighting yesterday's second weekly UMass Redmen Quarterback Club Luncheon held at the Newman Center was the selection of guard Bob Pena and end Jim Kelliher as the top UMass offensive and defensive players respectively off of their performances in the Redmen's 28-0 win over Maine last Saturday.

Offering the large gathering an inside look at UMass' opponent on this Saturday, Dartmouth, was defensive line coach Bob Graham. He had high praise for the Indians, even going as far as to build them up to appear as a super team. He said, "If you're going to beat anybody, you might as well beat the best."

Head coach Vic Fusia, who ran some films of the Maine game, also pointed out the great potential that Dartmouth possesses. In fact he views the whole match-up as "a major team (Dartmouth) playing a college team (UMass)", but indicated that the Redmen have the tools that, when manipulated properly, can spring a surprise.

* * * *

On the playing status of Big Green quarterback Jim Chasey, Dartmouth head coach Bob Blackman had this to say in the Boston Globe: "I really can't see any chance of Jim playing this week,"..."He had a severe twisted ankle. More than likely we'll start Steve Stetson, a promising sophomore who has a lot to learn."

The Indians are known for playing possum in cases such as this one, often indicating a player's doubtful status, only to unveil that same player on Saturday afternoon, healthy as can be, having miraculously overcome a serious injury.

Whether this be the case with Chasey remains to be seen. At the luncheon, coach Graham listed the senior quarterback as a starter, batting no eyelid, nor pausing to reconsider his statement. A little later on, Fusia himself mentioned that Dartmouth is notorious for coming up with last second miracles before a football game.

KELLIHER – Defense

PENA – Offense

CEQ Focus Aid On Wetmore Camp.

The Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ) is sponsoring a meeting with State Representative Robert Wetmore (Dem.-Barre) this evening at 7 p.m. in Campus Center Rooms 165-169.

Mr. Wetmore is chairman of the legislative Special Committee on the Environment. He will be talking with interested members of the university community on how they can assist his committee in its research and proposals. Mr. Wetmore is looking for students and others to aid his understaffed and overworked committee.

The initial focus of CEQ's newly formed Political Project will involve itself in working with political candidates and government officials with intentions of promoting quality legislation in environmental areas. The project also intends to compile information on the positions and voting records of political candidates concerning environmental issues.

This is an opportunity for those interested in government and the state of the environment to get practical experience and workable knowledge in these fields.

The meeting is open to ALL.

SWAP Organizes In Initial Meeting

SWAP, Student Workshop on Activity Problems, held its first organizational meeting Thursday evening in the new Campus Center. Betty Pugh and Dick Palomba, co-chairmen of SWAP, discussed plans for a conference this semester.

Under authorization from the Student Senate, SWAP annually arranges meetings among trustees, administration, faculty and students. Representatives to SWAP include members of student governing boards and officers of RSO groups.

The purpose of these meetings is to discuss University problems and possible solutions to them in informal surroundings. In the past these conferences have been held at the Berkshire resort, Oak 'n Spruce.

The work, however, only begins at the resort area. Participants return to the University to discuss the results of the conference with the student body

Because of the informal atmosphere of these meetings, identification on a first-name basis and rap sessions into the early hours of the morning are common occurances.

DVP Speaker Explains Program Designed To Aid Viet Children

The Distinguished Visitors Program will present a program about South Vietnam's wounded civilians Monday Student Union Ballroom.

The Committee of Responsibility, the sponsor, is an organization of doctors and concerned citizens who bring innocent young victims of the war to the United States for medical treatment unavailable in Vietnam

Speaking Monday will be Mrs. Eloise Houghton, the New England executive secretary of the organization, and Dr. Peter Wolf, an assistant professor of psychology at Harvard University who works for the Committee. They will explain the nature of their work and present two movies "An Evil Hour" and "War's Children"

Since 1967, the committee has brought hundreds of children to the United States for treatment. These children selected from throughout South Vietnam, represent a small number of those who can be helped. A recent government survey indicates that each year more than 200,000 Vietnamese civilians are being wounded, maimed or killed by the war. A high percentage of the casualties are unprotected children.

War is destructive. The Committee of Responsibility is doing something constructive by making medical treatment available to war wounded children like Nguyen Van O, shown above.

By providing specialized orthopedic and plastic surgery, artificial limbs and training, nerve grafts, skin grafts, tendon transplants and parapiegic rehabilitation, the committee helps these children function normally again

The program is open to the entire University community with no admission charge.

Tippo Tea To Be Regular Affair

Chancellor Oswald Tippo has announced that he will resume his practice of holding regular open coffee hours every Monday noon, in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. Time will be 12 to 2 p.m.

The Chancellor's open discussions provide an opportunity for any member of the University community, and especially students, to raise questions about general campus issues, seek answers to particular questions, or to hear first-hand what the principal administrative officers are thinking and planning.

The practice of the regular open meetings with free coffee available to all, originated last year and is credited with allowing for greater two-way campus communication on issued affecting the entire University.

All students with particular matters to discuss, as well as those interested in just listening, are cordially invited to the Monday noon meetings, commencing September 28, in the Colonial Lounge.

Danforth Graduate Fellows are eligible for four years of financial assistance, with a maximum annual living stipend of $2,400 for single Fellows and $2,950 for married Fellows, plus tuition and fees. Dependency allowances are available. Financial need is not a condition for consideration.

The Danforth Foundation, created by the late Mr. and Mrs. William H. Danforth in 1927, is a philanthropy concerned primarily with people and values. Over the years the work of the Foundation, while oriented toward these concerns, has taken varied forms depending upon changing circumstances and the presence of promising opportunities for constructive action. Presently the Foundation focuses its activities in two major areas, education and urban affairs.

Bayh Blocks Senate Action

WASHINGTON (AP) - Opponents assailed the proposed constitutional amendment for direct election of the President Thursday as Sen Birch Bayh D Ind., blocked Senate action on other measures

Bayh, chief Senate sponsor of the House approved amendment, tried to show that opponents are filibustering to prevent a vote on the proposal

By blocking other legislation, he sought to force opponents to talk against the direct election amendment or else let it come to a vote.

Sen James B. Allen, D Ala., taking the floor for the opposition said Bayh was holding up the passage of appropriation bills and other measures essential to operation of the government.

"I hope the senator from Indiana will abandon the Bayh filibuster and let the Senate consider the bills on the calendar," he said.

The amendment to abolish the Electoral College and provide for election of the president by direct, popular vote has been before the Senate since Sept. 8 but, by unanimous consent, it has been put aside from day to day to permit action on other measures.

Bayh said he was putting a stop to this and also was refusing to consent to committee meetings while the Senate is in session. His idea, he said, is to bring all the Senate's business except electoral reform to "a screeching halt."

Majority leader Mike Mansfield, DMont., said he will file a second petition Friday to cut off the debate on electoral reform by invoking the closure rule.

C.E.Q. Ready To Build On Last Year's Experience

New Plans Outlined At First Meeting

By PAT KING
Staff Reporter

About 150 concerned members of the UMass community gathered in the Campus Center Auditorium for the Kickoff Meeting of the Coalition for Environmental Quality last night. Quint Dawson, President of the CEQ, outlined some of the workshops and projects planned for the 1970-71 year. True to the famous UMass competency, there was no microphone, so everybody had to unite physically, just to hear what was being said. This was especially conducive to the main objective of the meeting, which was to replace talk with action, to unify all those who simply complain about the destruction of our environment.

Lack of manpower and funds were cited by Dawson as the main problems of last semester. Things are already looking up for this year, since CEQ has been granted an Honorary to provide for guest speakers. Projects were organized in every area imaginable, ranging from problems on campus to investigation of governmental agencies. There was a project for any field of interest.

Dawson's "baby" was a project to organize an ecology organization in every high school in the state. The plan is to send teams of three members, an informed speaker, an audio-visual man and an organizer. Emphasis was placed on the fact that these teams would be specially trained to deal with high school age students. Training for these jobs will begin Saturday at 9:00 a.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium for anybody interested.

Another important consideration is the role of the university in the destruction of the Pioneer Valley. We've all seen signs of this. How about the smoke that the physical plant belches into the air? Or the scum that the ducks and swans at the pond have to wade through? Then there's always the litter-bug. A motion passed by the Student Senate will call to the attention of the Administration any ecological problem which is reported. Finally there is a channel to work within, and maybe, if a committee can get up the motivation, something can be done.

By now the news of the Raft has spread over the Campus. There is a project planned for a raft (or maybe rafts) to travel down the Connecticut River to dramatize the pollution problem. With the proper press coverage, this could be a very effective project, especially if the raft gets eaten out from under the brave sailors by the vile chemicals which have almost replaced the water. It could happen. Help is needed to overcome the resistance of some power companies so that the expedition can get underway before the cold weather sets in.

One of the more original plans was to give out awards to the best and worst polluters in the area. This again could be very effective with enough press coverage. Of course, people are needed for the Awards Committee to do research and to elect the lucky winners.

Of special relevance to any red-blooded American student in this, the age of sexual liberation, is the problem of birth control. There is a workshop being formed to bring birth control and abortion information to both the males and females in the community. The population problem is perhaps one of the most urgent.

For the politically oriented, there is a committee being formed to investigate the committees assigned by the government to offer solutions to ecological and environmental problems. Apparently, they haven't been doing a very good job. Why not? By taking the initiative, we can force environmental quality.

An election year is always an opportune time for change. CEQ will also be involved in helping those candidates who pledge action on the ecological issues. Here is a chance for political involvement and a means to work within The System.

Dawson presented the possibility of combining the forces and resources of ecology groups from the surrounding colleges Smith, Amherst, and Mount Holyoke. Other workshops topics were presented, such as a bicycle club, a detergent and phosphate workshop, an examination of neuclear power plants and help at the Arcadia Wildlife Sanctuary.

The formal meeting closed after Dawson had covered his list of workshops and projects and had given a brief summary of the purpose of each one. A debate followed concerning the establishment of a national park in the Holyoke Range. This has apparently upset some of the residents, and the pros and cons of such a move were argued, resulting in a spontaneous workshop. Then the people talked to those in charge of the 25 workshops and signed up for their choices.

So cheer up. Smile when you see heaps of garbage littering the roadside. Let the beauty of the smoggy air bring tears to your eyes. Somebody's doing something. Or trying, anyway. Anybody interested in signing up for one of the projects or in getting more information may go to the CEQ office in Room 124 of the RSO office.

FCC Shoots Down Plea For New T.V. Ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Federal Communications Commission Thursday denied a petition by the Columbia Broadcasting Co. and the Democratic National Committee asking it to reconsider its fairness ruling of Aug. 18.

It also refused to require CBS to give Republicans equal time before Oct. 10 to reply to a Democratic answer to President Nixon. The commission earlier had ruled the Republicans should have equal time to answer the Democrats but the Republicans then asked the FCC to order CBS to deliver the time before Oct. 10.

The dispute is based on whether the opposition party has the right to use television time to reply to remarks made by the chief executive on television. The crux of the matter revolves about whether the president is the head of the nation or the leading spokesman of his party.

The FCC ruled on Aug. 18 that he was both but said CBS's gift of free time to the Democrats was wrong because the network did not impose any conditions as to what could be discussed. The commission expanded on that ruling in its decision Thursday.

The dispute started when CBS, citing the fairness doctrine, decided that Democrats should be given television time to answer statements on the Vietnam conflict made by President Nixon in five television appearances.

The Democrats presented a 25 minute program on July 7 but, rather than limiting their remarks to the Vietnam war, they touched also on issues such as crime and civil rights.

The Republican National Committee then asked CBS for equal time to reply to the Democrats but was refused. The FCC later issued a decision saying CBS had erred and should give the Republicans equal time.

Both the network and the Democratic National Committee asked the commission to reconsider, contending the Democratic broadcast addressed itself to issues raised by Nixon in previous telecasts.

Both said the Democrats should not have been limited to discussing only the war, since Nixon had not been limited.

The FCC said Thursday there was a distinction between the president as the nation's leader and the president as his party's head.

Corn Blight Buck Passed, O'Brien Charges Agnew

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) - Democratic Natonal Chairman Lawrence F. O'Brien portrayed Vice President Agnew Thursday as a prsidential spokesman who is passing the buck for everything Republicans can't control, "even the corn leaf blight."

O'Brien spoke Thursday night at a dinner honoring former Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey, now a Democratic candidate for the U. S. Senate in Minnesota.

In prepared remarks, O'Brien said Agnew has become a divisive force and is ignoring President Nixon's pledge to "bring us together."

"It is the Democratic party that must hold aloft the banner which the President has cast aside and which his vice president has trampled in the mud," O'Brien said.

"The vice president's intent, as he thumbs his way through an unabridged dictionary, is to blame Democrats for everything that the Republicans can't control-crime, unemployment, inflation, budget deficits, even the cornleaf blight."

Administration To Try Students With or Without Judiciaries

Administrative action will be taken to try all student judicial cases if judiciaries for Areas East and West are not set up immediately, it was learned yesterday in a meeting between Student Senate Vice-President Pat Beharry and Randall Dahl of the Dean of Students Office.

The appointment of area judiciaries was not made last spring when the Student Senate suspended all normal activity for the national student strike.

"If students aren't willing to serve on their own courts then the administration will take matters into their hands and that will be a great defeat for student autonomy", said Vice-President Beharry.

The Judiciary Act calls for seven undergraduates---three seniors, three juniors, and one sophomore---for each area court.

Applications are available in the Student Senate office on level one of the Campus Center.

Jordanian Forces Advance On Resistance Troops

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Palestinian resistance was reported collapsing in northern Jordan Thursday before a Jordanian army attack and King Hussein appeared to be regaining control of the entire country.

As the fighting continued, a new move to get a cease fire was launched from Egypt. Two captured Palestinian leaders released by Jordan flew from Cairo to Damascus to try to get Yasir Arafat, the guerrilla chieftain, to accept the cease fire they worked out with the king.

A four man Arab peace mission returned to Amman from Cairo and met with Hussein in an attempt to get the fighting stopped. The mission headed by Gen. Jaafar el Numairi, president of Sudan, flew to Amman first Tuesday and returned to Cairo Wednesday with freed guerrilla leaders.

Fighting ebbed in Amman and an airlift of foreign refugees began. A Middle East Airline plane carrying 58 foreigners, 32 of them Americans, landed in Beirut. Passengers said mortar shells hit 100 yards from their plane before it took off. Two other planes took Britons to Cyprus.

Israeli observers 10 miles west of the fighting in the north said Jordanian troops broke the resistance of the guerrillas with heavy artillery barrages at Irbid, Jordan's second largest city 50 miles north of Amman.

After the artillery barrage lifted, army units began pursuing the guerrillas, they said.

The Israelis also said invaders from Syria, reported routed Wednesday, withdrew to Dera in Southern Syria leaving behind 25 destroyed tanks.

Amman radio said 5,000 guerrillas had surrendered, but it did not say whether they gave up in the north or in all parts of Jordan.

Official reports from Amman reaching the British Foreign Office in London said Hussein's forces have won back virtual control of the whole country after a week of bloody fighting.

The two Palestinian leaders who flew to Damascus were among captured guerrilla chiefs freed so they could accompany Arab peace mission back to Cairo Wednesday.

Arafat, head of the Al Fatah guerrillas and the Palestine Liberation Organization, rejected the cease fire Wednesday, calling it a trick. He was last reported in Jordan but sources in Cairo said he was expected to meet the two Palestinians in Damascus, the Syrian capital.

Abou Avid, Arafat's deputy in Al Fatah who helped to work out a peace plan and the cease fire with Hussein, also flew to Cairo with the peace mission. He had been captured earlier this week but was released. The Cairo dispatch did not name him as one of the two to see Arafat. It mentioned only one, Abou Gharib.

Replying to an urgent message from Arab leaders in Cairo about reports of more fighting near Irbid, Hussein said they were "absolutely false."

Guerrilla broadcasts from Baghdad said the guerrillas still controlled Irbid and Ramtha 10 miles to the east although they conceded some of their forces made "a tactical withdrawal."

Correspondents who arrived in Beirut from Amman said Wednesday they do not believe the army will follow the cease fire agreement to the letter because it is bent on destroying the guerrillas.

With the slight improvements in the capital, the Red Cross stepped up efforts to care for the wounded.

Jordanian authorities said there were no more than 2,000 casualties but guerrilla leaders and others say they are at least 10 times as high.

An International Red Cross mission returned to Jerusalem from Amman with permission from the Jordanian government to begin a transfer of wounded and medical supplies across the Jordan River.

In Geneva, Dr. A. Barakat, a Palestine Red Crescent official, was quoted on a Swiss radio broadcast as saying the 54 hostages from three hijacked Western airliners are "somewhere in Jordan under the protection of the Palestinian Red Crescent." Meeting with newsmen later, however, Barakat declined to confirm the statement saying: "I have heard reports the hostages were moved to the north."

He did not say what the condition of the passengers and crew men were, but he said they were exposed to the "same war dangers as the polution." Among the hostages held by Palestine guerrillas are 38 Americans.

Cambodian Army Troops Set Back As "That Other War" Continues

SAIGON (AP) - Cambodian government troops, blocked by a stubborn enemy force in attempts to recapture a big section of Cambodia's heartland, were cut off from their supply base Thursday by blown bridges to their rear.

Some 16 battalions of Cambodian troops - up to 6,000 men - were cut off when Vietnamese saboteurs slipped round the task force north of Phnom Penh and blew up three bridges.

The sappers struck at the end of a day of fighting which saw the Cambodians thrown backagain in their attempted advance on Taing Kauk, a North Vietnamese and Viet Cong strongpoint 47 miles north of the capital.

Associated Press correspondent Robin Mannock reported from a command post at Skoun that about 10 government soldiers were killed and 60 wounded in a series of sharp clashes on the southern edge of the village.

The enemy troops entrenched at Taing Kauk - their strength was estimated Thursday at 300 to 500 - have held up the offensive for 11 days.

The Cambodians want to push all the way to Kompong Thom, about 80 miles north of Phnom Penh, reopening Highway 6 as they go.

Cambodian officers in Skoun said it was not known when the offensive would be able to resume. The Cambodian high command was reported to be holding back on the use of air strikes and artillery to root the enemy out of Taing Kauk. Fleeing villagers had informed the army that earlier allied air strikes had had no effect on dislodging the well entrenched foe.

South Vietnamese forces claimed a major success in a six day operation to clear the banks of the Bassac and Mekong rivers 30 to 50 miles south east of Phnom Penh. They claimed to have killed 200 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong in the past three days.

In the only significant action reported in South Vietnam, government infantrymen claimed killing 23 North Vietnamese soldiers without suffering any casualties in a raid against an enemy staging area two miles southwest of Fire Base O'Reilly in the northern sector.

The diminished fighting on Vietnam's battlefields was reflected in weekly casualty reports which showed 52 Americans killed in action and 333 wounded last week. It was the lowest over all casualty toll in 4 1/2 years.

South Vietnamese casualties for the week also were down. 195 killed and 464 wounded. The allies claimed killing 1,217 enemy troops - the lowest figure of North Vietnamese and Viet Cong losses in a month.

The latest statistics raised to 43,674 the number of Americans killed in action in the war. Another 288,794 have been wounded.

Total South Vietnamese casualties now stand at 113,690 killed and 240,773 wounded. The allies figure they have killed 671,742 in a decade of fighting.

Thirty three Americans died of non-combat causes, during the week, bringing to 8,554 the total in that category.

U.S. Against Imposed Gov't, Bruce Tells Paris Talks

PARIS (AP) - The United States issued a formal reply Thursday to the so called "new peace initiatives" of the Viet Cong, and the response appeared to have left North Vietnam and Viet Cong at cross purposes.

U.S. Ambassador David K.E. Bruce, in the first official American reaction to last week's Viet Cong proposals affirmed that Washington will not impose any government on Saigon. But he left the door open for further talks on military questions.

The Viet Cong representative here quickly labeled Bruce's reply "entirely negative," but Hanoi's envoy did not regard it as an outright rejection.

At last week's session, Mrs. Nguyen Thi Binh, head of the Viet Cong delegation, called for a U.S. commitment to withdraw from Vietnam by next June 30 and to replace the Saigon regime of President Nguyen Van Thieu.

In exchange, Mrs. Binh offered a cease fire with U.S. troops during the withdrawal and the start of talks on prisoner of war repatriation.

Bruce said Thursday the United States will not impose any regime on the people of South Vietnam.

"The question of a political settlement in South Vietnam is one for the South Vietnamese to work out among themselves....free of the use of force and the threat of force from whatever quarter," he said.

Bruce added that the call for a withdrawal deadline "does not, in practical terms, differ markedly from your previous call for the withdrawal of our forces within six months.

"Nor have you made clear what you mean by your statement that "the question of Vietnamese armed forces in South Vietnam shall be resolved by the Vietnamese themselves" We continue to favor withdrawal of all outside forces."

Bruce's answer to the military demand did not seem to be a flat rejection. At one point, he commented: "If you intended in your later statements to convey new positions, we would welcome further clarification from you."

Bruce said the Viet Cong proposals on the table contain the "same fundamental demands." But, he added, "We have not rejected anything. We are still studying them."

Hijacking Remains Major Problem

Cuba Hands Over Air Pirate

MIAMI (AP) - U.S. officials, acting with the first such permission from Fidel Castro's government, flew into Cuba on Thursday and brought out an American Army private accused of hijacking a jetliner to Havana last month.

Robert J. Labadie, 27, indicted Sept. 10 on charges of aircraft piracy and kidnaping, was flown to Miami on the second of two daily refugee flights from Veradero, Cuba.

He was taken before U.S. Commissioner Ed Swan, who set bond at $500,000 and scheduled a preliminary hearing for Set. 30. Labadie said he was absent without leave from an Army hospital.

Other accused hijackers have returned to the United States from Cuba, many via Canada. But Labadie is the first to be handed over by Cuban officials directly to American authorities.

At the State Department in Washington, it was not certain whether this action meant a change in Cuba's policy on hijackers.

The United States has been seeking direct and immediate return of hijackers as a deterrent to air piracy that has seen more than 100 U.S. citizens commandeer planes to Cuba in the past decade.

The department's press officer, Robert J. McCloskey, said "State Department authorities note with satisfaction that Cuban authorities are returning this man to the United States."

Labadie was indicted at South Bend, Ind., in the hijacking of a Trans World Airlines plane Aug. 24 as it flew over Fort Wayne, Ind., with 86 passengers.

Washington had notified Havana through the Swiss Embassy that it would accept the hijacker back in this country. On Tuesday, the Cuban government proposed putting him on the "freedom airlift." U.S. officers rode the plane from Miami and took custody of him at the Cuban airfield.

The three engine TWA Boeing 727 jet was hijacked between Chicago and Philadelphia by a man wearing an Army uniform who told the pilot he had a friend in the coach section with a bomb.

There was no accomplice and only the hijacker got off at Havana.

Hijacking Jokes Bomb

WASHINGTON(AP - On the ground that air piracy is no laughing matter, the airline industry urged the public Thursday to refrain -at airports or on airplanes-from jokes about hijacking.

The Air Transport Association said the airlines are becoming concerned about sick joke references that set the nerves of airport personnel and plane crews on edge.

The ATA appeal for understanding of the problem came as a statistical summary showed that while U.S. hijackings did not begin until 1961, the crime itself originated three decades earlier.

The first known hijacking of an airplane occurred in Peru in 1930, the Federal Aviation Administration said.

ATA said the would be humor that has given cause for alarm was typified in the remark of a passenger that "ho ho, if you don't serve me another drink I'll blow up this airplane."

Recently at Minneapolis, the ATA said, a man who telephoned and was unable to get a reservation threatened laughingly, "You better get me on or I'll hijack the plane."

The reservations clerk invited the individual to come in and go on the flight standby list. When the would be passenger appeared at the airport, an FBI agent was waiting for him.

The maximum penalty for wilfully and maliciously conveying false information regarding airplane hijacking or sabotage is a $5,000 fine and five years of imprisonment.

But the same false information spread jokingly, without malice, can also be costly: up to $1,000 and a year in jail.

FAA records show that to date there have been 255 airplane hijacking attempts, world wide, starting in 1930. Of these, 64 were unsuccessful.

Of the remainder, 123 involved aircraft hijacked to Cuba, and 68 to other countries.

In 1947, a plane was hijacked on route from Romania to Turkey.

Refugee attempts to escape Communist control by hijack started in April and May 1948 when two Czechoslovakia aircraft were commandeered to the U.S. zone of West Germany.

Bubble, Bubble, Toil and Trouble

Bubble Bath an Irritant

WASHINGTON (AP) - The parents of a Miami youngster were puzzled by what the father described as a terrible rash on the boy's feet and legs. After a visit to a doctor, bubble bath was identified as the culprit.

A 5 year old Washington girl developed a urinary tract infection. Working by hunch, her parents took her out of contact with various items. - When the mother stopped the regular use of bubble bath, the infection disappeared.

The reactions are the reason federal officials are concerned about irritation caused by bubble baths, particularly among children.

"We feel it's something that needs attention rapidly," said Alfred Weissler, chief of the Food and Drug Administration's cosmetic division.

Weissler said of the 250 complaints the FDA receives each year about cosmetic and toiletries 15 pertain to bubble baths.

Most of the complaints, said Weissler, involved urinary tract irritation, particularly among young girls. The detergents in the baths apparently are strong enough to scour away normal bodily secretions and leave children susceptible to infection, he said.

The Toilet Goods Association, blames the reactions on misuse.

Weissler, who describes the law covering such products as weak and ineffective, says he has been urging privately that bubble bath makers include on labels a warning of possible irritation.

Soviets Bring Back Sample of M. Soil

MOSCOW(AP- Soviet space scientists successfully guided home their first samples of moon soil Thursday and quickly hailed the all mechanical feat as equal to the U.S. apollo moon landings.

The 11 day mission of the unmanned Luna 16 craft ended as recovery teams tracked the capsule through the earth's atmosphere and picked it up on target more than 1,400 miles southeast of Moscow, in Soviet Kazakhstan.

There was no immediate announcement on the quantity or condition of the moon soil aboard, which Luna 16's mechanical hand scooped up in the Sea of Fertility on the lunar surface Sunday.

Dr. Ivan F. Obraztsev. head of Moscow's Aeronautics Institute and a leading space expert, praised the Luna success on television as "a large achievement of Soviet science and technology."

He acknowledged that the U.S. moon landings also had been "big events," but said the Luna experiment "is a no less important event, from the point of view of technology."

This was believed to be the second Soviet attempt to make the round trip moon scoop expedition. The first ended in failure in July 1969, when Luna 15 crashed on the moon after its retrorockets apparently failed.

That mission coincided with the Apollo 11 landing and apparently had been calculated to beat Americans home with soil samples.

But the Luna 16 success gives the Russians a clear lead over the Americans in unmanned lunar exploration. Soviet press reports indicate Luna type craft will be used to try to extend this lead by shooting for samples from Mars and Venus.

A report from Tass said first reports from the recovery area indicated the return craft is in excellent condition.

The agency said the lunar probe landed not far from the Baikonur cosmodrome where Luna 16 station was launched Sept. 12.

Authorities Hold Three In Wisconsin Incident

HILLSBORO, Tex. (AP) - Texas authorities announced they were holding three men for questioning Thursday in connection with the University of Wisconsin bombing Aug. 24. In the bombing a graduate student was killed and three persons injured.

The Texas Department of Public Safety issued a statement saying the men were detained at the request of the FBI and were being held at Hillsboro, a town of 10,000 about 65 miles south of Dallas.

The FBI was investigating to determine the three men's identies, the department said.

Four young men have been charged in the bombing and were placed on the FBI's most wanted list.

The men were detained Thursday afternoon after being stopped on Interstate 35 in a car with Wisconsin license plates, the department said. They were taken to the sheriff's office in Hillsboro.

The Aug. 24 bombing of the Army Mathematics Research Center on the university campus at Madison resulted in FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover's announcing earlier this month a nationwide search for the four young men.

In making that announcement the FBI identified the fugitives as Karleton Lewis Armstrong, 22, Dwight Alan Armstrong, 19, his brother; David Sylvan Fine, 18, and Leo Frederick Burt, 22, a summer student at the university.

The four were charged with sabotage, destruction of government property and conspiracy.

Dr. Robert E. Fassnacht, 33, a graduate student who was working in the research center when the bomb went off, was killed.

Dr. Mead Advocates Replacement Of Traditional Family Units

New York, September 22--Anthropologist Dr. Margaret Mead today advocated the development of "cluster groups" as a replacement for traditional family units which she said have become "incongruous" with the new expectations of our changing society.

Arguing that the task of maintaining individual homes "squanders an inordinate amount of energy," Dr. Mead contended that the development of such new designs for living is one of our most urgent needs today.

She said that the self-sufficiency of small family units--parents and their children--in which each family must provide for all its own social and emotional needs has become a "heavy burden."

Citing current attitudes of the young toward the traditional approach to marriage and parenthood, Dr. Mead warned that "blind attachment (of society) to a traditional kind of family as the only good way of living and bringing up children may in the end frustrate our most serious efforts to improve the quality of our personal and national life...

"By holding on to a style of family living that has become incongruous with our newer expectations, we shall have lost what we have most valued: a way of bringing up children that prepares them to live their own lives, to make the future their own--and different from the past."

Emphasizing the difference between "cluster groups" and communes, Dr. Mead said that in the former, each family would retain its own identity and there would not be a common occupational or economic base.

She described "cluster groups" as communities in which couples with children would live very close to many people. "There would be in each cluster some families, some childless married couples, older and younger, some individuals not yet married, some previously married, some working or studying and some retired, some with strength for energetic play and talk with children and some very fragile persons whom even children could help care for...

"Some things would be owned personally; other necessary resources would be owned and used within the larger group...Nor should families and individuals necessarily make long-term commitments to membership. It is necessary, I think, for people to keep the sense that they are free to change and move."

In her article, Dr. Mead recommended the academic community as the ideal place to begin experimenting with such "cluster groups" because of its drastic shortage of housing and because the very nature of its impermanence would make many "willing, even eager, to try out an unfamiliar style of living."

New Book Offers Campaign Advice

For students interested in political campaigning, Donald G. Herzberg and J.W. Peltason unravel some mysteries and offer practical advice in their new book, A STUDENT GUIDE TO CAMPAIGN POLITICS (McGraw-Hill, $4.95 hardcover, and $1.95 paperback).

"Political campaigns in the United States are unique," the authors write. "They are longer, more chaotic, more decentralized, and less issue-oriented than campaigns in any other country in the world."

A STUDENT GUIDE TO CAMPAIGN POLITICS offers young people step-by-step advice on campaigning responsibilities. The book is not ideological, nor does it promote causes or candidates.

An active campaigner himself, Donald G. Herzberg has campaigned in Connecticut, New York, and New Jersey. He was Staff Director of President Kennedy's Commission on Registration and Voting Participation, and is consultant on politics to American Broadcasting Company News. He is a professor of Political Science at Rutgers University.

Grad Students Offered Foreign Grants For Research and Professional Training

The Institute of International Education has announced the official opening of its annual competition for grants for graduate study or research abroad, and for professional training in the creative and performing arts.

Application forms and information for the students currently enrolled at UMass may be obtained from the campus Fulbright Adviser, Professor P.J. Fliess. The deadline for filing applications through the Fulbright Adviser is October 8, 1970.

IIE is responsible for the recruitment and screening of candidates for U.S. Government Awards under the Fulbright-Hays Act as well as for grants offered by various foreign governments, universities and private donors.

The grants, which will be available for the academic year 1971-72, are designed to promote mutual understanding between the people of the U.S. and other countries through the exchange of persons, knowledge and skills. It is expected that there will be at least 554 awards available for 1971-72 although only tentative information on quotas has been received.

Candidates who wish to apply for an award must be U.S. citizens at the time of application, have a bachelor's degree or its equivalent before the beginning date of the grant and, in most cases, be proficient in the language of the host country. Selections will be made on the basis of academic and/or professional record, the feasibility of the applicant's proposed study plan, language preparation and personal qualifications.

Preference is given to applicants between the ages of 20 and 35 and to candidates who have not had prior opportunity for extended study or residence abroad, with the exception of those who have served in the armed forces.

Creative and performing artists will not be required to have a bachelor's degree, but they must have four years of professional study or equivalent experience. Applicants in social work must have at least two years of professional experience after the Master of Social Work degree. Applicants in the field of medicine must have an M.D. at the time of application.

Two types of grants will be available through IIE under the Fulbright-Hays Act: U.S. Government Full Grants and U.S. Government Travel Grants.

A Full award will provide a grantee with tuition, maintenance for one academic year in one country, round-trip transportation, health and accident insurance and an incidental allowance.

A limited number of U.S. Government Travel Grants is available to supplement maintenance and tuition scholarships granted to American students from other sources.

IIE also administers certain maintenance and tuition scholarships offered by foreign governments and private donors for study in Austria, France, Germany, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Mexico, Poland, Romania, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, and Yugoslavia.

TO BE YOUNG, GIFTED, AND BLACK

The late Lorraine Hansberry's life has been brought to the stage by her husband Robert Nemiroff in this highly acclaimed production. The show ran for over a year off-Broadway and this is the National company featuring members of that original cast. This is the first theater offering of the Fine Arts Council and looks to be a major event of this year's theater season. Three performances are scheduled, Friday and Saturday evenings at 8 and a Saturday matinee at 2:30. Some seats are available for the evening performances as well as many good seats for the matinee. Reserved seats are priced at $1.50 for UMass undergrads, $2.00 for UMass Graduate students and all other students; $2.50 for UMass faculty and staff members and $3.00 for general public. Films

CATCH-22

Mike Nichol's adaptation of the brilliant "black humor" novel of Joseph Heller about the absurdity of modern war. Alan Arkin stars as Yossarian, the bombardier who must prove himself insane if he wished not to fly any more bombing missions. Unfortunately he proves himself sane by refusing and must continue to fly--that's the catch, Catch-22. The film is a raw, brutal, funny, difficult experience which stays on the memory a long time after seeing it.

JOE

Joe, a blue collar worker who hates anyone black, young, or long-haired and doesn't hesitate to explain this to anyone who will listen, tells a fellow drinker at a bar he would like to kill a hippie. The other man calmly tells him he just did so, and thus begins a friendship (and film) between two most unlikely characters. It all exploits the Silent Majority, hippies, and any other cliche you wish to take from yesterday's newspaper ending in a sex and violence orgy sequence unequaled in recent films.

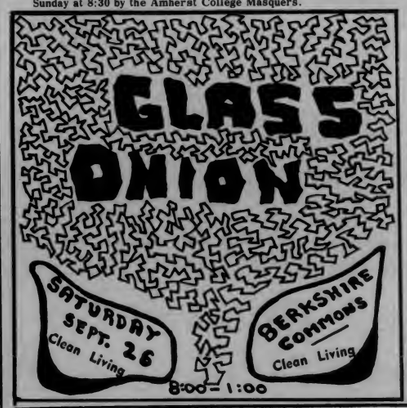
DOWNHILL RACER

A semi-documentary on skiing, with Robert Redford, beautiful scenery, and great action photography. An "Endless Summer" for skiers.

THE LOVES OF ISADORA

Vanessa Redgrave gives a stunning portrayal of the controversial American dancer Isadora Duncan in this film directed by Karel Reisz ("Morgan"). Part of Smith College's Foreign Film Series Saturday evening at 7 and 9:30, Sage Hall, Smith College.

MEDIUM COOL



A semi-documentary film dealing with the relationship between a dispassionate cameraman and a girl from Appalachia poverty against the background of the Democratic National Convention in Chicago, 1968. Critically acclaimed as one of the best films of last year.

THEY CALL ME, MISTER TIBBS!

Sidney Poiter recreates Virgil Tibbs, the black detective of "In the Heat of the Night" in this murder mystery.

The festivities take a turn for the sinister in "The Birthday Party" by Harold Pinter, as Graham Brown (AC '73) and Josh Karter (AC '71), try to keep Ken Hoxsie (AC '72) from strangling Elaine Bromka (Smith '72). This famous "comedy of menace" will be repeated this Friday, Saturday and Sunday at 8:30 by the Amherst College Masquers.

WEEKEND WITH THE BABYSITTER

A skin-flick and only rated "R" at that.

CIVILIZATION (1916)

One of the pioneer anti-war films of all time dealing with the Christ-theme in a World War I setting. The first film of the UMass Film Study Series, for subscription ticket holders only.

SOMETHING FOR EVERYONE

A perverse fairy tale about an amoral young man who moves in on, then takes over the world's richest family. Featuring Angela Lansbury and Michael York, directed by Broadway's boy wonder producer-director Harold Prince.

Theatre Opens Season Oct. 21

"All the King's Men, by Robert Penn Warren, marks the beginning of the 1970-71 season of the University of Massachusetts Theatre. "All the King's Men," a version of the Pulitzer-Prize winning novel is under the direction of Harry Mahnken, and will be performed October 21-24.

"All the King's Men," which had a highly successful Off-Broadway run during the 1959 season, has been described as a rich and subtle study of man in society. Robert Penn Warren, through a semi-autobiographical study, makes a stimulating inquiry into the question of what is right and what is wrong.

Willie Stark begins his political career with nothing but purity in his heart. Discovering that he is being used by a cynical machine, he adopts their methods and presently he is in control of the state. By resorting to corrupt methods he accomplished things for the people that were only abstract ideals when he was campaigning honestly. As a portrait of politics, this is an effective and provocative piece.

• • • • •

The second production, "In White America," will be directed by Vincent Brann, and will run November 18-21. The play, a "living document" for the stage, was assembled by Martin Duberman, a history professor at Princeton. The play -- if that is the right word -- for it -- involves three black actors and three white, plus a singer guitar player for musical background of black folk and work songs, and songs of protest. "In White America" traces the course of the black man's struggle for his rightful place in a white society.

• • • • •

In December, the University Theatre will present a loose-limbed farcical comedy, "The Clouds" by Aristophanes. Directed by Gary Stewart, the comedy focuses a wicked attack on educational practices and institutions. The main target is Sokrates, whose major academic achievement is a cogent scholarly analysis of a flatulent flea.

• • • • •

Marya Bednarik will direct the March production of "The Country Wife," by William Wycherley. This seventeenth century "Bob, Carol, Ted, Alice" is a satire on the morals and mores of a social order corroded by deceit. The play dramatizes a society governed by middle age figures who have replaced honor with self interest, truth with hypocricy and affection, reality with illusion, and love with sexual appetite.

• • • • •

"Major Barbara," by Bernard Shaw will open April 14, under the direction of Doris Abramson. The comedy, first produced in 1905, is a dramatized discussion or debate attacking the problem of organized charity.

It is the story of Barbara Undershaft, who, feeling that the evils of the present system must be remedied, joins the Salvation Army and becomes anti-capitalistic. She is opposed by her father, a munitions king and armament manufacturer, who encourages the development of a capitalistic society indifferent to spiritual values. Shaw's ideas on subjects such as poverty, idealism, and generation gap still prove interesting to us after 65 years.

• • • • •

The season will conclude in May with "Does the Tiger Wear a Necktie," by Don Petersen. This contemporary drama, directed by James Young, confronts life in a drug rehabilitation center. The addicts are urban teen-agers. Trying to understand them is their English teacher, Mr. Winters. The beat is now, as hopelessness and hope mingle when the kids try to realistically consider living "out there."

• • • • •

In addition to the above productions, the University Theatre will produce a play for young audiences. Dorothy Aldrich, Instructor of the Children's Theatre will direct "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," by James Norris.

This well-loved take from THE ARABIAN NIGHTS, is the story of the poor tailor's son, who, caught in a swirl of Genies and their magical doings, circumvents a scolding mother and a grasping sultan, and outwits the wicked magician and wins riches and a beautiful princess. It is scheduled for production March 18-20.

All plays will be performed in Bartlett Auditorium at UMass. Each play will be performed four consecutive nights, and all performances are scheduled to begin at 8:30. This year there will be no reserved seats, but tickets may still be reserved at the box office. Admission price is $1.75 for all seats.

Two cast members from "To Be Young Gifted and Black" are shown above rehearsing a scene. The off-Broadway hit of last season deals with the life and talents of writer Lorraine Hansberry.

Road Show Starts Here

Three performances of TO BE YOUNG, GIFTED AND BLACK will open the Fine Arts Council's theatre season this weekend.

The play is scheduled for Bowker Auditorium today and Saturday at 8, with a special matinee to be offered Saturday afternoon at 2:30.

One of the longest running off-Broadway shows last season, the play is the story of the distinguished Black writer, Lorraine Hansberry. When Miss Hansberry died of cancer five years ago, her husband, Robert Nemiroff, compiled notes, letters and diary remarks to perpetuate her memory.

That Nemiroff was successful in this venture is a foregone conclusion, inasmuch as TO BE YOUNG, GIFTED AND BLACK was a sensational hit. It kicks off a national tour with the UMass performance. Critical acclaim for this show has been enormous. Typical of the rave notices which have accompanied performances is Nat Hentoff, writing in The New York Times: "An extraordinary achievement! Probing, celebrating, hoping, laughing, despairing and moving on... a thrust of spirit."

Reserved tickets for these performances are priced at $1.50 for UMass undergraduates; $2.00 for UMass graduate students and other students; $2.50 for UMass faculty and staff members; and $3.00 for the general public. They may be obtained at the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall.

News Analysis

Nixon's Men Play With Imbalance Figures

WASHINGTON - Every autumn in recent years there has been some confusion about how much desegregation has been achieved in Southern schools. The trouble arises from the complexity of the subject and conflicting interpretations by those involved.

This year there is more than the usual amount of uncertainty because the Nixon Administration has changed the method of reporting what happens. Rather than enumerating the number of children of each race who are in school together, as was done in the past, the Administration is now listing the number of districts that have completed the legal requirements for desegregation.

The new method tells nothing about how many black schools and white schools remain, about the racial ratios in the integrated schools or about how far the districts were required to go in disestablishing the dual system.

Attorney General John N. Mitchell, Elliot L. Richardson, the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, and Daniel P. Moynihan counselor to the President, among others, have been using figures arrived at under the new method to substantiate assertions of dramatic progress.

The Government does not yet know how many white children and black children are in school together in the 11 states of the Old Confederacy as a result of this year's desegregation. It will not know this until a district-by-district survey, to be conducted by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, is completed late in the fall.

Mr. Richardson said Sunday on the National Broadcasting Company's "Meet the Press" program that "Last year there were altogether something like 28 per cent of all the black children in the South attending desegregated school systems."

"Now the total has moved up to about 90 per cent, " he said. "In other words, an additional 62 per cent."

Pressed to explain what that meant, Mr. Richardson made a rough estimate of the degree of integregation. Asked how many of the three million black children in the South were attending white schools, he said, "The number is roughly, of the total, something like 2.3 million.

"You say that number are actually in white schools or in white districts?" he was asked.

"In Negro schools which are being attended by white children also," Mr. Richardson replied.

In other words, more than 75 per cent of the Negro children are in integrated schools.

A spokesman for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare said there were as yet no figures to back up such an estimate. The figure of 2.3 million does not have much meaning anyway, he said because it does not tell how many of the blacks involved are attending schools containing a very small percentage of whites.

Dr. Moynihan, in a guest column in yesterday's New York Times. wrote that in 1967 "only 4.3 per cent of Negro children in the south were enrolled in desegregated districts."

"By 1968 the proportion moved up only to 6.1 per cent, a mere 183,417 students," he wrote. "Two years later, the situation has dramatically changed. Ninety per cent of black children are now in unitary districts. Many of these contain all-black schools, but the dual systems are gone."

Gage Explains

Health Services Branch Out

By DONNA FERNANDES
Staff Reporter

If any of you have been to the infirmary already this year, you may have noticed it's just a bit cramped. The UMass infirmary was built with a student body of 10,000 in mind.

According to Dr. Robert W. Gage, Director of Health Services, the long-awaited addition will not be ready until 1973. This new addition, among other things, will bring dental services to campus. So, if you have a toothache you'd better buy a big bottle of aspirin.

In the present building out-patient services occupy two floors of the three, with the third reserved for patients rooms. Beside the regular out-patient program, services include physical therapy, X-ray, and allergy care. In the words of Dr. Gage, "The staff is exceptionally fine." About 140 workers, 60 professional, make the staff what it is.

Other programs working with the infirmary include the Mental Health Services, The Environmental Health and Safety Program and the Health Education Program.

Other programs working with the infirmary include the Mental Health Services, The Environmental Health and Safety Program and the Health Education Program.

In what has been called "an unfortunate separation" by Gage, Mental Health Services has been moved out of the immediate vicinity of the infirmary to Machmer Hall. As you may recall, it was located in Brooks House since no provisions for such a center were made in the original plans for an infirmary. The center was moved from Brook when it became a co-ed dormitory last spring.

After making a futile attempt to stay in the area by moving in (and out) of Brooks House, Mental Health finally found a "home" at Machmer Hall. Who knows where next?

The Environmental Health and Safety Program deals with problems concerning housing, food services and waste disposal. Anyone with such a problem is urged to call 5-2682.

The Health Education Program employs a full time health educator, who on request, will lecture and discuss various health problems with groups of students.

All these programs make up the University Health Services which are there for the sole purpose of student utilization - just hope you don't have to!

Free University Plans Sunday Celebrative Gig

Beginning at 2 pm Sunday, Free University will hold its first celebrative gathering of the year by the campus pont. The afternoon event will contain erviro-theatre by the Roadarte Group and live music by Orkestra and friends.

Also appearing will be the traveling ELF Bus which is visiting the area this weekend. Education Liberation Front will be present to share their life-styles with the UMass and Amherst community. A unique combination of architectural politics, education, survival and good life, the ELF Bus and Roadarte bring the abstraction of new psychic lines into 4-dimensional reality which can involve the cement/fence/barrier culture of UMass in inflatables, domes, wine, rice, and skill-swapping.

It's a free gig with an accent on information-sharing and good times, In case of foul weather the spectacle will be held in Hampden Dining Commons, Southwest.

Oxford Summer Seminar Accepting Applications

The English Department of the University of Massachusetts announces that applications are now being accepted for the Oxford Summer Seminar.

The Seminar, to be held this summer at Trinity College, offers the opportunity to the graduate or undergraduate from any field of study to select an English literature course which will be taught in seminars led by notable Oxford dons.

The program, going into its sixth successful year, has previously drawn its participants chiefly from the "four college area", but in 1970, fifty-one universities were represented and this year there are plans to include European students. This mixture of students adds an important dimension to the program.

The Seminar begins June 30 and ends August 12. The student has the opportunity to travel before and after the Seminar. In 1971 study will be preceded by free or organized travel, June 16-27 (at the students own cost), culminating with four days and three nights in London, paid for by the Seminar. The cost of the entire program is $850.

Applications will be accepted through January 16, but the earlier applications have a better chance to get desired courses . Further information can be obtained from the Director, Oxford Summer Seminar, Department of English, Bartlett Hall.

Be Counted

There is some confusion this year over the voting eligibility of students in the Amherst area and we would like to straighten things out and encourage everyone who can register to do so.

First of all, due to the predictable and notorious red-tape-quagmires in Washington, you still have to be twenty-one years old to vote in Massachusetts.

Second, if you have been a resident of Amherst for the past year, and a resident of Amherst for the past six months, you are eligible to register to register. Third, if you are from out of state but have been a resident of Amherst for the last six months, you can register and you can vote. Your vote, however, will not be counted until a law suit, challenging the one year residency ruling is settled. This is called a provisional ballot.

Lastly and the most important point is the ruling that students are not considered residents of Amherst unless their permanent address has been Amherst for the last six months. This means that if your parents' address is given as your permanant address on your drivers license, draft card, or the like, you are not considered a resident of this town.

at all, but we suggest that you register in your hometown if you are not eligible to register in Amherst.

For those students who have been living in Amherst for six months or more and can offer proof of residency (i.e. driver's license, draft card), the deadline for registration is October 3, at 10:00 p.m. Remember, if you register you don't have to vote, but you have to register to be counted.

Camelot Continues

Two of the television personalities made personal appearances in the forgotten part of the State this week, just to let the voters know that they are the people s candidates.

The one called Dukakis came first, visiting the Great State University, and telling the people there how his auto insurance bill had been stolen by the Governor and that birth control legislation is a "matter for the courts."

The one called Sargent came the next day, journeying out from Dover to tell the society of Mt. Holyoke that his auto insurance bill was courageous and that birth control laws should be changed "in time."

The one called Sargent did not come to the Great State University, but this did not surprise anyone, for in the two years that he has been Governor, the one called Sargent has never attended any of the school's Board of Trustees meetings, a board which he is an ex-officio member of.

The people in the forgotten part of the State did not know the one called Dukakis as well as they knew the one called Sargent. Lieutenant Governor candidates are only co-stars; those who run for Governor are the real stars, they get their own commercials.

It is, of course, through the television commercials that the real stars, the ones called Sargent and White, meet the people of the state.

All the commercials about the candidates are really the same. The one called Sargent stands in a wood-paneled room and has this funny accent and this square jaw and that blue blood.

The one called White walks through an open field, hand in hand with his lovely and well dressed wife, his jacket slung over his shoulder in a manner which makes his look athletic, and imagines his family lives on Cape Cod.

All the commercials show that the candidates to have identical life styles. Even though one candidate might believe differently on one issue from another, they all appear the same, image wise, to the voter. They all look alike, talk alike, dress alike, and think alike (we are all told by the tube).

But the ones called White and Dukakis and Sargent are really three separate people, with three separate opinions on most all subjects.

However they all take on the same image to appeal to the different groups of voters throughout the state. They do this because they think that this is the only way they can win an election in Massachusetts.

They all long for the image of the one called Kennedy, and, politics aside, this is disgusting.

Campus Comment

To the editor:

Just last night I witnessed what might be a sort of reconditioning of the normal instinct of fear. Generally, students respond to an alarm pretty readily. But after numerous false alarms, namely bomb threats, the tendency is to become somewhat callous to notices of danger they may hear. We all know now that there have been several bomb threats directed at the dining commons on campus lately. Luckily, all have proved shams. But how many hoaxes must we endure ? And the real question: How many false alarms does it take to make students totally blase to warnings, threats? It hasn't taken too many to create just such sentiments in the students last night as they reluctantly left their dorms when even authentic fire alarms were sounded. It just made me wonder if perhaps we are not being re-conditioned so that we will no longer take notice of threats and warnings. Fear certainly is not regarded as a noble virtue but what happens when the bomb blows or the fire burns?

To the editor:

In view of the abuse the word love gets these days, MDC readers (and editors) may profit from the Bible's working definition of the word: "Love is long-suffering and kind. Love is not jealous, it does not brag, does not get puffed up, does not behave indecently, does not become provoked. It does not keep account of the injury. It does not rejoice over unrighteousness, but rejoices with the truth. It bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things. Love never fails." -The Apostle Paul in his first letter to The Christians at Corinth (13:4-8, New World Translation).

"God Will Save Us"

"When The Pollution Gets Thick Enough, You'll Hardly Notice Them"

TITLE: "Preliminary Report on Effects of, and Knowledge Gained from, the Methodical Search of Dormitories on the campus of Clark Kent University, October 30, 1969, Affectionately Known to Agents of this Department as "The Hallowe'en Day Massacre"

Text: One of the more shocking revelations of the search was the discovery of great drug use on campus, and even more, the callousness which accompanied this use. Drugs of all sorts were scattered about in many rooms, and our alert agents quickly realized the dangerous nature of many of these drugs. Packages were brazenly labelled with their names, so classification was made that much easier. For example, although none of the famous "Acapulco Gold" was found, various substances were in abundance, including "Virginia Slim", and even "Pall Mall Gold". In this agent's humble opinion, these users were definitely all on their way to what is known as the "hard stuff". Only their timely arrest and future rehabilitation by our Enlightened Department of Investigation and Interrogation can save them.

"Even more shaking was our detention and search of one obvious subversive (Instruction Book, page 29, "long hair and sideburns"). This suspect yielded over half a dozen round black discs, one of which was actually in his mouth at the time of his detention and all through the subsequent beatings by our Enlightened Department of Investigation and Interrogation. No laboratory report has as yet been made, but informed sources have been informed that the discs possess harmful addictive properties, beyond the inherently dangerous qualities of the color Black. (The discs contained the letter "S" on the flat side, leading one agent to deduce that this might stand for the "S" in LSD.)

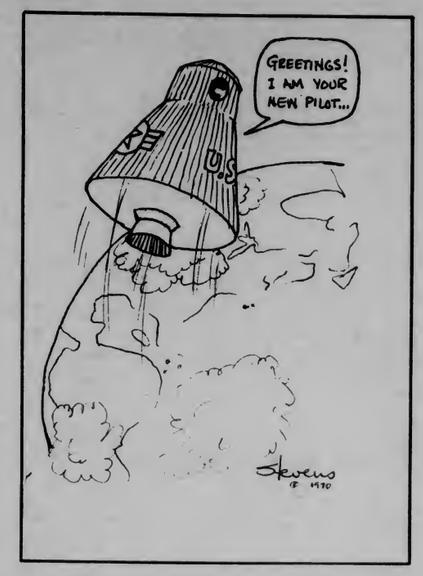
"Of further interest was the container in which these discs were kept. Prominent on the face of this, a cardboard box, were two ominous faces of the worst or "Classic" type (Instruction book, page 48, "long hair, beard, AND mustache)! (Capitals mine) Beyond this, there eyes were of a sort, that one could only call "Beady" (Instruction book, page 67). Below this were the code words "Smith Brothers cough drops" (Now being decoded by our Department of Intelligents).

Shocking as the drug situation was, our agents remained steadfastly in control of their emotions, until one of the later rooms was searched. At this point, two agents began shooting anyone without a crew cut (including, several female students), one shouting, "For God and Spiro Agnew". I must defend these men in this case, including those who became violently angry, and the one that fainted. For, in this room, in an otherwise harmless-looking folder, was a complete collection of the most potentially dangerous political material I have yet viewed in all my years on the force. Yes, the reports you may have heard are true-- the folder contained the complete set of Art Buchwald columns for the year 1968. The rest of us in the room were only saved from total contamination and worse by the courageous actions of the late agent 247D, who threw himself upon the exposed works, sacrificing himself in the name of Sprio Agnew. May he rest in honorable peace.

"(MEDICAL NOTE: this subversive is now undergoing emergency rehabilitation, including massive doses of hot dogs and apple pie, and around-the-clock viewings of old Brooklyn Dodgers films.)

"However, I am happy to be able to end this report on a bright note. Agents gave only "cursory" inspection to several rooms which contained large amounts of traditionally American products. This shows a healthy interest in the economy, as well as having great moral stimulation in their very existence. The products (in this case, cans containing beverages), had a distinctly uplifting effect on several agents, after the sobering influence of other events of the day. As one agent mused while blinking back tears, 'Now, how can you get more American than that? Even the name: 'Bud'! You won't find no long-haired pot smokers ruining their minds in this room.'

"I can only conclude: 'God will save us'."



We sure hope so.

Gallup Poll

Cut Military Spending Voters Tell Congressmen

PRINCETON, N.J. - A majority of voters in all major regions of the nation except the South would like their Congressmen to vote for a reduction in military spending, the Gallup Poll reported.

For the nation as a whole, the latest Gallup survey found that 49 per cent believed spending should be reduced, 10 per cent thought it should be increased and 34 per cent favored keeping it at its present level.

The two groups most in favor of a reduction in military spending were the college-educated and young adults. Little difference was found between the opinions of Democrats and Republicans.

Opposition to military spending stems largely from frustration over the Vietnam war and the belief that the war is diverting much-needed funds from problems at home, the Gallup organization said.

Total military spending (including Vietnam expenditures) accounts for about half the Federal budget, which totaled about $195-billions in 1970.

Question Asked of 1,474

The following question was asked of 1,474 adults in a survey conducted Sept. 11-14 in more than 250 localities across the nation:

Congress is currently debating how much money should be spent for military purposes. Would you like to have your Congressman vote to keep spending for military purposes at the present level, increase the amount, or reduce the amount?

Here are the findings:

	Present level %	Increase %	Reduce %	No Opin. %
NATIONAL	34	10	49	7
East	32	8	53	7
Midwest	32	9	53	6
South	41	12	26	11
West	34	11	51	4
College background	29	6	60	5
High school	38	11	45	6
Grade school	34	13	40	13
21-29 years	29	8	60	3
30-49 years	36	11	46	7
50 and over	35	9	46	10
Republicans	37	8	46	9
Democrats	36	11	46	7
Independents	30	9	55	6

Earlier Surveys Similar

Two earlier nationwide surveys conducted during the last year showed the public favoring reductions in military spending, with results closely comparable to those reported today.

The polling organization said a "dramatic change" in public attitudes on military spending had come about in the last 10 years, based on previous survey evidence.

In April 1960, during a period of relative peace, 18 per cent of Americans believed the United States to be spending "too much" for defense. Twenty-one per cent said "too little" while 45 per cent thought the amount being spent was "about right."

Still earlier, just before the outbreak of hostilities in Korea, more than six out of every 10 voters favored an increase in the outlay for national defense.

Before World War II, in the face of Hitler's growing power in Germany, the public expressed concern over the inadequacies of our defense program and called for greater expenditures for this program.

Williams Stops Politics

WILLIAMSTOWN (AP) - Williams College set limits Thursday on political activities at the school, including prohibiting faculty members from using their college offices as return addresses in political activities.

President John E. Sawyer said neither college services nor equipment can be used for political purposes, and that the school's employes cannot participate in political events while on duty.

He said the rules were set "both to assure the college's orderly conduct as a center of learning, open to all points of view, and to remain within the law and the conditions of its tax exemption.

Coaches' Spotlight

Broaca to Fill Second Year as Man of Two Seasons
O'Brien Sparks Two-Year Success Story as Track Leader

Coach Peter Broaca

By MARK VOGLER
Staff Reporter

While most coaches have their hands tied directing one sport, UMass' Peter Broaca assumes the responsibility of a dual coaching role. The Redman soccer skipper drills his booters in the fall and then makes the quick transition to the hardwood where he primes the freshman basketball hopefuls for a lengthy winter campaign.

Asked if this irregular schedule bogs him down in his work, Coach Broaca replied: "I preface the whole thing by saying that I've always coached two sports, even in high school. Looking at the schedule I realize that there is an overlap of about two or three weeks. However, I do a great deal of preparation over the summer months and organization becomes an important facet. Consequently, it's made me a better coach because I've had to become organized."

In order of preference Broaca expressed a fondness in basketball, pointing out that: "It is a coach-dominated sport" and "You can make substitutions, call time outs, alter the offense, set up the defense, and can affect the outcome somewhat."

"The role of the coach is no where near the equivalence in soccer. My job is primarily to get the best 11 men in their most capable positions and strive to improve upon their skills. Outside of reviewing scouting reports, there's little I can do when the game comes around," stated the UMass mentor.

Broaca originated his coaching career in 1960 at Castleton (Vt.) College while serving a stint as head baseball coach and basketball assistant. Switching his sights to the schoolboy scene from 1962-65, he was an assistant skipper in basketball, baseball and soccer for Northern Valley Regional High School in Demarest, New Jersey.

DUAL ROLE. . . .

In one year as head mentor for the Pascack Hills High hoopsters (Montvale, N.J.), the native from Hyannis tempered a 12-11 mark and a state tournament berth out of a club which salvaged one game out of 20 just a season before.

Coach Broaca feels that the best coaching jobs are done in the high schools. "When a player comes to you in college he's pretty much a finished product. The shaping has been done by the high school coach. The best we can do is get the player acquainted with the offense and defense and hope that he will gel", he commented.

Broaca is approaching his fifth year as freshman basketball coach at UMass. In a four-year span, his teams have amassed a record of 39-29, including a perfect 15-0 slate in 1968-69.

In 1968 he took over the soccer helm on an interim basis with the club compiling a 4-6-1 log. But last season the Redmen rolled up an impressive 6-4 finish to secure runnerup honors in the Yankee Conference.

An alumnus from BU, Broaca hopes someday to fulfill his ultimate goal as a head varsity basketball coach on a major college level. "Coaching is my profession. This is my line of work and I take a serious pride in it", he asserted.

Coach Ken O'Brien

By KEN LITTMAN
Staff Reporter

Coach Ken O'Brien, who directs the cross-country, indoor track and outdoor track programs at UMass, has proved to be one of the more successful coaches in New England during his brief two-year stay here. Over these two years, his cross-country teams have compiled a record of 16 wins and 5 losses, finishing second in the Yankee Conference both years.

In 1968, his outdoor track team finished fifth in New England while, in 1969, the indoor team finished third in New England. Also the first year that O'Brien coached the track team, thirty-one track records were broken.

O'Brien was an outstanding athlete in high school, where he won thirteen letters and captained four sports his senior year. He graduated from UMass in 1962 and was an outstanding athlete here, being the top cross-country runner for three years in addition to setting the Yankee Conference record for the half-mile.

He has modeled some of his coaching techniques after those of his track coach at UMass, Bill Footrick. One of these techniques is the use of varied training areas for his distance runners. O'Brien changes the training schedule from day to day. One day the team may run in the hills, the next day on the track, and the following day through campus. This prevents the runners from getting bored and keeps them in good shape.

Coach O'Brien's first objective after coming back to UMass was "to build a good distance program since one-third of all points in track and field are tied up in distance running." This he has done as his record has shown. He finds that coaching cross-country is quite a bit different than coaching track. There are fewer members of the cross-country team than members of the track which makes it easier to get to know the cross-country runners.

O'Brien has found that most cross-country runners have the same personalities whereas a track team has many diverse personalities. This makes it harder to coach track, but he still finds it very enjoyable. "Without a full schedule of track and cross-country, I'd be lost," stated O'Brien.

A coach is nothing unless his team respects him and gives him 100%. When asked about their coach, members of the cross-country team spoke of him in glowing terms:

Easy to Communicate With....

"It's easy to communicate with him."
"He shows an interest in everyone."
"He attracts runners on his personality alone."
"He is as good a coach as there is in New England."
"He's a great guy. An inspirational type of coach. A lot of kids stay on the team just because they like him."
Need any more be said!

O'Brien has found that most cross-country runners have the same personalities whereas a track team has many diverse personalities. This makes it harder to coach track, but he still finds it very enjoyable. "Without a full schedule of track and cross-country, I'd be lost," stated O'Brien.

Soccer Opens Year With Experience

Broaca Boasts Eight Returning Starters

SOCCER PREVIEW
By STEVE MOSHER
Staff Reporter

When the 1970 UMass soccer team plays host to Maine tomorrow morning at 10:30, a great number of familiar faces will be wearing Redman uniforms. Coach Peter Broaca's team has eight starters and twelve lettermen back from last year's eleven which finished with a 6-4 record and a second place in the Yankee Conference.

Bolstered by some outstanding sophomores, the Redmen appear to have the necessary depth and experience that make championship teams.

The Redmen also have a good psychological advantage going for them in that in each line forward, halfback, and fullback, they have an experienced All-Yankee Conference player. Forwards Lindo Alves and Marc Cantor were first and second team selections respectively last season. Augie Calheno was a first team choice at halfback, and Rick Matuszczak made the second team. At fullback, Paul Slack was a second team pick in 1969.

The 1970 team will have a veteran front line. Alves scored four goals and had three assists last season and also played halfback. The 5'6'', 155 lb. junior from Ludlow is a scoring threat from anywhere on the field which is why he was on the first Yan-Con team last year. Cantor, a senior from Westport, Conn., chipped in two goals last year. Larry DeFelice, a three-year starter, scored five goals and had four assists last season, second best on the UMass team. The senior is from Quincy. Tony Nunziante is another senior, from Bristol, Conn., and last season he assisted on one goal.

Other forwards will be Bob Curtin, a junior from Needham and Abdu Thraya, a junior from Turkey. Sophomores Bill Davidson, Jeff Hague, and Ron Ouimette complete the attack force for UMass and they seem to be quite a group to back up the veterans.

While the offense shapes up as quite formidable, the defense for the Redmen looks as if it will be a harder nut to crack than it was last year (17 goals in 10 games).

There are five returning lettermen at the halfback position. This quintet is led by the teams co-captains, Calheno and Matuszczak. Last year Calheno made three assists on his way to his first-team Yan-Con selection. The junior captain comes from Ludlow. Matuszczak, a senior from Chicopee, has played with a lot of injuries for two years. Even so, he played most of last year and assisted on two goals. Other lettering halfbacks are Joe Cerniawski, a junior from Granby, Augustin Penon, a senior from San Jose, Costa Rica who scored one goal last season, and Dave Picus, a senior from Amherst who notched an assist last year.

Other halfbacks are junior Scott Nickerson, and sophomores Ed Doherty, Vin Grandonico, Matt Rowe, and Art Terzkais.

The final defensive wall before the goalie has three returning lettermen, led by second-team All Yankee Conference selection Paul Slack. Slack scored one goal last year, but the junior from Bedford, N.Y., is much more concerned in keeping balls out of his team's net than putting them in to the opponents'. Junior lettermen Gary Hart, from Braintree, and Dick McCarron, a one goal-scorer last year from Ludlow add to the depth the Redmen need. Also playing fullback will be sophomores Todd Buck, Dave Ouellette, Steve Weiner, and Dave Zandan.

The goal keeping position which was vacated by Tom Malone's graduation has been taken over by junior Greg Hamilton from Amherst, and sophomore Bill Leary from Westport, Conn. Hamilton will probably start Saturday's season opener.

Coach Broaca has the opportunity to make this season, only his second as head coach, one of the very best for UMass. And the Redmen, with captains Calheno and Matuszczak leading the way, intend to follow through on their winning ways.

AN ACTION-PACKED GAME - There are few dull moments in a soccer match, as this photo will attest, and there were few dull moments for last year's Redman soccer team as it compiled a fine 6-4 record, finishing second in the Yankee Conference to perennial champ Vermont. UMass will seek more exciting moments in '70. (MDCphoto by Rich McIntyre)

O'Brien Optimistic As X-Country Season Opens

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

Tomorrow at Providence the 1970 edition of Redman cross country unfolds in a dual meet with the Friars of Providence College. This year's team features the return of a fine nucleus of veterans from a team that compiled an 8-3 dual meet record last season, and a group of sophomores, who as freshmen last year were New England champions, fifth at the IC4A'S, and 10-1 in dual meets.

Co-Captaining the Redmen this year are seniors Ron Wayne and Larry Paulson. Wayne is one of the outstanding collegiate distance runners in New England and after a hard summer of trainiug and road racing has his sights set on completing his cross country days at UMass on a brilliant note.

Paulson was voted as the outstanding runner on last year's team and performed at his best in the major meets, including the fifth best time ever recorded by a UMass runner on the Van Cortland Park course, the sight of the IC 4A's.

Sophomore Tom Jasmin came to training camp in superb shape and will be fighting with Wayne for the number one spot on the team. During this past summer Jasmin and Wayne recorded one head to head victory against each other in important road races and together they give the Redmen one of the best one-two punches in New England.

The progress of Leo Duart remains as one of the big questions to be answered this season. The team's number two man last year, he has been recovering from a knee injury he sustained shortly after a Thanksgiving day marathon victory in Philadelphia. Due to the injury he was not able to train at his usual pace over the summer and has lost some of his competative edge. Coach Ken O'Brien feels that by the middle of the season Duart should be back to regular dorm,· in time for the major championships.

Junior Bruce Blackburn will join Paulson in filling the void left by Duart's injury and the graduation of three seniors. Blackburn was the most improved runner on the team last year and O'Brien has been pleased with his and Paulson's performances to date.

A big group of sophomores and juniors are fighting it out for the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh spots. This group consists of Tom Swain, Rich Tashjian, Bob Sullivan, Don Dunsky, and Arnie Morse.

Two weeks before school began the Cross country team met on the Island of Martha's Vinyard for its annual training camp. Dashing over sand dunes, sprinting through the on shore waves, and running on the beaches of the Vinyard, the Redman runners had their first taste of serious training for the up and coming season.

On the return to UMass the team began daily double workouts and will continue this type of training for at least the first three or four meets of the season which will be the toughest ones of the year against Providence, Northeastern, UConn, and Boston College.

Coach O'Brien feels that by October 13th, on an away meet with Rhode Island, his runners will have hit their stride as a team. Last Friday was the first time that the team showed signs of coming around and by a weekly calender of training, October 13th should be THE day for the Redmen.

There are many outstanding teams in New England this year, UMass included. It's probably the best set of teams vying for New England supremacy in many years and the Redman have eight of these teams on their schedule for dual meets.

October 31st begins a series of major championships for the Redmen to compete in. On this day they travel to Kingston, Rhode Island for the Yankee Conference Championship. The Redmen and UConn are the pre-conference favorites with UNH as the darkhorse. Last year UMass was second to UConn by a point and a reversal of this score could be in the offering on this last day of October.

A dual meet on November 4th at Central Connecticut follows the conference meet for the Redmen. Jim Hall and Steve Ellis, both juniors, and sophomore Mark Goodwin are the runners to watch on this years Central Connecticut Squad. Year after year Central has been among the top teams in New England in both cross country and track.

Franklin Park hosts the New Englands again this year on November 9th. Over the past ten years UMass has finished in the top five in all but one year and this year the Redmen are shouting to make it ten out of eleven years as one of the top five finishers. The favorites for this years race will probably be Northeastern, N.C., Providence, and UMass.

The IC4A's at Van Cortland Park on November 16th brings the regular season schedule to an end for the Redmen. This is the qualifying race for the nationals run later in November.

If any Redman finishes in the top fifty individuals his season will be extended to the nationals and likewise if the team finishes in the top ten it too will go to the nationals. Last year UMass finished as the second best New England team in this competition and the Redman are looking forward to another journey over this most difficult course.

That's the schedule as it stands. It's interesting, it's difficult at times, but most of all it gives the runners the type of competativeness that they strive to meet while practicing day after day, mile after mile. This year its the old mixed with the new on the squad, and Coach O'Brien feels that this mixture could be the winning combination to face this most demanding schedule.

Providence First Foe For Frosh Harriers

By KEN LITTMAN
Staff Reporter

Tomorrow the freshman cross-country team, under Coach Ken O'Brien, will open its' 1970 season at Providence College. This year's team, according to O'Brien, has an outstanding group of runners and should be one of the top teams in New England. Providence College freshman also have a good team and should give UMass a tough battle. Their leading runner, Mark Harrison, is so good that he may run varsity in addition to freshman cross-country.

UMass also has some excellent talent and so far the leading runner is Joe Frontierro, followed by Doug O'Connell, Rick Sevigny, John Rabbitt and Ted Beaulieu. Other runners who have a good chance of breaking into the top five are Bill Lowry, Barron Littlefield and John Nestor. Coach O'Brien feels that any of the top five runners is capable of finishing first and that the internal team competition is so strong that by the end of the season ten or more players will have scored. Most of the team members have been running all summer and are in top shape. O'Brien feels that the schedule should be tougher this year in New England are going to colleges in New England this year because "the best high school runners last year in New England are going to colleges in New England this year" instead of going out West or down South.

The other members of the cross country squad are Rick Carey, Eugene Costello, John Maloney, Jim Morisseau, Roger, Nasatka, Bob Pogoda, Ken Rago ahd Alan Wadsworth.

Demanding Schedule Faces Harriers

by EARLE BARROLL

With eight of the top teams in New England on its schedule, the UMass cross country team is looking ahead to both an interesting and very competative season.

The season opens tomorrow at Providence against the Providence College Friars. The Friars are traditionally always strong in cross country. Last year they beat the Redmen in a dual meet and at the New England's, but were defeated by UMass at the IC4A's.

Two of last years top five return to this years squad, the most noteworthy being William Speck who was the seventh American to finish at the Boston Marathon.

Due to a new ruling, freshmen are allowed to run varsity cross country and the Friars possess one of the best frosh around in Mark Harrison. Providence is always tough on its home course.

On October 3rd the Redmen face their toughest meet of the year against Northeastern. The Huskies have the best nine man group in New England this season. Six of last years top seven men are back including Larry Joseph and Bob Fallon, two of the best collegiate distance runners in the Boston area.

Add sophomores Tony Frontierro and Paul McElroy, second and fourth respectively in the New England freshman championship last year, and freshman Bruce Butterworth who ran 9:13 for two miles as a high school senior to this core of six and the Huskies present quite a problem for any team.

Old Yankee Conference rival UConn welcomes UMass to its course on October 10th. Three of the top five harriers of last season have graduated and the status of one of the returning veterans Rich Spurling in doubt due to eligibility. Scott Carter, the freshman champ of New England two years ago, who had a bout with mono last year may also sit it out this season. This would leave John Cody, last years number five man, as the only returner of top flight caliber. To join Cody will be a group of fine sophomores who placed second last year to the UMass frosh in the N. E. championship.

October 13th finds the Redmen travelling to URI for a meet with the Rams. This is the day that the team is expected to hit stride and unless Rhode Island has come up with some outstanding freshmen, UMass should stride all over them.

Boston College comes to UMass on October 17th to open the Redman home season. The Eagles have improved over the past two years in distance running and are one of the pre-season favorites to make a run at the New England title. Bill Mahoney is their number one man with Charles Diehl, who placed third behind Art Dulong and John Vitale in the mile at the spring championships, running second.

Next come two of the best two milers around in Paul Catalano and Chris Zebal. To go along with these veterans is freshman John Desmond, the New England Catholic two mile champ of last year. Last year the Eagles were the closest meet for the Redmen outside of the conference meet and this year could be a carbon copy of last years race.

Springfield invades UMass on the 20th of October with two quality runners and the rest of the team a question mark. Brad Kron is the Chieftain captain and he'll be joined by sophomore Paul Thistle to give Springfield a pretty good one-two punch. Ed Walkewitz has decided to sit the season out to prepare for the Olympic marathon in '72.

For the first time in five years, Art Dulong will not be present for a UMass-Holy Cross dual meet. Over the past two seasons the crusaders have been second and third at the new Englands and the freshmen from two years ago won the freshmen title. Most of the runners from these teams are back and even without Dulong Holy Cross brings a formidable team to UMass for a meet on the 24th of October.

Maine Hosts Booters For Opener

by ED DOHERTY
Staff Reporter

UMass' Redman Soccer team will take on a veteran University of Maine team this Saturday at 10:30. The booters will be hoping to avenge last' season's heartbreaking 2-1 loss to the Black Bears.

According to a UMaine press release, Coach Paul Stoyall' team has been bolstered by the eligibility of Emmanuel Osode, captain of the 1968 Nigerian Olympic team. Osode entered the school this semester as a freshman, and under a new National Collegiate Athletic Association ruling is eligible to participate on the varsity level. Last year's top scorer for the Maine team, whose overall record was 4-7-1, was Jossy Byamah of Uganda. , The Redmen will focus much of their defensive effort to stopping the Byamah-Osode combination in the middle of the field.

Two other foreign students figure prominently in the Black Bear's plans for the 1970 season. Both Carleton Ming of Bermuda at the halfback position and Ruben Hernandez of Cuba at fullback are experienced performers on defense.

Several Massachusetts players will be performing for the visitors when they invade Amherst. Steve Scoglund of Sudbury and Mike Wisnieski of Greenfield will be in the fullback line, and in the goal will probably be letterman Bill Herland of Wakefield. Rounding out the starting line-up for the Black Bears will be returning lettermen Bob St. Pierre of Lewiston, Me., and Brian Smith as wings for Osode and Byamah, senior Dave Campanelli of East Haddom, Conn., at a halfback slot, and captain Chris Bowman of Pownal, Me.

By SYDNEY OMARR

Virgo and Gemini women seem to always be on the go — here, there and everywhere. They possess an abundance of intellectual curiosity and constantly bombard with questions. If you have the answers you win over these ladies. Otherwise, your quest for conquest is apt to prove fruitless.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Organize thoughts, goals. Avoid self-deception. Don't create disappointment by permitting imagination to run rampant. Key is control — and self-discipline. Message becomes increasingly clear.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Be sure you obtain legal verification of statements related to property. Take nothing for granted. Be perceptive and thorough. If you don't know — ask. Throw away barrier of false pride.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Finish rather than begin — get rid of burden. You need not be responsible for another person — beyond good sense. That is, stop permitting yourself to be used. Build more self-esteem.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Avoid extravagance. Includes not only money, but the going to extremes in various areas. Child could figure prominently. You can be understanding without going overboard.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Trust hunch. Older person displays bit of temperament — and obstinacy. Be firm but also consider age factor. Accent on how well you put your own points across. Do so with a smile.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Be ready for some quick changes. Emphasis on member of family revising plans. This has direct effect on you. Key is to understand there are some behind the scenes exerting influence.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Pay need to special hints. They could result in profit. Be willing to tear down in order to rebuild. Lunar emphasis on friends, desires, income potential from professional activities.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): You may want to expand too quickly. Consider suggestion of Leo individual. Speed does not necessarily fulfill requirements. Steady approach, based on facts, is much more constructive.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Journey may seem a necessity. But there could be second thoughts. There are matters at home which require attention. Realize this and form decision accordingly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): There may be conflict between desire and necessity. Key is to be realistic. Some are anxious to please. In their anxiety, facts are embellished with fiction. Be analytical.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Career activity is encouraged. Be aware of public relations. Refuse to commit yourself to impossible task. Do what must be done — in quiet and efficient manner. That is road to progress.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Obtain hint from Gemini message. Round out project. Leave no loose ends. Look beyond the immediate. Read and write. Be "in touch" with those at a distance. Keep health resolutions.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you tend to be introspective. You are musical. You have recently won over family members. You will need their support. You are entering cycle which spells achievement if you can separate reality from wishful thinking.

Greene, who has never won on the tour, said a few weeks rest in the hot Georgia sun had relieved his ailing shoulder. His round over the 6,711 yard par 35 35-70 Green Island Country Club Course included seven birdies and two bogeys.

NEW YORK (AP) - Muhammad Ali, still out on bail while appealing his draft law conviction, applied for a New York boxing license Thursday and was assured of favorable action at Monday's meeting of the New York State Athletic Commission.

Redmen Seek Greatness at Hanover

Defense Most Contain Indians' Multi-Offense

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

At 1 p.m. on Saturday the UMass football team embarks on what may be the road to greatness or the path to uncertainty as a spirited bunch of redmen challenge an imposing tribe of Dartmouth Indians in Hanover, N.H.

UMass owns a 1-0 record, having defeated Maine, 28-0, a week ago. Dartmouth will be playing its first game of 1970, a home opener. The Big Green have never lost to a Redman contigent with an 18-0-1 grip on UMass.

Also, Dartmouth is coming off an 8-1 season and features 12 returning starters from that squad. The Indians are regarded among the very best in New England and among the better in the East.

The Redmen a re hungry though. They had a very fine campaign in '69, but believe that they can be even better this fall. To add fiber to this acclaimed quest for greatness, they would like nothing better than to upset the Big Green.

Should they falter on Saturday .....well, various questions will crop up and the quest for greatness will become a secondary goal to that of shoring up whatever shortcomings exist.

"What will it take for UMass to defeat Dartmouth?" Head Redman coach Vic Fusia answered it thusly: "Our best effort and our greatest pride." He made it clear that UMass can not afford to make the same mistakes that went unnoticed in the final tally against Maine. In this respect, he is most concerned about the offense, which was inconsistent against the Black Bears.

MENTOR OF THE REDMEN - Coach Vic Fusia seeks his first victory over a Dartmouth squad tomorrow at Hanover.

Fusia is hoping to establish a balanced offense against the Indians, a strong defensive team. "We've got to balance our attack. We've got to run right at them and we've got to pass so that they don't concentrate on our running." He warned that, "If we stay with our running game, they'll stop us."

The Redman defense will have its hands full containing a Dartmouth offense that likes to run varieties of option plays. "We'll have to gimmick," the coach said, "We just can't defend them the same way all the time." A basic defense can't hope to stop a kaleidoscope offense. In Fusia's words, "We can't totally stop such a strength, but you can slow it down, sputter it for a while...a long while."

One entity on UMass' side is the fact that the Redmen have one game under their belts; the coach labels this as "an advantage".

When asked how the UMass team spirit was, going into this one, Fusia replied, "We've always had good spirit, but we've got to couple this with performance now."

Should the Redmen come through as victors over the Big Green, then Oct. 3's game against Buffalo might be just another stop on the road to greatness. Should UMass, in its obvious underdog role, fail to win, then the Buffalo game will loom as the Redmen's challenge to get back on the winning track.

SIDELINE SCRIBBLES-Jim Chasey, Dartmouth's senior quarterback currently nursing an ankle injury, is fully expected, by the Redman coaching staff, to be in there playing...UMass' Mike Sawyer will not be able to play Saturday...He was banged up in the first quarter against Maine and has not responded...His replacement will probably be Mark Russell. The split end position in the UMass starting lineup is still a toss-up among Bob Cabrelli, Walter O'Malley and Steve Shubert.

Metawampe's Grid Picks

It must be the air. The Great One, in his first regular season regurgitation last week scored a 7-1-1 victory over those critics who said the injun' mind had taken the route of the Montreal Canadians and the Collegian's wall. 7-1-1, a record fit his scrapbook, a performance lifting the University's answer to El Mouldo to the heights of Munson annex.

But one week does not a season make (Shakespeare,I think). And after a relaxing week spent carousing about the old campus pond swimming with the swans and wallowing with the water rats, the boisterous brave is once again ready to enter the world of the supernatural. So have your cards ready. The great one is about to make you all independently wealthy. And why not. The old injun knows by now. First you took his buffalo. Then you raped his women. Then you took his land. Now you'll certainly take his advice. Is nothing sacred anymore?

UMass football has highlighted the fall scene around here so far but, with soccer and cross-country getting under way this weekend, new voices are being heard. Rugby also gets under way on Saturday and baseball does, too. Baseball? Yes. Baseball.

UMass' fall baseball program, which has drawn over 100 candidates so far this autumn, will sponsor a tournament on Saturday and Sunday at the Redmen's Varsity Field. Teams taking part in the action will be the University of Hartford, Boston College, Springfield College and of course UMass.

The Redmen are entering two squads into this field. Simultaneous doubleheaders will be played on both days, on Varsity Field and an adjacent field. New wrinkles in the playing of baseball will be used. Without any big emphasis on winning, the whole affair will be much like a football scrimmage, a chance for the coaches to get some good looks at candidates for the spring. PLAY WILL START AT 12 p.m. ON SATURDAY AND AT 12:30 p.m. ON SUNDAY.

Double Header On Tap For Ruggers at UVM

UMass' Rugby Football Club opens its fall season this Saturday as twosquads travel to Burlington, Vermont to face the University of Vermont Rugby Club in two games. The UMass ruggers open with a new look and new talent.

During the past week, Coaches Bob Laurence and Dale Touhy tried to mold two XV's from the more than forty candidates, most of whom were new to rugby football. The first XV likely to start on Saturday is an experienced one with Captain John Long leading the squad. Two singular additions providing the UMass ruggers with the strongest backfield ever are Mike Bull and Peter Harrison, veterans of the English Rugby wars.

UMass' forwards were decrimated by graduation losses. All-New England Sam Davidson is gone, the forwards like the size characteristic of former UMass packs, but mobility should be the new trademark. Many promising newcomers will be featured on the second XV. Sturdy forwards Dave Ambrose, Jim Tkacik and Sid Schiff should be pushing for berths on the first XV by mid-season. The strong first backfield forces strong competition between novice backs like Mike Donnell, Cy Baines and veterans Jack Hamilton, and Peter Clarkson.

UMass fall rugby season features nine games, four at home, all on Saturdays. The first home game will be on October 3, when New England Champion Beacon Hill travels to Amherst. The home games will be played as in the past on the Rugby Field west of Boyden. The club still welcomes new comers to rugby. Practices are held Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday at 4:30.

PRESIDENTIAL CAMPUS REPORT GIVES STRONG WARNINGS LITTLE ACTION IS EXPECTED

Scranton Commission Warns of Possible Civil War

WASHINGTON - The President's Commission on Campus Unrest appealed to the administration over the weekend to lead Americans back from what it described as the brink of a chasm in society so dangerous that it threatens the survival of the nation.

The division between established society and what the Commission termed the "new youth culture" generates intensifying violence by both sides. Unless it is stopped, the nation could disintegrate into a near civil war, the Commission warned in its report.

In strong, often passionate terms the commission condemned with impartial fervor fanatical student terrorists, complacent campus officials, brutal law enforcement officers and vindictive acts and inflamatory words of politicians.

The commission, though it had only 90 days to prepare its report, offered dozens of detailed recommendations to universities, law enforcement agencies and government for avoiding or allaying campus disorder.

But what it called its most important recommendation for future action was directed to Mr. Nixon.

Pointedly recalling a theme of Mr. Nixon's inaugural address, the commission said, "It is imperative that the President bring us together before more lives are lost and more property destroyed and more universities disrupted."

According to an aide, the President told the commissioners, "I can assure you that your report will be controversial. We don't worry about that. Worry if it isn't controversial. We don't want a bunch of intellectual eunuchs around here."

Robert H. Finch, the President's adviser, told reporters that the President would not be able to read the report until his return from Europe next week but had ordered that it be sent out immediately to Governors, educators and others.

The report called for providing nonlethal weapons like tear gas to national guardsmen and for rules to ensure that deadly force was used "only as the absolute last resort."

The commission said that peaceful dissent must be defended, even encouraged, but asserted, "We utterly condemn violence. We especially condemn bombing and political terrorism," It continued:

"Students who bomb and burn are criminals. Police and national guardsmen who needlessly shoot or assault students are criminals. All who applaud these criminal acts share in their evil."

Violence, however, is only one part of a dual crisis on the campus, the report declared. The second, a crisis of understanding was identified as the underlying cause of campus unrest.

This crisis of understanding, the commission said, flows from the development of the new youth culture. There is a growing lack of tolerance, a growing arrogance among members of this culture - and a growing turn to terror among a small minority of its members, the commission said. It continued:

"At the same time, many Americans have reacted to this emerging culture with an intolerance of their own. Distinctive dress alone is enough to draw insult and abuse. Some even say that when dissenters are killed, they have brought death upon themselves."

Addressing those on both sides of this division, the commission said:

"If this crisis of understanding endures, the very survival of this nation will be threatened. A nation driven to use the weapons of war upon its youth is a nation on the edge of chaos."

"A nation that has lost the allegiance of part of its youth is a nation that has lost part of its future.

"A nation whose young have become intolerant of diversity, intolerant of the rest of its citizenry and intolerant of all traditional values simply because they are traditional, has no generation worthy or capable of assuming leadership in the years to come."

The commission addressed a series of issues commonly regarded as causes of student unrest and the war in Southeast Asia, racial injustice, unresponsive universities and student perceptions of government repression.

See related Editorial On Page 8

The war must end, the report said, social justice must be realized, universities must be reformed and Government must take care to avoid appearing repressive.

But these actions, however necessary, would only allay, not remedy the fundamental cause of crisis, according to the commission. That cause, the great and growing gulf between the new culture and the old, is intensified but not created by issues like Vietnam, the commission said.

The members of the new youth culture are "part of the first generation of middle-class Americans to grow up in the post-depression American welfare state under the tutelage of a parental generation which embodied the distinctive moral vision of modern liberalism," the report said. It continued:

"The children, brought up in conditions of affluence and freedom from wordly struggle, began to live what their parents mostly preached. And as they brought their parents high minded ideals to bear upon American society in a thorough-going way, their vision of that society changed radically."

These young people, the commission said, are not only idealistic but also contemptuous of history and past experience and distrustful of liberal democracy. Such characteristics turn the puzzlement of older citizens into anger, the commission said, continuing.

"Hostilities then intensify, the likehood of violence and death increases, and civil society can dis integrate into a brutal war of each against all.

"We emphasize that the nation is not now in any such condition but we must also warn that it could come to that if the escalation of hostility and fear does not stop."

The only way to bring about thath that halt is through a period of reconciliation - for which Presidential leadership is a critical necessity, the commission said it explained.

Only the President can offer the compassionate, reconciling moral leadership that can bring the country together again. Only the President has the platform and prestige to urge all Americans, at once to step back from the battle lines into which they are forming.

"Only the President by example and by instruction can effectively calm the rhetoric of both public officials and protesters whose words in the past have too often helped further divide the country, rather than unite it."

Student Opinion

Little Hope For Report Action

(AP)-The call for reconciliation sounded by President Nixon's reflects the feelings of many students, faculty and administrators. But responses to an Associated Press check of several college campuses also shows little faith that the commission's report will change basic attitudes or head off more violence.

Many of those questioned said they opposed violence but were indifferent about the report or cynical about its effects. Criticism of statements and recommendations came from both right and left.

"The commission says that both the police and the students are a radical female student at the typical, balanced, liberal cop out."

The student, who did not want to be identified, predicted more turmoil for Wisconsin, where an increasingly violent series of disturbances culminated Aug. 24 in a bombing that killed a graduate researcher.

"They didn't have to go to all that work for this report. They just wrote what everybody knows," said Kathy White, 20, at the Berkeley campus of the University of California.

On the other hand a University of Georgia junior who called himself "a semiretired activist" said that if the commission's recommendations are followed the situation could improve appreciably."

"If we could see some genuine efforts on the part of the President to do some of the things he said he is going to do, then people would support him," said that student, Dan Eavenson of Atlanta.

The nine member commission, in its report Saturday, declared campuses reflect a double crisis in American society-a blame applicable to both sides.

It urged all Americans to "draw back from the brink" of near civil war and addressed itself specifically to elected officials, law enforcement officers, university staff and students. It said solving the crisis would require great moral leadership on the part of President Nixon.

"The commission's report is great, but it will have no effect on this campus," said American History Prof. William O'Neill at the University of Wisconsin.

"The commission soundly recommended steps to isolate the small hard core of totally dissatisfied radicals from the infinitely larger number of sympathizers," O'Neill said. "But presidents appoint commissions to satisfy critics, not to provide an action program."

"Nixon appointed this commission to pacify the public, not to listen to it," said John Emshwiller, 20, a Berkeley student who calls himself a moderate.

Educators tended to be more enthusiastic than students. Clark Kerr, chairman of the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education and former President of the University of California, said: "I think it's very well thought out, very well expressed and also very valid..Ithink valid...I think it's easily the best report on the subject that's been made in this or any other country."

Precissionettes Lose UMass Funding

Seek Other Financial Support

By BERNARD BLAIN
Staff Reporter

The University is about to lose its much publicized woman's drill team because the Student Senate cut its operating budget from a high of $6,000 three years ago to $887 last year, and refused to fund the group at all for the coming year.

The fund cut went virtually unnoticed in the University community.

According to Linda Wisiniowski, the commander of the group, the Student Senate has consistently cut their budget due to the reasoning that "the Precissionnettes are a small interest group and therefore, don't benefit each individual student on campus."

However, this women's drill team has reaped publicity for U-Mass continually beginning in 1968 placing first in New England competition and second in national competition at the Cherry Blossom Festival at Washington, D.C.

Commenting on the Precissionnettes, Head of the Alumni Association, Mr. Johnston remarked, "The Precissionnettes are a worthwhile organization and are getting hozed." He continued saying that with the separation of the drill team from the University band in 1963 because of the growth of both the band and the drill team, the team has been supported by Student Senate funds. Financial support is not their only problem. He said, "The drill team has to request time from the band to perform at half-time during U-Mass football games." According to Mr. Johnston, this isn't always an easy task and in order to get an extension of the normal half-time period it requires NCAA permission which is also difficult to obtain.

Other universities seem to think highly of the Precisionnettes. Information received by Miss Wisniowski finds the team invited to such schools as Texas Tech University, Ohio State, and the University of Connecticut while in addition they have been chosen one of the top ten teams to participate in the national competition in Washington, D.C. In the past they have been invited to schools in Manhattan, and Brookiyn, New York; and Cincinnati, Ohio but each had to be declined because of the failure of the school they represent, UMass, to provide them with the funding they need to even get to the competition.

At this moment, the girls are still representing UMass, but U-Mass through the Student Senate ruling is not funding them. Miss Wisniowski has said that the girls are wearing uniforms which are shamefully old and worn. "The girls even have to buy their own shoes and help to raise funds so that they can make an appearance at any function!" "This is difficult," she says because, "in addition to regular academic work they each practice approximately 450 hours within a 32 week period and asking them to participate in candy sales, notebook sales, car washes, cookies sales and the selling of programs at football games so that they can have a performing team is nonsense."

A former student senate treasurer from the class of '66, Jim Allen, described his opinion saying that he would rather give an organization like the Precissionnettes which allows any UMass coed to join their organization the budget they need rather than to an organization which does not open its membership to the UMass community.

The Dean of Women described the plight of the Precissionnettes as a "shame", but she felt that it is up to the students to examine the actions of the Student Senate and maybe ask for a referendum. Mr. Johnston expressed the same attitude stating that he hoped the students would realize the error of allowing the team to die and call for a campus wide drive to save the No. 1 ranked New England Women's drill team. He also said if such an effort did not emerge he would be "willing to establish a trust fund to process all donations to the team from those who would be willing to contribute from the alumni and other areas."

The team is not willing to die. The commander has reported to me that all avenues are being used to get funds. She said that letters are being sent to selected state senators and representatives including U.S. Senator Brooke who placed a congratulatory call to the team for their performance last year

WMUA Begins Black Community Programming

Tonight at 7 p.m. WMUA will present the first of many productions from the black community of the Five College area. The shows will be done in conjunction with WBRU-FM (Boston) and scheduled by the Public Affairs Dept. of WMUA.

Presented on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings from 7 to 10 p.m. the shows will offer news, reviews, interviews, and music for the black community.

All of the programs done in co-operation with WBRU-FM (Boston) will be produced and engineered by members of the black community from the Five College area.

This week originating from U-Mass will be a look at the Black Panther Party. It will be preceeded at 6:30 p.m. by "Sev en Days", a half hour look at the week in review on the university campus, produced by WMUA's Public Affairs Dept.

At 10 P.M. WMUA will broadcast a debate between the two candidates for State Representative from the First Franklin District, F. James Gensheimer, Democrat of Deerfield, and Jonathan Healy, Republican of Charlemont.

The debate, taped earlier in the day, will be aired as a special feature of "Focus," WMUA's weekly public affairs program.

Tonight's program will mark the first meeting of the two candidates in a public forum. Gensheimer, a Commonwealth Scholar in Government at the University of Massachusetts, and Healy, so are vying for the seat presently held by Healy's father, Rep. Winston Healy, who is retiring from public office this year.

Interested listeners are invited to tune in tonight at 91-1 on the dial.

Chancellor's Coffee Hours Resumed

Chancellor Oswald Tippo has announced that he will resume his practice of holding regular open coffee hours every Monday noon, in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. Time will be 12 to 2 p.m.

The Chancellor's open discussions provide an opportunity for any member of the University community, and especially students, to raise questions about general campus issues, seek answers to particular questions, or to hear first-hand what the principal administrative officers are thinking and planning.

The practice of the regular open meetings with free coffee available to all, originated last year and is credited with allowing for greater two-way campus communication on issued affecting the entire University.

All students with particular matters to discuss, as well as those interested in just listening, are cordially invited to the Monday noon meetings, commencing September 28, in the Colonial Lounge.

Hussein, Guerrillas Sign Cease Fire

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Radio Amman said King Hussein and Yasir Arafat, the Palestinian guerilla leader, signed an agreement last night in Cairo to halt hostilities in Jordan.

The broadcast said the agreement was signed in the presence of Arab heads of state at a meeting called to find a peaceful solution to the Jordanian civil war.

Each of the participating governments represented in Cairo received a copy of the agreement and signed it, Radio Amman said.

It added that this meant the pact had the endorsement of eight Arab countries.

Arafat and Hussein met in Cairo for the first time since before the fighting began.

The 14 point agreement called for immediate cessation of military operations by both army and guerillas and for both sides to pull out of Amman, the radio said. It gave these other points:

All propaganda by both sides is to cease. The army would stop what were described as "abnormal military operations" while the guerillas would be redeployed on the Jordan Israel cease fire line from 1967 along the Jordan River.

The guerilla redeployment was stated to be for the "liberation battle against Israel."

There was a special paragraph for Irbid, the guerilla stronghold in the north and the second largest town in Jordan with 100,000 inhabitants. It provided that "military and civilian conditions prevailing before the Sept. 16 civil war should be restored."

This amounted to handing the town back to the guerrillas, if indeed they ever lost it. The Israelis have expressed special interest in this northern area as they say they do not relish having guerrillas located in the Gilead Heights, overlooking Israel occupied territory. The agreement called for release of all prisoners by both sides and the lifting of martial law.

The pact was given teeth in its 13th clause which said that a violation by either side would be punished by unanimous sanctions by the Arab countries.

Immediate implementation of the agreement would be carried out by a supreme committee headed by Bahi Ladgham of Tunisia and composed of one Jordanian member appointed by Hussein and one Palestinian nominated by Arafat.

Married Priest Says Mass

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) A Roman Catholic congregation openly defied church authorities here yesterday by permitting a married priest to say Mass. Before the priest, Huub Oosterhuis - who was married six months ago - said the Mass in the chapel of St. Ignace Jesuit college, an elderly priest protested and half a dozen persons walked out.

Oosterhuis, a former Jesuit, was invited to say Mass by members of the Amsterdam student parish - students of the city's two universities - in defiance of a ban by the bishop of Haarlem.

In a statement before the Mass, a spokesman for the students' Parish Foundation said: "In this congregation we accept married priests to lead sermons and Eucharist celebrations without further discussion. We emphasize that interchurch conflicts may no longer impede us in this conflict. We won't go back on this decision and ... will accept the consequences."

Italian Visit Begins Nixon's European Tour

ROME (AP) - President Nixon came to Italy last night to confer with a principal ally in Southern Europe and inspect U.S. military might in the Mediterranean.

Nixon's gleaming white Air Force one jet landed at Rome's Ciampine military airport at 8:40 p.m.-3:40 p.m., EDT- bringing the President to the first stop of his nine day, five nation European tour.

The presidential party transferred to a U.S. military helicopter for a 10 minute flight to the Quirinal Palace in downtown Rome for an official welcome.

Guards manned rooftops along the 10 mile helicopter route as 12,000 policemen gave Nixon the tightest security network accorded a visitor to the Eternal City since World War II.

Flying squads of riot policemen with helmets, shields and tear gas bombs roamed the city in pursuit of hit and run leftist youths who shattered windows of the American Express office and shouted anti U.S. slogans.

Police spun their jeeps in screeching pinwheel arcs to disperse several hundred pro-Chinese youth waving red banners.

Police cordons bristled at the perimeter of a 20 block sanctuary roped off around the Quirinal Palace, causing chaos with the heavy Sunday night traffic.

The Italian Communist party, largest red party in the West, scheduled anti Nixon rallies in three dozen Italian cities Sunday, but most were on the neighborhood level.

A total of 25,000 leftists called out by the Communists marched in Rome and Milan Saturday night, 24 hours before Nixon's arrival. There was no violence in either city.

Nixon's visit here in February 1969 touched off two days of the worst street fighting in Rome in years, with one dead and more than 100 injured. But during motorcades in the city on that trip, the President brought out immense cheering crowds that most observers had never seen before in normally blase Rome.

For this visit of the U.S. President, the Italian Communists have selected an official slogan that reads: "Nixon, don't count on Italy."

The slogan illustrates the basic Communist charge that Nixon is trying to use Italy as a lackey and "military base" for his allegedly "imperialistic designs" in the Mediterranean.

Nixon's nine day, five country trip includes a visit to U.S. 6th Fleet ships in the Mediterranean today and tomorrow. Later in Naples, he meets with Atlantic Alliance commanders and U.S. ambassadors from the Mediterranean area, before visiting Yugoslavia, Spain, England and Ireland.

High U.S. officials in Washington have said Nixon hopes to underscore U.S. commitments in the Mediterranean. The sea has become a crisis center as a result of the Middle East conflict and the steady growth of the Soviet navy in the area.

Nixon's plan to review 6th Fleet maneuvers and address the fleet from the deck of an aircraft carrier have been interpreted as being aimed at emphasizing the readiness of the powerful, nuclear capability fleet.

Nixon is expected to seek the views of the Italian government on peace moves in meetings with Rome leaders today.

The Rome government, one of the most left leaning in NATO, has issued a series of recent policy statements on the Mediterranean situation that emphasize both the country's commitment to the United States and its independence.

Rome has called for a negotiated solution to the Middle East crisis within the framework of the United Nations, and warned against any "unilateral" intervention by the United States or anyone else.

It has served notice that it does not believe the NATO defense structure extends to the Middle East battle areas.

Southern California Homes Threatened in Forest Fire

LOS ANGELES (AP) - A huge fire storm, driven by high winds, threatened thousands of canyon homes north of the city yesterday after cutting a 35 mile swath around the populous San Fernando Valley.

An even larger fire rampaged across hills in San Diego County sweeping 35 miles to the outskirts of several San Diego suburbs.

Gov. Ronald Reagan declared Los Angeles, Ventura and San Diego counties disaster areas. They were the largest of numerous brush fires raging out of control for the third straight day in Southern California.

By Sunday, the fires had claimed two lives, destroyed several hundred homes and burned almost 300,000 acres of land. Thousands of persons had fled their homes.

The Los Angeles area fire, while not endangering city residents, reached the fringes of Fernwood, a development with 3,000 residents near crowded Topanga Canyon. The area was evacuated.

The San Diego County fire that started in Cleveland National Forest reached the outskirts of La Mesa and Lemon Grove, about 10 miles east of San Diego. Another finger of the fire approached National City and Chula Vista to the south of San Diego. Parts of the communities were evacuated.

More than 110,000 acres were ablaze in the fire that threatened Topanga Canyon as it stretched from the coast at Malibu deep into the Angeles National Forest near Newhall. Some 161 homes, 126 other buildings and 25 vehicles were destroyed.

More than 140,000 acres were aflame in San Diego County.

The wild winds frequently changed direction just as firemen began to knock down sections of the fires.

Temperatures soared throughout the fire area. They reached 105 in downtown Los Angeles, 101 in the San Fernando Valley and 97 in San Diego.

"It's burning some of the prime national forest timber," a U.S. Forest Service spokesman said of a mushrooning fire in Sequoia National Forest 15 miles north of Bakersfield.

"We have every piece of civil defense equipment from Monterey to the Mexican border on the lines," said Los Angeles County Fire Dept. Hall Hill. "This is the worst series of fires we've ever had."

The fire killed a man identified as Fred Raymond Bedford Jr., 21, of Chatsworth, whose body was found in a ravine near Chatsworth after the fire passed.

A second body, unidentified, was found in a burned cabin at Solamint.

The disaster struck rich and poor, destroying expensive canyon homes and flimsy cabins. In Chatsworth, the Spahn movie ranch burned, leaving followers of Charles Manson, on trial in the Sharon Tate murder case, homeless.

Centers were set up for evacuees. A number of Los Angeles area residents offered free lodging and food.

Smoke rose 10,000 feet into the air over Southern California. Hardly a resident was out of sight of a major fire.

Nadar Attacks Tobacco Industry

WASHINGTON (AP) - Consumer crusader Ralph Nader called yesterday for an immediate federal investigation of what he called the tobacco industry's use of possibly hazardous foreign matter in cigarettes, cigars and cigarillos.

Nader said in a letter to miles Kirkpatrick, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, that glass fibers, ceramic fibers, asbestos, rock wool and diatomaceous earth have been either considered or used in reconstituted tobacco.

While the use of reconstituted tobacco the last 10 years has saved the tobacco industry $200 million to $350 million annually, Nader said, "Such a corporate bonanza has not brought with it any self imposed or governmentally imposed duty to analyze the extent of the health hazards involved."

FBI Captures Fugitive Robber At Airport

(AP) - Stanley R. Bond, one of four fugitives described by police as revolutionaries sought in a bank holdup and machine gun slaying of a Boston policeman, was arrested by the FBI as he attempted to leave this city by plane yesterday, the FBI said.

Vincent Jones, FBI agent here told newsmen the plane, a commercial flight bound for Denver and Chicago, was on the runway and was called back to the terminal. All passengers were asked to leave the plane, and Bond, 25, of Cambridge, Mass., was among the last to get off, Jones said.

Jones said he and Undersheriff Dick Williams grabbed Bond and pressed him against a fence before Bond could draw a revolver.

Local police said the Mesa County sheriff's office had received a tip that Bond was boarding the plane.

Bond, held in the maximum security section of the county jail, was to appear before a U.S. commissioner Monday on a federal charge of taking a loaded weapon aboard a plane.

Police said Bond had arrived here Saturday, taken a room in a local motel under the alias "Barry," and purchased his plane ticket to Denver, 260 miles east of here, with cash under the name of "Mr. Lewis."

FBI agents said Bond's luggage contained "three other loaded weapons, ammunition and several thousand dollars," in addition to clothing.

Tougher Guidelines, Riot Police Greet UC Frosh

(AP) - Tough new classroom guidelines will be in effect and police recently given riot training will be standing by when 28,000 students begin returning to the University of California today.

The very guidelines designed to control radical activity could spark new confrontations, observers say, and the campus ROTC, rising rents, poverty, racism and the war remain volatile issues.

UC President Charles J. Hitch has expressed "guarded optimism" student unrest will lessen this year, but campus police chief William Beall says he believes the university and Berkeley have been selected as an action base by a small number of militants.

"Berkeley is one center of revolutionary activity, and some where radicals will get a good one off," Beall predicted. "It will be put down and it will be costly."

City police have beefed up their stock of antiriot equipment, and both city and campus police forces have sent men to special police schools in recent months.

Campus police have overhauled their security techniques and communications methods. The large plaza at Sather gate - favorite site for student rallies - is now manned 24 hours a day by uniformed officers. Campus police have also added an undisclosed number of 24 hour foot patrols to curb what they call "revolutionary malicious mischief."

Since the 1964 Free Speech Movement, Berkeley has endured more than 65 bombings, sit ins marches, riots and major demonstrations. Its streets have seen tear gas, shooting and rock throwing with hundreds of injuries, one death and thousands of arrests.

To deal with increased activism and crime, the campus police force has been expanded from 49 to 92 members since 1964.

The university Regents issued statewide university guidelines and campus guidelines compelling faculty to hold classes only at approved locations and times. Further rules governing use of university facilities and grounds are expected.

In part, the guidelines say a faculty member cannot allow "the subject matter or format of his course to be determined conclusively by a vote of his students," nor can he allow "the course to be deflected from its intended aim by extra academic pressures, political, social or other."

Faculty reaction indicates a polarization among leaders of Berkeley's academic community.

"It's childish. The guidelines may shut a few people up for a few months but will deepen the crisis," said Reginald E. Zelnik associated professor of history.

Medical physics Professor Hardin B. Jones said: "There's no student movement; there's a faculty movement. It's not natural for faculty to bamboozle students to create a disturbance so they can have a political thrust of power."

Law professor Sanford Kadish, president of the American Association of University Professor, interprets the guidelines as an effort to maintain normal educational standards, but said they will "likely give rise to some friction."

Campus militants, including Students for a Democratic Society - which is no longer recognized as a campus organization - reportedly are planning renewed assaults on the ROTC and three university-connected laboratories which together make UC the largest Atomic Energy Commission contractor among universities.

Students To Elect Math Dept. Advisors

Nominations are now being sought of students to serve on a new Mathematics and Statistics Department Council, it was announced today by Professor David Hayes.

The students who will be elected to the Council will choose student members of two key departmental committees: the Personnel Committee, which evaluates faculty for promotion, renewal of contract, and salary increases, and the Curriculum Committee, which helps determine course content, choice of texts, and examination policy.

A meeting at which nominations may be made will be held at 7:30 P.M. on Tuesday, September 29 in room 165 of the Campus Center. Written nominations are also being accepted at the Mathematics and Statistics Office, 215 Arnold House, until 5 P.M., Wednesday, September 30.

Elections of five undergraduate members and two alternates for the Council will take place the week beginning October 1. Faculty and graduate student members are currently being elected. Both students and faculty on the Council will take an active role in shaping department policy.

The Council was set up in a constitution accepted on September 18 by Acting Department Head Berthold Schweizer after being approved last week by vote of undergraduate math majors. The constitution had been approved by math faculty and graduate students last spring.

Students elected by the Council to departmental committees will be voting members of those committees. Besides the Personnel and Curriculum Committees, these will include a newly established Grievance Committee and the Graduate Affairs Committee.

The Mathematics and Statistics constitution is the work of a committee of students and faculty, chaired by Prof. Hayes, which was created last spring to plan for involving students in departmental governance. The four undergraduate members of that committee, Norman Daost, Mark Leeper, Rocco Brunelle, and Marjorie Stockwell, were elected by the undergraduate mathematics majors.

Also on the committee were Professors Murray Bisenberg, James H. Hedlund, Donald F. St. Mary, Stephen Allen, and Haskell Cohen together with two mathematics graduate students.

UMass Press Expands Output

PAULA MAXIM -
Staff Reporter

Occupying the second floor of Munson Hall, the University of Massachusetts Press, under the direction of Mrs. Leone Stein, annually publishes about fourteen books, in addition to two journals. Since its first publication in December of 1964, the University Press has been developing and expanding.

A non-profit, subsidized organization in an association of sixtynine other university prsses, the University of Massachusetts Press has its administrative contact through the Dean of Graduate Students and its titles are approved by a press committee of twelve, appointed by the Faculty Senate.

The staff, headed by Mrs. Stein, is described by her as a very capable and talented one. Mrs. Stein, who has been Director since the Press's establishment, was active in the start of THE MASSACHUSETTS REVIEW. She is one of the two female directors in the association, the other being at Notre Dame. Among the fourteenman staff is Pat Riley as promotion manager, who was formerly with NEWSWEEK.

The Press deals mainly with scholarly works, including some poetry and some essays. A number of works in black studies have been published and plans are being made for more. Some of those which have alredy been published and plans are being made for more. Some of those which have already been published are ELY TOO BLACK, TOO WHITE, by Ely Green, and BLACK AND WHITE IN AMERICAN CULTURE, an anthology from THE MASSACHUSETTS REVIEW. The first is the story of an "inbetweener," too black to be white and too white to be black. The latter is a collection of essays, including those by Michael Thelwell of our Black Studies Department and by Martin Luther King.

Unfinished Dorms Mean Cramped Student Quarters

The delayed completion of the Sylvan residence halls, due to a labor dispute, has resulted in crowded living conditions for a percentage of University students.

In an attempt to minimize overcrowding, the Housing Office took several steps during the summer months: requests for voluntary tripling were fulfilled, comuting was encouraged, and available spaces in fraternities and sororities were publicized. Implementation of the Room Security Deposit system identified non-returnees, resulting in the detripling of 500 rooms prior to September.

The semester opened with approximately 350 tripled rooms. With some students failing to return, some obtaining off-campus housing, and some filling vacancies within co-ed houses, spaces occurred allowing a reduction of approximately 100 triples. Currently there are 194 triples in Southwest and 57 in the Central-Northeast area. With scattered exceptions, tripling has been limited to freshmen and sophomore males.

Anyone who lives in a triple for six weeks will be entitled to a 30% rebate of rent and telephone if no vacancies exist within the residence hall which would allow for detripling.

It is anticipated that one of the three residence halls, now under construction, will be completed prior to the start of second semester. If such materializes, overcrowding should be alleviated. Those persons who requested the new suite-style dormitories last spring will be given occupancy priority - with more information forthcoming.

Campus Center Financial Data

(Ed. Note. The following is a preliminary breakdown of financing for the Campus Center. All figures are estimates. More complete figures will be available when the Center is in full operation and bond rates have been determined. This breakdown was released by the University News Bureau. It hopefully may answer or raise student questions to the Campus Center.)

Total Cost of the project will be approximately $20.5 million. This includes $15 million for the Center, $4.5 million for the garage and loading-delivery area, and $1 million remaining to be paid on the debt service for the current Student Union.

Amortization--The UMass Building Authority will attempt to obtain financing of 30 years at 7 percent to pay off bond issue. Temporary financing will be used until the bond debt limit is raised by the Legislature and lower interest rates can be obtained on the bond market.

Annual expense--Total cost per year is estimated at $2.2 million. Debt service to pay bonds will require $1.3 million, maintenance and operations $800,000 reserve of $141,000 and Building Authority expense of $40,000. (An additional $250,000 a year for utilities will be paid for by the Commonwealth.)

Annual Income--Income to pay expenses, including debt service, will come from: Student fees $850,000 ($48 undergraduate, $38 graduate students a year. Last year's student fee was $30 for undergraduates. Increase of $18 to $48 nearly quadruples amount of space available to students), hotel revenues $334,000 (based on half occupancy), book store $100,000 food service $95,000 conferees $37,500, garage revenue $337,000 (based on half occupancy, this amount will amortize garage so that no student fees will be used for garage), and $400,000 from reserves (built from student fees in previous years.) First year is not a full year. The student fee may have to be increased next year and the following year because the reserve will be depleted at the end of the next year. However, it is expected that revenue from hotel garage, food service and conferees will grow considerably during this same period, and student fees will be adjusted accordingly.

Other items--all service areas in the Center such as bookstore, restaurants and hotel will pay for themselves plus contribute to the debt service. In addition approximately $155,000 from these services will go to the Student Activities office for use in student programs, and salaries of student activities personnel. Additional revenue from these services will to toward reducing the debt service. No student fees will go toward amortizing the garage, which will be liquidated from parking fees. There is no accurate way to say how much of the building is primary student space and how much is for conferences. All space can be used by students but areas such as overnight accommodations cannot be considered primary student space, since mostly conferees will want to use them. Most space such as restaurants, conference rooms and the ballroom, are double usage rooms, for use by both conferees and students. Students had a major voice in selecting furniture. Of 18 types of chairs recommended by the architects, 17 were changed upon advice of students. Nearly half of the total debt and operations expenses will be paid from non-fee income.

Militant Forum Tonight

The Militant Forum, YSA's weekly educational program will hold a seminar on the 'Revolutionary Potential of the Student Movement and the Working Class!' The seminar will be held tonight, Monday Sept. 28th at 8:00 p.m. in room 809 of the New Student Center.

The discussion will be based on Ernest Mandel's phamphlets; The Revolutionary Student Movement--Theory and Practice and The Revolutionary Potential of the Working Class. Ernest Mandel is the Editor-in-Chief of the Belgian left socialist weekly, La Gauche, and author of Marxist Economic Theory, The Formation of the Economic Thought of Karl Marx and An Introduction to the Logic of Marxism. Mandel has spoken at many colleges and universities in the United States and Canada on a range of topics including 'Socialist Perspective in the Advanced Countries'' and ''The Concerns of Internationalism in the Revolutionary Student Movement''.

Mandel's two phamphlets for tonights discussion, as well as other literature concerning contemporary and historic socialism, Black Nationalism, Women's Liberation, and the Third World Coalition, are always available at the YSA literature in front of the Old Hatch on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.

As the role of the student becomes more politically involved and oriented it becomes increasingly important fo r him to be aware of these political and social changes. We ask all interested students to join us in room 809 tonight; at 7:00 for those interested in the YSA, and at 8:00 p.m. for the Militant Forum.

Program to Aid Viet Children

The Distinguished Visitors Program will present a program about South Vietnam s wounded civilians today at the Student Union Ballroom.

The Committee of Responsibility, the sponsor, is an organization of doctors and concerned citizens who bring innocent young victims of the war to the United States for medical treatment unavailable in Vietnam.

Speaking Monday will be Mrs. Eloise Houghton, the New England executive secretary of the organization, and Dr. Peter Wolf, an assistant professor of psychology at Harvard University who works for the Committee. They will explain the nature of their work and present two movies: ''An Evil Hour'' and ''War's Children''.

Since 1967, the committee has brought hundreds of children to the United States for treatment. These children selected from throughout South Vietnam, represent a small number of those who can be helped. A recent government survey indicates that each year more than 200,000 Vietnamese civilians are being wounded, maimed or killed by the war. A high percentage of the casualties are unprotected children.

The program is open to the entire University community with no admission charge.

False Hopes, Old Fears

As disenchantment with various aspects of American society manifested itself into violent outbursts during the 1960's, the Federal government began commissioning public figures to make studies of why each outbreak occured. Each commission report called for the government to take immediate action to ease the tensions which prompted the outbreaks; each warned that if nothing were done the Nation would risk disaster.

But, time after time, the Government has accepted the reports of Presidential Commissions, paid lip service to the dangers cited and sidestepped taking any action to carry out the commission's recommendations.

For example, the Kerner report, issued in the late 1960's, predicted that if some action were not taken, the nation would be divided into two societies, one white and one black, separate and unequal. Despite the claims of some government officials, no real action was taken in response to this report, and we are now fast approaching the reality of two separate and unequal societies within this Nation.

As the government receives and publishes the findings of its various commissions, and then proceeds to ignore them, the oppressed groups, the "troublespots" within the nation, grow more impatient, more irritated, more violent. In this sense, the issuing of reports and the ignoring of their recommendations only makes things worse.

* * * * *

The President's Commission on Campus Unrest released its findings this weekend and, in essence, only documented what everyone has known for quite some time. Quoting the commission, "We are on the brink of a chasm in society so dangerous that it threatens the survival of the nation...Division between the older established society and the new youth culture could plunge the nation into....civil war."

Blaming "extremists," the commission sees a lack of understanding between young and old building into an unbreakable wall of animosity which threatens to divide American society in half. The commission blames militants, political rhetoric and over-zealous and often biased law enforcement officials as the people most responsible for what it terms the growing lack of tolerance in America today.

The report is accurate in its assessment that the nation is on the brink of chaos because it has been driven to "use the weapons of war on its youth." The commission has also stated clearly that "A nation that has lost the allegiance of its youth is a nation that has lost its future."

But all of these findings, like the findings of all of the commissions before it, were clear before any of the commission members began thinking seriously about the problems they were assigned to examine.

"Only the President, by example and instruction, can effectively calm the rhetoric of both public officials and politicians which have in the past helped to further divide the Country."

Obvious, but true; like all the commissions before it, Governor Scranton's group has implored the President to take direct action, has stated that only the President can really do anything to start solving the problem the commission "defined" for the Chief Executive.

But, as the commission's report was being formally released this weekend, indications popped up that no real leadership from the President is forthcoming, despite the urgings of his own commission.

The Vice-President continues to make a fool of himself as he resorts to the lowest form of political slander in his "campaign swing;" the President speaks of the "good kids," and of the need to strengthen law enforcement before all else.

And a group of Republicans issued a statement the day before the commission issued its report, saying that a majority of Americans stood by the President in "his forthright stand against campus violence."

It seems clear that President Nixon will do nothing to cool tempers; it is certain he will make none of the changes in government policy which have been driving students farther and farther away from what the commission calls the established society of the country.

This means that all the commission has gone is waste a lot of money and build up some false hopes which will probably collapse in a pool of blood on some campus this year.

Since President Nixon seems reluctant to heed the advice of the commission, its report will serve the same purpose of all the government reports before it -- instead of serving as a blueprint for improvement, it will outline the future of the nation.

"We are on the brink of a chasm in society which threatens the survival of the nation."

Justified Representation

In an unnoticed act, a couple of weeks ago, the Board of Trustees authorized a committee to formulate campus-wide Personnel Policies and Procedures and review existing policies and procedures. It was also moved that the committee be made up of faculty members.

It was an interesting action. For, it has been the frequent complaint of the Student Senate that there should be more student involvement in personnel selection and in tenure and grievance action. Perhaps, ye old board, has slipped one through, past even the vigilant lookout of student trustee Glenn Elters.

Last spring, there was a storm of Senate protest over the procedure that chose Provost Tippo as Chancellor and Robert Wood as President. A symbolic dissenting vote was made by then-student trustee Cindy Olken against Tippo's appointment, not against Tippo so much as against the selection process.

Therefore this measure by the Trustees is a little hard to swallow. And it should be acted on swiftly by at least the Student Senate Academics Affairs Committee and in addition by the full Student Senate.

It is too late to get students on the committee. But when the Faculty Senate chooses the committee, the committee members should hear a strong voice of the student body, which is after all only taught (at times anyway) and administered by (somewhat tediously and haltingly) by those who the new personnel policy will deal with.

There should be active student participation in all procedural matters concerning personnel, in their selection obviously, but also in grievance and tenure decisions. It would seem that students who are being taught by those in question, could be the most valuable source of knowledge about faculty, rather than their contemporaries they sip booze with, (or will sip libations with) at the much sought after Faculty Club (or Tipsky's Tic-Toc Club).

Maybe, the Senate, when it gets a quorum, could authorize its academic affairs committee or form a committee to do its utmost to tickle the ears of the Trustee committee.

In other words, the new personnel procedures could be good opportunity to gain the student body a much-needed additional voice in their education.

Students shouldn't want to drink in the Faculty Club, but they must have a say in who is doing the drinking.

Who Is Really Sick?

To The Editor:

"Show me a happy homosexual, and I'll show you a gay corpse."

Mart Crowley, The Boys in the Band

A recent Louis Harris poll reveals that 63% of the nation consider homosexuals "harmful to American life." After the lecture by Bill Baird a few weeks ago, I heard a returning coed state, that homesexuals are sick people and should be dealt with accordingly. Even in the more enlightened community, jokes about "queers" are still told with immunity and expected to illicit laughter from all present. (If you don't laugh, they might think you're one of "them!") In this article I wish to suggest that none of the typical views expressed above are correct, and that the misguided notions about homosexuals held by the majority of our society, and more specifically, by many members of the University community, are repressive and damaging to the individual personalities in our community who possess this stigma.

A great deal of research has been performed recently to determine the "how and why" of homosexuality. I will not attempt to cite all of the psychological findings, but only restate some of the salient facts which will help the average heterosexual understand the nature of homosexuality. Psychologists have determined, that in American culture, sex roles are most powerfully determined in the home, generally in the first few years of life, and that the psychological identity of most homosexuals -- like that of most heterosexuals -- is set before they know it. Social experiences also play a large role in the development of sexual identity. Most experts agree that a child will not become a homosexual unless he undergoes a number of emotionally disturbing experiences during the course of several years. However, when a person discovers that his sexual proclivity is different from the majority of his peers, American society, whether deliberately or implicitly, subjects the homosexual to excruciating torture, harrassment, and guilt due to his sexual identity. Because of the American notion of rigidly stereotyped sex roles, the homosexual must wrestle with the problems of reconciling himself to his own identity, avoiding public censure, hiding his true feelings and emotions, and laughing at all of the jokes and allusions made about "queers." If he is unwilling to "pass" and wants to affirm and experience his authentic personality, the homosexual then exposes himself to negative social sanctions and even harrassment. The notion that two men can love one another with all the intensity present in a heterosexual relationship is considered "sick" by some and approached as a clinical problem. This logic is as ludicrous as saying, "Give him a pill and we'll turn him into a John Wayne." This view sees the homosexual as a maladjusted and socially non-conforming individual who must be cured. All of these notions are erroneous and repressive.

If the University community is truly interested in securing freedom of choice for all people, where they can grow and mature in this freedom, then they must abandon the typical societal misconceptions and attitudes toward homosexuals. They should view homosexuals, not as being "perverts," or "sick", but as members of an oppressed minority. Thus, there should be present on this campus a place for homosexuals to gather, outside of a clinical setting, to help them adjust to their core personalities and all the consequences this adjustment implies. Also, a standing organization should be established to educate people to the facts concerning homosexuality, and secure the human and civil rights of homosexuals as they encounter repressive forces in society. (Homosexuality is a felony in all fifty states, and punishable by death in two states.) Most importantly, however, the University community should develop humane attitudes toward the homesexuals. They should view two men embracing by the pond, not as a perversion or sickness, but as two people exploring in a love relationship the depth of their humanity.

Judical Correction

To the Editor:

The article appearing in the Daily Collegian Friday, September 25, regarding the snag in the Judiciary System regrettably misrepresented the intent of my remarks and the action taken by the Administration.

Both the Administration and the Student Senate have been working diligently to create a functioning Judiciary according to existing legislation so that the present crisis may be promptly alleviated.

At no time has the Administration suggested or attempted usurpation of the judicial function.

The intended meaning of my remarks and the position of the Senate which we believe is shared by Mr. Dahl and the Administration is that it is important that interested students come forward to staff the Judiciaries of Areas East and West in order that students retain and exercise jurisdiction over appropriate matters.

The only practical alternative to student judiciaries that is realized by both the Senate and, I believe, the Administration will be the courts of the Commonwealth. Neither the Senate nor the Administration desires this and therefore we need the support of the students to staff and operate the judiciaries.

Master Plans, Survival, and Change

Did they have too little vision or too much? Can we blame them for not anticipating what reality is in 1970? Should we thank them for leading us to where we never would have been? Is their crime that we have too much hindsight?

In 1962, the architectural firm of Sasaki, Walker & Associates prepared a master plan for the future of a small, but ambitious state university. The Trustees and the Legislature approved the plan, and today, the results of that commitment are seen and experienced by more than 25,000 human beings at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

What happened during the last decade shows a disciplinarian, narrow planning that is evident throughout history. By confining themselves only to architecture and neglecting the humanistic values and sciences (that indeed, for the architect of the 50s and early 60s did not exist), practical function became the omnipresent characteristic of this campus.

For example, the 22-story dormitory towers in Southwest were architecturally pleasing and served their function as sleeping places. But the architects did not and could not draw on the urban experiences of population density (the Watts riot, after all, did not occur until 1964), they didn't conceive that psychology could have relevance to their technology, they did not ask "what is the ideal number of students in a dorm?", and they were ignorant, as many educators to this day still are, of what a residential college was all about. As a result, the dorms in Southwest are noisy and inconducive to study, they're lonely places to live in, coeducational living and socializing is hindered by them, and the concepts of community, neighborhood, and trust are minimal.

The new Northeast dorms also illustrate this lack of thought. The nearest dining commons is Worcester Commons, nearly half a mile away. A better plan would have been to incorporate a small dining commons or kitchen in each dorm.

Part of today's problems are resulting from the initial concept of the campus. Three concentric circles form the map of UMass. In the center, around the campus pond, are central meeting places--the Student Union, the Administration Building, the Library, and general classrooms. Just beyond the pond are the academic buildings. Finally, on the outskirts of the campus are the living areas--Southwest, Orchard Hill, Northeast. Although this configuration is certainly better than a sprawl, it creates ecological, living and educational problems never dreamed of in 1962.

This concentration of buildings in the center has destroyed any aesthetic sm that once existed. We find that it is easier to pave walkways in between buildings than sod them, and the little grass that does exist is constantly endangered by the mass of mobile students and faculty. This lack of green and abundance of white concrete and red brick creates conditions similar to those that exist in cities--congestion, noise, pollution, and constant movement that psychologically and even psysically affects every person. Soon, we will see the campus pond surrounded on four sides by "civilization", with the construction of the fine arts building.

The central activity and concentration by the pond area has affected the movement patterns of students in the residential areas. Students are not able to take advantage of what might be the psychologically restful environment just outside the campus. Their activity compels them to move always inward toward the core, away from the woods and tobacco fields, and toward the concrete.

How did these architectural and environmental problems come about? First, as I have said, architecture in the late 50s and early 60s was not an environmental, humanistic technology, but a narrow discipline. This is today manifested in the various living areas, and applys as well to the parking lots around the pond and on the campus periphery, and to many academic buildings.

Second, the architects of the University received no overall educational policy from the Administration--a policy to which this day has never existed. If the University was to become an athletic-oriented school, acres of mowed playing fields would be needed. If it was to become a high quality academic school, then its growth would not be as great. And if the University was to eventually adopt a policy of open enrollment, then some way must be found to house and educate 50,000 and even 250,000 people---and house and educate them humanely.

We cannot change the past; we should not rue it. But we can set a new course for the future---if the Board of Trustees and the Administration are willing to take a few lumps and admit a few honest mistakes.

1. The Trustees should adopt a new master plan, substituting the central core campus with a new arrangement. This might involve the spacing of academic buildings throughout the campus and near dormitories. Student Union-type centers should be in every living area. As the academic buildings and meeting centers become decentralized, true residential colleges may develop similar to those at Michigan State University where, for example, a science major lives in close proximity to science buildings, etc.

2. An academic policy should be stated for the future. Will UMass eventually have open enrollment? What does it want to do with its now projected 30,000-35,000 students? If the convention center is a money-maker, will the University want to start other income producing industries, perhaps build a factory? What will the effect be to the University if its athletic teams withdraw from the Yankee Conference? Should varsity sports be eliminated in favor of a Hampshire College-type intramural system?

3. The present architectural mess must be modified using the existing structures. This can be done by the soundproofing of dorm rooms, the dispersion of academic buildings by moving them to dorms (as the Math Department is now in Arnold House), the alteration of buildings such as Goodell Library, Memorial Hall, the Old Chapel, and South College into student dormitories, and the brightening up of campus white elephants like the Campus Center, through the use of student art and sculpture both on the inside and outside of the buildings. Other improvements might be to make the Campus Center garage free to faculty and perhaps students so some of the parking lots could be sodded over, and the rubber-coating of the bars in the ceiling of the Southwest Tower elevators for swinging purposes. What can be done with existing structures is infinite, but it requires flexibility and imagination on the part of the Administration.

4. The fine arts center must not be built in its planned location by the pond. Instead, it should be located preferably on the outskirts of the campus, perhaps near Northeast or near the Stadium in Southwest. This would be a first move towards the environmental decentralization of the campus. The present parking lot behind Herter Hall, of course, should be sodded over, and trees should be planted on Haigis Mall.

Environmental decentralization of the campus has its dangers and faults. Unless an adequate transportation system can be developed, it will be impractical. A sprawl spreading over miles of Connecticut Valley land might emerge.

Another alternative for this urban campus in the wilderness is to plan dormitories that house 500-1000 students. But the challenge to be met with dorms and buildings this size is whether or not we can draw upon the experience of the past, and plan them so that they are liveable and workable. But implied in the terms "liveable" and "workable" is academics, and I am not certain that the Trustees are willing to take the risk to explore educational alternatives that Innisfree, Project 10, and Greenough have barely touched upon.

Democracy really doesn't matter. You can get shafted by all-student boards as well as by administration-controlled programs; witness the Campus Center monstrosity which was approved by the students' Student Union Governing Board. The reason why there is agitation for student representation in the University is not really because the students want to be equal, but rather because the Old University has not met the needs of the students, and the students, brought up in a different world, wonder why their obvious solutions are not implemented.

It's hard to change, and that's what it's all about today. If the University is not willing to admit errors of the past and reverse the policies which led to these errors, if the University cannot renew itself, then this University's growth will be the growth of a cancer of bomb threats and bombs, garbage, lonliness, noise, misery, and destruction.

John and Martha

WASHINGTON--Washington has become the setting for several new television programs. The Bold Ones, starring Hal Holbrook, features a U.S. senator dealing with the problems of legislating for the country. Nancy is about a President's daughter who lives in the White House and is in love with a veterinarian.

Another one in the planning stage and written by a Hollywood friend of mine is titled John and Martha, the story of a simple attorney general of the United States named John and his simple fun-loving wife, Martha.

My friend said in John and Martha he hopes to answer the question of whether a man and woman who hate students, professors, educators and Sen. J. William Fulbright can find happiness in Washington.

"We're working on the pilot now," my friend said. "It's really a lot of laughs. We open with the Atty. Gen. John attending his fourth cocktail party of the evening. He's talking to a woman and tells her professors are 'stupid bastards' who are ruining the educational institutions. He calls Henry Kissinger, the President's assistant, an 'egocentric maniac' who likes to have his picture taken with Jill St. John, and he blames the Democrats for all the woes in the country.

"Well, what John doesn't know is that the woman he's talking to works for Women's Wear Daily and everything he's told her is printed in the paper. John reads it in bed the next morning with an ice bag on his head.

"You can imagine the flap," my friend said, chuckling on the phone.

"The first thing John decides to do is deny he spoke to the reporter. But Martha has a better idea. While John is putting more ice in his ice bag, Martha sneaks to the upstairs bathroom of their Watergate apartment duplex and telephones a United Press reporter and tells her the Women's Wear Daily story is ridiculous."

I started to chuckle myself.

"Now here is where it really gets funny. After denying what John said, Martha makes matters worse by saying the academic society is responsible for all the troubles in the country, and is destroying the United States. She tells the reporter that professors make her sick to her stomach, and they're a bunch of sidewalk diplomats and they don't have any right to say anything."

My friend was roaring with laughter. "It's pretty funny so far," I admitted.

My friend continued. "In the next scene Martha has the ice bag on her head and she's reading what she told the United Press. John doesn't know what to do, so he sneaks up into the bathroom of Watergate and he calls his office and tells them to deny everything."

But while John is on the telephone in the bathroom, Martha starts calling other reporters confirming what she said.

"The next day John has the ice bag on his head and he reads all the things Martha has added to the story.

"Here's where the thing really takes off," my friend said. "Guess who comes to visit John while he's in bed?"

"John Kenneth Galbraith?" I asked.

"No, stupid. Henry Kissinger and Jill St. John! They announce that, thanks to John, they're going to get married. Martha gets so excited when she hears the news that she rushes upstairs to her bathroom and calls the Associated Press."

"That's great," I said truthfully. "But what are you going to do for the next episode?"

"I don't know yet," my friend said. "But John and Martha will think of something.

"Young, Gifted and Black" Is Uncommon Work of Joy

By ROBERT NESTI
Fine Arts Staff

The University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Council opened its theater season in superb fashion this past weekend when the National company of "To Be Young Gifted and Black" gave three performances in Bowker Auditorium. The play, a portrait of the late Lorraine Hansberry in her own words adapted with great insight and care by her husband Robert Nemiroff, was a rare and compelling experience.

The evening, performed by a versatile cast of seven, consisted of a patchwork of scenes thoughts, events, and impressions taken from this woman's truly remarkable imagination. It was unconventional theater: one which must be more than just good to have any success at all. That it proved so exciting in as miserable a place as Bowker seemed nothing short of miraculous.

The play dealt with the struggle Lorraine Hansberry felt between being an activist or an artist. It followed this struggle from her Chicago roots as a kindergarden rebel through her discovery of the stage at age 17 by feeling and identifying the suffering of a Sean O'Casey character. She felt she somehow had to transmit this suffering into another key, into her own life and her own people's struggle.

Her plays are this result and woven throughout the evening were scenes from them. From complete plays came a very moving sequence of "A Raisin in the Sun" and a warmly funny one from The Sign in Sidney Brustein's Window." Other scenes from plays left unfinished completed an impression that here was a playwright who has yet realized her significance in American theater.

This struggle between art and life unites the play as it did Lorraine Hansberry's life when, a few months before her death, she spoke before a group of gifted, young, black writers and proudly and eloquently praised them and their role in society. Here she reaffirmed her own human spirit while giving meaning to her past and hope for the future.

Within this difficult framework the collective and individual performances of this company were nothing short of brilliant. It seems unfair to point to individuals, rather it be safe to say this production contained one of the finest examples of ensemble acting now to be seen.

The direction equaled the writing and acting. What could have been a difficult beginning was established with ease and a quick pace was maintained throughout, one which ably sustained the play's many moods. The technical crews handled the complex yet effective music and lighting in a manner consistant with the excellence of this production.

"To Be Young, Gifted and Black" was an uncommon evening of theater, - work of joy which moved us, made us laugh, and, moreover, introduced many to the life and work of a truly great black woman.

Children's Theatre Opens With International Troupe

The University Children's Theatre, which presents two plays for young audiences each year, will open on Tuesday, October 13 with the Everyman Players in a new British version of the old fable, TORTOISE AND THE HARE. In March, the second production will be ALADDIN, done by university students and theatre faculty.

The Everyman Players are under the direction of Orlin and Irene Corey, a director-designer team who are authorities on children's theatre and also in religious drama, internationally known for their spectacular staging of THE BOOK OF JOB now in its twelfth year of successful run as an outdoor drama in Pineville, Kentucky. The Coreys have traveled and lectured throughout America and abroad to Europe and Africa. In 1964-65, the company toured Europe and Africa for four months with JOB and a children's production of REYNARD THE FOX.

Orlin Corey is Assistant Director of the Children's Theatre Conference of America and a member of the U.S. Executive Committee for the International Children's Theatre Association.

Following their appearance in Amherst they will take both JOB and TORTOISE to the Bienalle Festival in Venice and Milan, to the All Netherlands Arts Festival for Youth in Amsterdam and the Hague, and from there to London Yorkshire, and Manchester England. They are the first professional company chosen to represent the United States in trouping plays to the International Children's Theatre Association.

Performances of TORTOISE will be given at Amherst Regional High School auditorium on Tuesday October 13, at 3:30 and 7:30 p.m. The play, which appeals through its comedy and its animal characters with very human traits to young people well into their teens will play in just over an hour, and the evening performance will conclude by 8:45.

Tickets for the two shows, at 1.00 for children (students) and 1.50 for adults will go on sale October 1. Details of how to obtain tickets will be announced by members of the Amherst Schools Parent Councils co-sponsors of the show, within a few days.

Spanish Scholar To Teach Seminar

The distinguished Spanish scholar, Damaso Alonso, will teach a seminar and give four public lectures at UMass this October, it was announced by Prof. Irving P. Rothberg, actin, head of the Hispanic languages department.

The seminar will be concerned with 16th and 17th century Spanish poetry, and the lectures will deal with Cervantes and the novel. The lectures will be given in Spanish Wednesday evenings at 8 p.m., Oct. 7, 14, 21, and 28 in 231 Herter Hall.

Prof. Alonso is the world's leading critic of Spanish literature and the principal authority on the Spanich poet Gongora. In addition to publishing several works of literary criticism and poetry, he has translated works of James Joyce, G.M. Hopkins, and von Wartburg into Spanish.

Faculty Exhibit Art

Work by 22 faculty artists at UMass will be on exhibition at the Herter Hall Gallery through Oct. 16.

The exhibition, "Visible Teachers, Visible Artists," opens Friday, Sept. 25. Hours are Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. It is open to the public without charge.

UMass Chorale a Success in European Tour

The University of Massachusetts Chorale is entering its fifth year under the direction of Dr. Richard du Bois this semester. Under Dr. du Bois' leadership, the Chorale has become a highly select a capella choir which is recognized as one of the finest in New England. Last semester, five years of growth in quality and reputation culminated in a three-week European concert tour in May and June.

The tour was arranged through the Associate Consultants for Education Abroad, and included concerts in England, Holland, Germany, Austria, Switzerland and France. The project was aided financially by administration funds, a grant from the Alumni Association, and various fund-raising activities by the Chorale, including a door-to-door campus-wide canvass which elicited enthusiastic student response. Each Chorale member, however, paid for the greater part of his own share of the costs of the tour.

The Chorale was accompanied by Dorothy Ornest, soprano, John Jenkins, French horn, Walter Chesnut, trumpet, and Larry Weed, trombone, all of the UMass music faculty. The tour repertoire included a wide variety of outstanding choral literature ranging from the Renaissance to the contemporary periods. The Chamber Singers, a group of about fifteen singers drawn from the Chorale, performed a selection of literature more suited for small ensemble.

Settings for the concerts ranged from universities and secondary schools to the twelfth century cathedral of Christchurch College at Oxford, and the magnificent Baroque church of the Benedictine monastery at Ettal in the Bavarian Alps. The Chorale was enthusiastically received by both audiences and critics.

Plans for this year include concerts on campus and in the five-college area, a possible performance of Vaughan-Williams' Mass in G Minor, and a spring concert tour.

The River Surprises The Dam . . .

Defense Solid; Final Score Deceiving

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

HANOVER, N.H. - On Saturday, a very very strong dam was constructed for the purpose of holding back a swift-moving, powerful river. The dam was impregnable...until a couple of bad guys named Jim Macko and Tim Cooper switched the direction of the river, catching the dam unaware and, before one could say John Farrelly, the water had found its way through and was raising havoc in the valley.

Eleven UMass football Redmen-Farrelly, Bill DeFlavio, Bill Bush, Bill Sroka, Curt Bristol, Jim Kellher, Mark Leamy, Dennis Collins, Joe Sabulis, Dennis Keating and John O'Neil-and some backup men, built a dam of a defense, or a damn great defense in order to stop a rapid flowing football river, the Dartmouth offense.

They stopped it cold...for three quarters of fierce football action Saturday. But these two guys, Macko and Cooper, were smarter. They avoided the dam: They didn't go after the UMass defense. They attacked the Redman offense, hanging up 14 quick points on the board late in the third quarter. In the fourth quarter, the river ran 13 points past a baffled defense, and completely watering-down the overall story of the contest and Dartmouth emerged as the winner, 27-0.

Macko's strategy: he blocked one of the offense's punts, picked it up, and ran with it to set up an easy Indian score. Cooper's plan: he received another of the offense's punts and ran with it for 73 yards and another touchdown.

At the end of the tilt, in the UMass lockerroom, the atmosphere was one of listlessness. Everyone knew what had happened. Most could explain it. Few Could believe it. Most just couldn't rationalize how the Redmen could be in control of the game in the first half, how they could maintain that grip late into the third period and then how, in a moment's flash, they could be down 14-0 and how they could be there, changing for the trip home, as 27-0 losers; no points to show for an afternoon's work and so many points scored against a defense that performed so well.

When a reporter pointed out to head coach Vic Fusia that the score was no indication of the affair just completed, a quietly pensive coach agreed, "That's the bad part of it." When the role played by defense was mentioned, he said, "I thought they were going to win it for us."

Fusia believes that the team has progressed same since last weekend's rout of Maine. This makes sense; there is no comparison between Maine and Dartmouth. Fusia knows this, "I'm sure we made progress, because we had the game in control for the first two and a half quarters."

And so, two key letdowns by the Redman offense paved the way for an Indian raid and, outside of praise for the defensive unit, nothing much more can be said.

"You just lose on your own mistakes."--Coach Fusia.

DARTMOUTH DIARY-The two brightest stars on defense for UMass were Farrelly and DeFlavio..."Tackle by Farrelly" became a cliche of the public address man...Slashed on a line in address man...Slashed on a line in a reporter's notebook were the words "what a punt!" which was his reaction to one hell of a booming boot that came off the foot of Dartmouth's Jay Bennett...What a punt!...It traveled well over ninety yards before bouncing to a halt....From the line of scrimmage it was measured at 83 yards, but it rolled an extra five yards into the endzone, while the kicker himself stood about 12 yards behind the line...Starring on two plays in the game was a member of the canine population...A great dog; when he walked on the field each time, he has to be brought back to the sidelines by two men, so reluctant was his desire to leave he center of action, or maybe attention...Looking at how UMass' opponents fared on Saturday... Maine lost again, by 48-20, to Hofstra...The latter's Dave Khaus scored three touchdowns on rambles of 41, six and 83 yards... Buffalo, next opponent for the Redmen, was defeated for the third straight time this season, by Kent State, 27-21...The surprising 0-3 Bulls trailed by 20-7 in the fourth period and just couldn't make it back... Boston University set its record straight at 1-1 by defeating Vermont, 48-6, as Terrier quarterback Sam Hollo completed 14 of 17 passes for 233 yards and one score...Rhode Island opened its campaigned by dropping a tough one to Brown, 21-14...The Rams got more first downs (25-20) and more rushing yardage (263-236)

...Connecticut was nipped by Yale, 10-0...Yale scored this only touchdown with two seconds left in the tussle...Holy Cross played its first game at its home Fitton Field in almost a year, bowing to Temple, 23-13, and the 0-2 Crusaders are still looking for that first win...New Hampshire lost its opener to Delaware, 53-12...Delaware is now 3-0...And Boston College ran its mark to 2-0 by conquering Navy, 28-14...Fred Willis tallied three TD's as the game was played in plus-90 degree weather at Annapolis, Md.

Redmen in Control For 2½ Quarters

two potential touchdown passes were dropped by Redman receivers and another threat went by the boards. Dartmouth, however, was not yet throught.

On the next series of downs, Bill Pollock replaced Stetson at quarterback. On his next play, Pollock hit halfback Alex Turner with a perfectly thrown 50-yard bomb down the left side. Three plays later, he once again hit Turner, this time for 31 yards and a touchdown. Pirmann made it 21-0 with 8:35 left.

Dartmouth got a token score a few minutes later when Mike Roberts went over from the one against a reserve UMass defense. That ended the scoring at 27-0 as Pirmann missed the kick.

REDMAN RANTINGS - John Farrelly and Bill DeFlavio were especially effective on defense for UMass. . . On the UMass drive which ended up with the blocked punt, the officials seemed to blow a pass interference call on a Len Matuza-to-Cummings pass. . . After O'Neil had his punt blocked, he lay on the ground for a while However, as he was about to be helped off of the field, he broke away and ran back into the game. That action was symbolic of the way the UMass defense played all day.

UMass Nine Nabs Four Wins in Weekend Tourney

By BRONA SIMON
Staff Reporter

Two UMass teams swept to four victories here Saturday in Fall Baseball practice games against Boston College and the University of Hartford. Hartford was shut out twice, 4-0, and 8-0, while B.C. threatened, 9-8, and died, 13-1.

With 12 8 players to choose from, Coach Bergquist selected two teams of 18 and 20 men: Team 1 primarily veterans and sophomores, Team 2 mostly freshmen. The games were played on a 2 1/2 hour limit, Teams 1 and 2 taking the two baseball fields simultaneously to permit a good examination of the promising players, especially of freshmen, since a new ruling allows them to play varsity ball.

Senior Jack Bernardo pitched impressively for Team 2 for 10 innings, giving Hartford only three hits and striking out 11 in a 4-0 decision.

In the meantime, Team 1 could only finish five innings in the allotted time, and barely got by B.C. 9-8. Singles and walks were the route to UMass' scoring, with junior Hosea Kelly and sophomore Earl Manley both going two for three.

The visitors then switched fields and ran into tough UMass pitching.

Team 1's tall sophomore Tom White struck out ten Hartford players in six innings, allowing only two hits. Not one ball was hit into the outfield. The scrimmage finished 8-0 in nine innings behind veteran shortstop Jim Saracino's five-for-five hitting.

The final match saw B.C. bombarded by 16 Team 2 hits, 13-1. Frosh Ray Baye shut them out with 10 K's for seven innings. Other freshman prospects include catcher Tom McDermott, three for four with two triples, and shortstop Tony Senino, three for five.

Because of Sunday's rain, the second part of the tournament was cancelled. A composite UMass team will play Springfield College here today at 3 p.m.

Ruggers Rap Vermont, 18-0

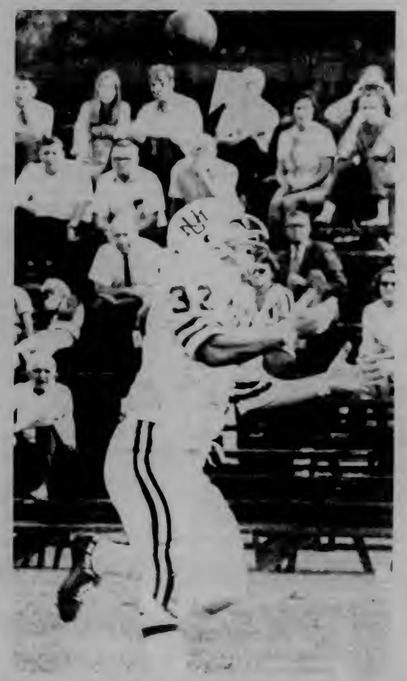
By FRED WYSHAK
Staff Reporter

BURLINGTON, Vt. - After a few disappointing seasons, it looks as though the UMass Rugby Club could prove to be one of the best in New England as it firmly showed Vermont here Saturday afternoon, winning, 18-0.

Mike Bull, a blessing from the English leagues, scored 12 points as the Redmen completely outplayed UVM. The first of Bull's scores came in the first half after a strong lug by captain John Long. The conversion was no good.

Al Brown quickly followed with another try, after a pass from Long. Again, the conversion was no good.

Bull's second goal, an amazing 50-yard drop kick, came on the second attempt of a penalty kick. Vermont had previously been called for offsides, one of the most serious infractions in rugby. Again, late in the first half, Bull made another 50-yard drop kick to end the first half with the score 12-0.



The Catamounts, a bit stunned from the potency of the Redman offense, came back with a much stronger offensive attack in the second half, but were thwarted by the strong UMass defense.

Bill Wiler scored the first try of the second half, recovering a Vermont fumble behind the touchline in a play which completely showed the Redmen's domination of the game. Bull made the score 18-0 when he made another kick which proved to be he last score of the game.

Ruggers Toby Lyons, Mark Chenowith and Bob Dimario should be noted for their all-around play. The efforts of Bob Laurence and Gale Touhy, who played in the encounter, should be commended as every player on the first XV did his job well.

In a second game, which pitted the UMass B team against Norwich University, the Redman ruggers did not fare as well, losing 5-3 The match proved the Redmen to have great depth in the likes of Jim Devir, Doug Knapp, Dave Culver and Jack Hamilton.

The first try of the match came in the second half when Peter Clarkson scored after a pass from Knapp. The conversion was no good. Norwich's goal came late in the second half and the conversion was good.

Freshman Harriers Outdistance PC, 19-48

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

PROVIDENCE, R.I.-Taking eleven of the first thirteen places, the UMass freshman cross-country team scored an impressive 19-48 opening meet victory over the Providence College freshmen here Saturday.

Leading the way for the Redman frosh was Doug O'Connell who set a course record of 14:08 in placing first after a fine head-to-head battle with his number one adversary from Providence. He took the lead with about six hundred yards to go and held it all the way to the finish for his record run.

Places three through seven went to the Redmen to complete the scoring. The runners responsible for these places were Rich Sevigny, Joe Frontiero Jack Rabbitt, Jay Nestor and Bill Lowry.

From the start it was all UMass. At the mile and a half mark only two black Providence uniforms could be seen amongst a crowd of UMass runners. From there on it was just a matter of what the final positions for the Redmen would be.

Coach Ken O'Brien was very impressed with the freshmen as a team. He felt they showed good maturity in running together as a unit, helping each other out on the way. This unity caused the break in the Providence runners that lead to UMass' smashing victory.

Next week the freshmen travel to Franklin Park in Boston for a dual meet with the Huskies of Northeastern University. Northeastern is noted for its usual excellence in cross country, and after the Redman performance here today.

CLUTCH TACKLE - No Dartmouth's John Short (29) did not break away on this play as UMass' Joe Sabulis pulled off a fine open-field tackle, one of many great defensive plays by UMass on Saturday afternoon.

Pats Fall To Namath Jinx, 31-21

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.(AP)-Rookie Earlie Thomas sprinted 36 yards with a pass interception early in the third period and the New York Jets survived a series of errors yesterday in hanging on for a 31-21 National Football League victory over the Boston Patriots.

Thomas, a cornerback from Colorado State, provided the Jets a deciding touchdown as Joe Namath & Co. continued a hex with an eighth consecutive triumph since 1966 over Boston.

Rebounding from an opening loss to the Cleveland Browns New York capitalized on three interceptions and a poor punt for all four touchdowns. Jim Turner added the final three points with a 25-yard field goal late in the fourth period.

PITTSBURGH (AP) - The Pittsburgh Pirates clinched the National League's East Division championship yesterday, nipping New York 2-1 to complete a three-game sweep over a Met club that faded in the stretch.

Dave Cash scored one run and drove in another as the Pirates nailed their first title since they won the World Series in 1960. It was their sixth victory in seven games against the defending world champions over a 10-day span.

"We were outcoached, outplayed, outhit and outscored. It's as simple as that. Colorado was a better football team. They outeverythinged us."

Score Is Deceptive As UMass Bows, 27-0

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

HANOVER, N.H. - In a game which differed as night and day between the first and second halves, UMass fell to an opportunistic Dartmouth eleven before 10,400 fans at Memorial Stadium here Saturday, 27-0. It was the Indians season opener and the loss dropped the Redmen to 1-1 on the season.

If any one thing can be said about the score, it would be that it was deceptive. Any casual observer would probably think that UMass was terrible, especially defensively. Nothing could be further from the truth. The Redman defense played what has to be termed an inspired game and actually controlled the contest for the first two and a half quarters.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1970

Consider these facts for a while. The score at halftime was 0-0. To demonstrate the ferocity of the UMass defense in that half, the Indians were only able to muster one first down, 39 yards rushing and only seven yards passing. Time after time, the Redmen came up with the big defensive play when they needed it. An though the final score might belie the fact, they were almost as tough in the second half.

Dartmouth got its first two scores against the UMass offense, not the defense. In fact, it was the offense that failed all day. However, credit must be given to an extremely strong Indian defense for keeping UMass in check all afternoon. Consistently, the Redmen would drive down deep in Dartmouth territory only to be hit with a big penalty or to have quarterback Ken Hughes dumped for a huge loss on a crucial play.

Especially deserving of credit was the Indian secondary which did a masterful job on the UMass receivers all afternoon. Although the Redmen did complete 11 of 22 passes, they averaged less than five yards a completion. And on innumerable occasions, Hughes went back to throw and although he had adequate time to pick out a receiver, they were all covered and he was forced to eat the ball.

As was mentioned before, the first half was all defense. The highlight was an unbelievable 83-yard punt by Jay Bennett. With the line of scrimmage being the Dartmouth 17, Bennett put the ball into the UMass end zone. Although it was officially designated 83 yards, it actually was closer to 90 since it went about eight yards deep into the end zone.

SUPER EFFORT - Just as UMass' Bill Bush comes through mightily to stop a Dartmouth player, so did the Redman defense, only to be left dismayed, 27-0. (MDC photo by Rich McIntyre)

All in all, UMass controlled the first half even though it was unable to score. The Redmen had seven first downs to one for Dartmouth and 115 yards to 46 yards in total offense. But corny as it may be, scoring is the name of the game and an inspired half went down the drain.

The second half began the same way. Neither team could mount any kind of substantial drive although UMass did manage to make it to the Dartmouth 25 before a clipping penalty ended their threat. But it seemed as if something had to give and finally something did.

With a fourth and 30 on the fifty yard line, UMass was forced to punt midway through the third period. What is normally a routine play turned into disaster for the Redmen as Jim Macko, a second string linebacker, burst through the line to block John O'Neill's punt.

Macko then scooped up the loose ball and jogged down to the UMass fourteen before Dick Cummings could catch up to him. Dartmouth scored two plays later when quarterback Steve Stetson pitched out to John Short who swept around right end for the touchdown. Wayne Pirrmann converted the extra point and finally, with 13:36 gone in the period, the scoreless tie was broken.

But punting was not to be UMass' strong point on this afternoon. After UMass had received the kickoff and been unable to move the ball, it was once again forced to give it up. O'Neil's punt was taken by Tim Copper at his own 27. The reserve safety then faked right, went straight through the middle and then broke for the left sideline and simply outran everyone for the touchdown. It was a 73-yard return and Pirmann's kick made it 14-0 after three periods.

The Redmen still had a chance to get back into it. Starting from their own 20, UMass marched down to the Dartmouth 13. But

Soccer Redmen Drub Maine, 5-1

By STEVE MOSHER
Staff Reporter

Lindo Alves and Duane Brown each scored a pair of goals to lead the red-hot Redmen soccer team to a convincing 5-1 victory over Maine Saturday morning.

The Redmen scored single goals in the first three periods and added two more in the last as they completely dominated the game. The Maine squad had a chance to make a game of it when Bob Conyers scored in the third period to make the score 2-1. But the Maine team faded quickly in the late morning heat.

Even when the score was close, UMass totally dominated play. For the game UMass took 27 shots to just 13 for Maine. In addition to playing an outstanding game the Redmen seemed to have unsolicited aid from the officials who persecuted the Black Bears at every opportunity while ignoring many of the same infractions committed by the home team.

UMass started as hot as the weather and had the ballon the attack until 12:55 when Alves was charged into while in the penalty area. This penalty resulted in a direct kick fron the penalty line and the junior forward had no trouble putting it past the Black Bear goalie. Alves' kick went crisply into the upper left hand corner of the net and the Redmen were ahead 1-0.

During the first period UMass took nine shots to just one for Maine. Bill Leary, the UMass goalie, was forced to make one save; while his counterpart had to stop three.

About three minutes into the secong period, Leary was forced to make a leaping deflection to keep Jim Sacedote's 50 foot drive. This save spurned the Redmen on and, for the next seven minutes, they forced the play into Maine Territory.

The Redmen just missed their second goal as Brown's head of Abdu Thraya's pass was tipped away by the goal. Then at 12:35 with Brown threatening again, a Maine defenseman deflected his shot away from his own goalie and the ball struck the crossbar before trickling into the net.

So last year's leading scorer (nine goals) was off and running again. Although the goal was unassisted, Joe Cerniawski made the play work. The junior halfback threaded his way through the Black Bear team for 40 or so yards before he passed off.

At the half UMass had added nine more shots for a total of 18. Maine could muster only four shots for a total of five.

One of the outstanding threats the Redmen had was their corner kicks. They had four of these plays in the first half. Co-captain Augie Calheno usually takes the kick and coach Peter Broaca sends in his tallest forwards. This play almost worked twice when Bill Davidson, a 6'1" sophomore, just missed with his attempts to head the ball in.

In the second half, Maine briefly threatened to take the momentum away from UMass. With about seven minutes left Conyers scored on a perfectly placed shot from about 30 feet away. Brown got an assist on this goal that was the result mainly of UMass' failure to clear the ball away from the middle of the field.

Then, with about 35 seconds left in the third period, a Maine infraction gave UMass an indirect kick about forty feet from the Maine goal. Maine was trying to stall for the few remaining seconds, but the Redmen beat it to the punch.

Calheno slapped the ball to the left of the wall of Maine defenders, and Brown picked it up and drilled a shot into th right upper corner of the net. This one play took most of the fight away from the Black Bears.

In the third period UMass had five shots and Maine had four.

The last 22 minutes were all UMass. Maine spent more time bickering with the officials than playing soccer. The officials made a fine call when Larry DeFelice was tripped up in the penalty area attempting to get off a shot. And Alves notched his second penalty-kick goal of the game.

With the Redmen way ahead 4-1, coach Broaca placed many of his second stringers in the game, and they responded with a ferocious attack. The Redmen missed a golden opportunity to score a fifth time when Bob Curtin's shot just hit the right post and bounced out.

The final score came with about two minutes left. Todd Buck traveled up the right side of the field before giving off to Agustin Penon who eluded one man with a bounce pass to himself and then sent a screaming shot into the right hand corner of the net.

This opening game was a great one for UMass. It played beautifully in every phase of the game in crushing a Maine team that had beaten UMass 2-1, last year. This performance definitely puts the Redmen in a position to challenge Vermont for the Yankee Conference title.

Next Friday UMass plays at Boston College before returning home to play Connecticut on October 10. The Eagles do not figure to be very hard opponents. UMass has handled them easily the past two years 8-0 and 3-0. But in soccer, a very low scoring game, anything can and usually does happen.

UMass Harriers Tie Providence With Fine Team Effort, 28-28

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

PROVIDENCE, R.I. - Outside of Alumni Hall Gymnasium, a sign on a bulletin board read: "Cross Country Today - See P.C. Destroy UMass in Competition." The final score of 28-28 was quite the opposite of what Friar fans expected, as the UMass cross-country team put together a fine team effort in tying Providence in the opening meet for both teams here Saturday.

With two outstanding performers from last year's varsity and a top-rated freshman runner, Providence was seen as a tough obstacle for the Redmen. And at the start it appeared to be so as the Friars sprinted out in their usual to assume the lead with UMass senior co-captain Ron Wayne and sophomore Tom Jasmin running in this pack.

At the mile mark, Wayne and Jasmin moved to the front with P.C.'s top two runners, Bill Speck and Mark Harrison. Following this group were six more black-uniformed Friars and then, well to the rear, a group of Redmen.

The race appeared to be all Providence's at this point, but during the next two miles of this five-mile race the Redmen made the move that vaulted them into a tie at the finish.

The four leaders moved through the halfway point in a tightly knit group. A half mile later, Wayne began his now-common final stretch drive that has worn down many opponents in the past. On this occasion he moved well ahead of Speck, with Jasmin third and Harrison a fading forth.

While this was happening Leo Duart and sophomores Tom Swain and Rick Barry began moving up on the P.C. group in front of them. One by one these three started picking off the Friar runners.

After four miles the final positions were just about fixed with only a couple of places being exchanged among teammates.

Wayne started his final kick with just under a half mile to go and pulled way ahead of Speck in posting a new course record of 24:00.5 This time broke the old record by almost forty seconds.

Speck was second, 22 seconds behind, with Jasmin running an outstanding race, finishing third. The next two runners in were from Providence, with Swain and Duart following in close pursuit. Three more Friars followed Duart to the finish line, with Barry finishing out the scoring for UMass and the meet.

This was an extremely fast race as the leaders went out at a 4:30 for the first mile. With the hot temperature at race time, the combination of weather and pace took its toll on a few of the runners. One was Redman Bruce Blackburn who went out with the leaders at the start, but the heat got him near the end. His performance was good enough to finish as the number six UMass finisher and receive the applaudits from his coach.

Bob Sullivan, another sophomore, ran well in his first varsity competition and finished as the number seven Redman.

Coach Ken O'Brien was not completely satisfied with the tie, but was very pleased with the overall team performance. He felt before the race that P.C. was much tougher than it showed during the race.

Many things were both noticeable and encouraging during the race. Wayne ran as well as he ever has. He ran well within himself and showed a great competitive edge in pulling farther and farther away from the field once he took command of the race.

Duart, like Wayne a senior, started slowly but came on strong as the race progressed in his first competitive running in nine months. His knee responded well to the pounding it took during the race, giving all indications that his health is back and that his competitive edge is rapidly hitting mid-season form.

And then there are the three sophomores, Jasmin, Swain and Barry. Jasmin was a pleasant surprise to his coach as he stayed with the leaders for half of the race, and, when Wayne took command, stayed with distant ace Speck until the end.

Swain started off easy and ran very strongly over the last two miles of the race. During his torrid drive to the finish line he picked off many of the early P.C. leaders.

Barry performed better than expected, according to Coach O'Brien. His determination over the last half of the race was one of the key factors that gave UMass its tie. Both he and Swain improved the most of anybody on the team over the last week and continued improvement by these two means a bright future ahead for them.

The team on the whole progressed more over the last week than it did the entire three weeks before.

Nasser's Death Sends Tremors Through Arab World

CAIRO (AP) - President Gamal Abdel Nasser, for a generation a shining hero in the violent world of the Arabs, died Monday of a massive heart attack, Cairo radio announced. He was 52.

His death was a political earthquake in the Middle East. It came as Nasser and other Arab rulers were struggling to deal with the backlash of Jordan's civil war.

Anwar Sadat, a longtime associate of Nasser who became vice president last year and now succeeds to the presidency, announced the death of his comrade. All Arab radios immediately switched to readings of verses from the Koran, the sacred scripture of Islam.

"Nasser was struck by a massive and severe heart attack after returning to his home and after finishing the last ceremonials of the Arab summit meeting," Sadat said in somber, sorrowful tones.

The word reached President Nixon aboard the USS Saratoga in the Mediterranean. There was no immediate comment, but the event is likely to have an impact upon the U.S. President's current diplomacy-closely related to the security of the Mediterranean and the Middle East situation in general.

Nasser's passing has to be considered a blow to those who placed hopes in the current cease fire arrangements and the American peace plan formula.

Only Nasser seemed strong enough to convince militant Arabs that negotiations would be advisable. King Hussein of Jordan joined him in agreeing to indirect talks with Israel under U.N. auspices, but Hussein's strength is now in doubt.

Sadat's announcement said Nasser died "while standing in the field of struggle for the unity of the Arab world."

"His memory will remain immortal in the conscience of the Arab world," the vice president said.

Cairo radio said official mourning would be observed for three days, with all government offices, schools and departments closed. Popular mourning will last 40 days.

An announcer gave this version of how the Egyptian president died:

"At 3:30 p.m. Nasser was seeing the Kuwait ruler off at the airport when he felt dizzy and began perspiring profusely.

PRESIDENT NASSER OF EGYPT; DEAD AT 55

"He was taken to his house at Manshiet el Bakry Cairo suburb. Doctors were immediately called in. They diagnosed a severe heart attack as a result of a coronary thrombosis.

"Doctors tried to relieve him, using all possible means including a heart beat regulator. But God's will was supreme and Nasser passed away at 6:15 p.m."

That was 11:15 p.m. EDT. The announcement was made several hours later.

John McCann to Address Student Mobe Committee

John McCann, Referendum '70 coordinator will address the Student Mobilization Committee meeting tonight at 8 p.m. in room 163 in the Campus Center.

Mr. McCann is state wide coordinator for Vietnam Referendum '70 and a long time activist in the anti-war movement. He is a member of Ironworkers Union Local 17 and was a co-chairman of the May 5th rally at Boston Common which protested against U.S. intervention in Cambodia. During the Student Strike action in the five College area, McCann addressed an estimated 6000 people at an anti- war rally held at the Amherst common. In addition to his anti-war activities, McCann has been active in many civil rights campaigns. Last spring he participated in efforts to have State House flags lowered in memory of those students who were killed at Kent State and Jackson State Colleges. Throughout the summer, he has been coordinating the drive to place a referendum on the ballot for immediate withdrawal from Vietnam.

Referendum '70 has brought thousands of previously uncommitted citizens into the anti-war movement. Volunteers have been busy this past summer, collecting signatures in each of the 40 Senate districts for the purpose of placing the question of immediate withdrawal on the ballot in Massachusetts. The referendum has the endorsement of Senator Edward Kennedy, State Senate President Maurice A. Donohue and Boston Mayor Kevin White. Other supporters include U.S. Congressman Michael J. Harrington and John R. Craig, V P of the Mass. State Labor Council.

There is much support among the voters approached so far, but for John McCann and Referendum '70 volunteers, the campaign for a vote for immediate withdrawal from Vietnam has only just begun. Now that ballot status is assured, a massive campaign throughout the state will be needed to bring the question of the War into the homes of every Massachusetts voter. The Student Mobilization Committee at UMass has pledged its resources in support of Vietnam Referendum '70 and is calling on those people who oppose the war to join the campaign for a vote for immediate withdrawl from Vietnam. In the next six weeks, volunteers will be busy distributing brochures and leaflets, containing factual information about the War to the voters of Massachusetts. The campaign will point out that a planned withdrawal does not mean an end to the war. The policy that will end the war is that of immediate withdrawl of all troops from Vietnam. The people of Vietnam must decide for themselves how they want to live. The people of Massachusetts must be made to realize that gradual withdrawal can mean a life time.

Allen To Fill Shapiro's Shoes

Associate Provost Dr. Jeremiah M. Allen, has been named Acting Eean of the College of Arts and Sciences by the Board of Trustees, it was announced yesterday by Associate Provost Robert Gluckstern. Allen replaced Dr. Seymour Shapiro, former acting dean, who is currently on sabbatical leave in Amsterdam.

A native of Boston and a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Duke University, Dr. Allen received his M.A. from Tufts University and his Ph.D. in English literature from the University of Colorado. He joined the Colorado faculty in 1948 as an instructor of English in the College of Engineering.

In 1962 Dr. Allen was named full professor and acting assistant dean of the Graduate School. Two years later he became acting dean and in 1965 assumed the acting chairmanship of the Department of English in the College of Engineering at Colorado.

The director of both the superior student program and the summer session at Colorado, Dr. Allen also served as president of his local chapter of the American Association of University Professors in 1966-1967. Dr. Allen served as Coordinator of Programs for Educational Opportunity at the University of Colorado before being named as Associate Provost and professor of English at UMass in 1968.

In his new capacity as acting Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, the largest division at the University, Dr. Allen will be working toward the implementation of the College reorganization. This year the College will be divided into three units: a Faculty of Humanities and Fine Arts, a Faculty of Social and Behavioral Sciences, and a Faculty of Natural Sciences and Mathematics. Each unit will have its own independent dean supported by a common personnel and business office. This will permit each Dean to work more closely with his faculty and will strengthen the ties between closely related disciplines.

The College will act as a single body on matters of curriculum. The College will also continue to sponsor joint activities such as the College Honors Program, and CASIAC, the undergraduate counseling program.

Orchard Hill Elects Reps

Residents of Orchard Hill last night elected 24 student representatives to the new Community Council to be set up there. The major step in making Orchard Hill a residential college.

It will combine the now separate interests of administrators, faculty, and students into one body. Each will be represented, and all will work together on the council.

Dr. Leon Barron, present Master, will chair the Council and supervise academic, business, and student affairs full-time. He will be assisted by a student vice-chairman, Robert Dewsnap. Area government offeecers will assume leadership positions on the council until scheduled elections in February.

The council itself will be subdivided into four committees dealing with activities, curriculum, services, and budgets. These committees will govern the functioning of Orchard Hill and plan future programs of the college.

Tippo Leaves Unrest To Nixon

By LINDA BALICKI
Staff Reporter

The Scranton Commission Report on Campus Unrest and problems concerning University growth and housing were among the topics discussed by Chancellor Oswald Tippo and students at the Coffee Hour held yesterday in the Colonial Lounge.

Citing as the report's key point that "it is up to President Nixon to reconcile factions" and that the occurrence of future campus unrest will depend "on how he handles the situation," the Chancellor deemed the report to be "an excellent, well-reasoned report."

Commenting on how some of the Commission's recommendations can be applied to the University, Chancellor Tippo pointed out the inclusion of students on various administrative committees but stated "We have made some steps but not as many as we should" in regard to campus unrest and student demands.

One area in which he felt University policies have not measured up to demands is in the area of provision for the free expression of all views. "We did not do all we could have to provide an open forum in the Humphrey incident," was the Chancellor's comment. He went on to state that while panel discussions have been held in past years to allow students and other interested persons an opportunity to express their views, an effort will be made to provide more of these discussions in the future.

Provisions for a greater variety in types of student housing so as to allow students a wider choice in selection of living quarters was deemed as one of the primary considerations which must be dealt with in future student housing planning. While stating that no positive plan for future student housing now exists, the Chancellor stated that a study based on statistics compiled from a survey of students would hopefully indicate the best means for providing the housing which will be needed to accommodate the projected increases in student enrollment. It was also hoped that the current study would also provide information concerning the relationship of University growth to problems in the rest of the Pioneer Valley.

The development of the UMass campus at Boston was also seen as a factor in the ability of the University to cope with projected student enrollment increases. In addition all future plans will be made with an ideal toward achieving a comfortable balance within the 25,000 to 30,000 pupil range so as to allow for full attention to the needs of both the University community and the surrounding area.

With regard to inquiries concerning the decor of the Campus Center, Chancellor Tippo commented, "Everything should be done through the use of art to humanize the interior of the Center." He also stated that plans are now being made to allow students to contribute art objects, paintings or murals in an attempt to make the interior of the building appear less cold.

Yesterday's Coffee Hour which was attended by some thirty students and faculty, was the first in a weekly series of gatherings designed to give interested students and faculty the opportunity to meet with Chancellor Tippo to discuss topics of concern to all members of the University community.

Plight of Children In Vietnam Shocks Ballroom Gathering

By BETH GOODELL
Staff Reporter

A small audience of approximately 75 persons attended the Distinguished Visitors Program presentation last evening of The Committee of Responsibility. The Committee is a private, non-profit organization of doctors and other concerned citizens working to bring innocent young victims of the war in Vietnam to the United States for types of medical treatment unavailable in that country.

Dr. Peter Wolff, a member of the Committee and an Assistant Professor of psychiatry at Harvard Medical School, opened the program with an emotional appeal to Americans not to forget that the war in Indochina is still a burning issue. Wolff fears that the general attitude in this country is that the war is almost over, the troops are coming home, and that there has just been a great victory in Cambodia. He says that people take this "sanguine" view of the war because they do not realize the full extent of the destruction of human life which is spreading throughout all of Indochina, not just Vietnam.

Twice in 1968, Dr. Wolff visited Vietnam and saw firsthand the horrible plight of the country's civilian population. He saw a portion of the 50,000 amputees reported yearly, many of whom are children. He found only one doctor per 100,000 civilians, leading literally to no medical care for serious injuries for the rural population. Saigon, originally a city of only 30-50,000 people before the war, was teeming with perhaps five million refugees when Wolff was there.

With five million citizens displaced from their homes by the war and living in extremely squalid conditions in refugee camps and city slums, the threat of bubonic plague is increasing, to add to the ever-present problem of war casualties. Also, congenital defects are becoming more common, meaning that the genetic inheritance of generations to come may also be disturbed, prolonging the effects of the war perhaps indefinitely.

This presentation by Dr. Wolff of the conditions as he saw them firsthand was followed by a movie he filmed of young children who are the innocent victims of the war. The conditions in which the children were living in just the slums were bad enough, but the pictures of the war-maimed young were nauseating to the viewer. Wolff used this revolting exposure of the children to strengthen his appeal to this country that it not become blase concerning the continuation of the war in Indochina.

Following Dr. Wolff, Mrs. Elouise Houghton, Executive Secretary of the New England Branch of the Committee of Responsibility, spoke on her experiences as the foster mother for a year of a sixteen-year-old boy brought to this country for treatment of burns over sixty per cent of his body. Now that the boy has returned to his family in Vietnam, Mrs. Houghton is working with the Committee to convince people that there is something they can do to help other victims of the war.

The message of last night's presentation was that even though the war appears to be slowly ending, its effects on civilians are of a horrible nature and will require a tremendous effort to ameliorate. Dr. Wolff would not implicate just Nixon, or Johnson, or the Pentagon for all the destruction of civilian life in Vietnam, but would also implicate anyone who is not doing anything to modify the war. One might wonder if perhaps this campus isn't taking the sanguine view of the war denounced by Dr. Wolff as conducive to the drawing out of the war effort and all its destruction, if the size of last night's audience is any indicator of the amount of general interest in the effects of the war.

Krishna Comes To UMass

by DENISE MAGNELL

"A Transcendental Yoga Experience in Ecstatic Taking of the Holy Prasadam (Mercy)" was the theme of the Hare Krishna feast given in Cance lounge late yesterday afternoon.

Most of the program was spent in discussion of the Krishna faith between the approximately 200 guests and the Krishna devotees gathered.

The offering ceremony centered on the ingredients of milk, fruit, incense, and flour and the burning of the ghee lamp (a lamp with five small flames burning on butter).

The basic philosophy of the Hare Krishna is to serve God with what he has provided by staying active. The nature of the human spirit is believed to be activity, through working, raising a family, etc.

A play entitled "The Chantendental Store of the Big Fish and the Little Fish" ended the program. It portrayed man's struggle in resisting materialistic life to accept a more spiritual existence.

The Hare Krishna people view the individual as a spiritual being, with God being the supreme individual. it is thought that since he is the source of everything, there exists part of him in all of us.

"Everything is as it is" was the description of this feeling made by one member of the group as they chanted outside the Student Union earlier in the day inviting people to their feast.

"Not even a blade of grass moves in the wind without God's willing it," he added.

The international Society for Krishna Consciousness (official title of the movement) was established in 1966. Its followers are devoted to a disciplic succession begun when Krishna (God) gave his message to the first disciple, Arjuna, in India 5500 years ago.

The Krishna devotees on campus yesterday returned to Boston (the closest chapter location) after the feast; they hope to spread their beliefs to many campuses in the coming months.

Teacher Evaluation Fizzles

By DONNA FERNANDES
Staff Reporter

The organizer of the first Teacher Evaluation Meeting, Tom Filmore, said he was "slightly discouraged" when no one showed up at his meeting last night.

"If this isn't student-run the program is not worth it because the students are the only ones who can really evaluate the education they are getting. We have money to set up the program, we have the administration's backing, now all we need is student support."

A questionnaire has been prepared that teachers will pass out in class. The students then mark up the questionnaire and hand it back in. It is then collected and a booklet describing the faults and merits of each teacher is issued.

Filmore says, "The student profits by anything like this. He gets to see the percentage of how many students learn from a professor. They know what they are getting before they register for course." He plans to hold another meeting.

Police Dragnet Snares Fugitive

TEWKSBURY, MASS., - State police from Massachusetts and New Hampshire and a local policeman await orders at a command post in drive in theater Friday in Tewksbury during search for an ex-convict William M. Gilday, 41, of Amesbury following a gun battle. Gilday is sought in the holdup-slaying of Boston patrolman Walter A. Schroeder. A Lowell policeman was wounded slightly when a slug grazed his forehead during the exchange of gunfire.

WORCESTER, Mass.(AP) - The largest manhunt in New England history ended at gunpoint but without a shot Monday, when an armed man wanted in the holdup slaying of a police officer was captured and his hostages freed.

Fifty police officers converged on a station wagon at a rotary in Billings Square, blocked it from escape and removed William A. Gilday, 41, of Amesbury, one of three persons sought in connection with the slaying last Wednesday of Boston Patrolman Walter A. Schroeder, 42.

Freed unharmed with the capture of Gilday were the hostages he had held nearly 24 hours-Thomas Huberdeau, 24, and his sister, Katherine, 20, both of Haverhill. Gilday was the third person arrested in connection with the slaying of Schroeder, who was shot while responding to an alarm of a $26,000 bank holdup in Boston.

Still sought in the slaying, which police have linked to a student radical group and to the earlier bombing and looting of a National Guard armory, are two coeds-Susan Saxe, 20 of Albany, N.Y., and Katherine A. Power, 20, of Denver, Colo.

Arrested Sunday in Grand Junction, Colo., as he attempted to take an airliner to Denver, was Stanley R. Bond, 25 , formerly of Waltham. Appearing pale and wearing sport shirt, jeans and boots, he appeared before U.S. Commissioner John Lafferty Monday and was ordered held without bail on charges of taking a gun aboard an airliner and unlawful flight to avoid prosecution in Massachusetts.

Police said Gilday had a rifle, shotgun and two revolvers in the car when he was stopped following a pursuit of about 75 miles by police cruisers and a helicopter from Haverhill.

The station wagon had been reported at various places south and west of Haverhill and was easy to follow because of two blue and white decals with the letter "E" on the rear window.

State Police Sgt. Thomas H. Peterson in an unmarked car along the Massachusetts Turnpike spotted the auto and alerted a toll booth collector to call police barracks.

Officers said Gilday paid the toll when he left the turnpike and headed toward the center of Worcester. Officers said he tried to avoid a roadblock by going the wrong way around the rotary but was blocked by three motorcycle policemen as approximately 50 officers, most armed with riot guns, moved in.

Police grabbed Gilday as he got out of the right front seat of the car. He and his hostages were taken to police headquarters here and then to Boston.

"Police cruisers...converted from all directions," said Costo Leardi, a clerk at a dry cleaning store in Billing Square where the capture was made.

"A state trooper...shoved a rifle or shotgun through the back window of the station wagon and held the suspect at gun point," he said.

Gilday had eluded police all weekend despite a search through the northeastern part of the state and the southeastern part of New Hampshire.

He escaped from a police chase at more than 100 miles per hour and from gun battles in a wooded area and along a highway Friday.

Police estimated they fired 30 shots at him. They said he returned six, one of which grazed the forehead of a Lowell police officer, slightly wounding him.

Police said Gilday apparently hid under Thomas Huberdeau's house in a sparsely populated section of Haverhill, invading the home Sunday morning.

After permitting the family to sleep Sunday night, he left with his two hostages about 7 a.m. Monday. He warned the family not to call police and called back about every 30 minutes after leaving.

Gilday, Bond and Valeri, the three in custody, are exconvicts. Miss Saxe, one of the two sought, was graduated last June from Brandeis University. Miss Power was a student there as was Bond. Gilday and Valeri were to have enrolled at Northeastern University last week.

Boston Police Commissioner Edmund L. McNamara said ammunition and military supplies found in a Boston apartment rented by Miss Power showed "a positive link" with "radical revolutionary groups."

Charles I. Schettland, acting president of Brandeis, said this was "absolutely untrue."

In Grand Junction, Colo., sheriff's officers said Bond was turned in by an unidentified girl they said was not involved in the holdup slaying.

After the tip FBI agents and sheriff's officers advised passengers on the plane to leave. Bond was one of the last to get off.

Officers said he was grabbed and pinned against a fence "and one of the other officers got hold of his gun." Authorities said they found a submachine gun, two other pistols and about $10,000 in a suitcase.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Lottery System Explained

By GILBERT J. SALK
Staff Reporter

As more and more young Americans become concerned about the cancerous growth of militarism in the United States, the question of alternatives to serving in the armed forces assumes greater and greater importance. Men are seeking ways to avoid supporting the abhorrent war against Vietnam, and both men and women are disturbed by the disruption and channeling of their lives caused by the Selective Service. Draft Counselor's Corner will provide information about alternatives through general information and by answering questions submitted by readers. NOTE: We recognize that the draft does as much to disrupt the lives of women as it does of men. Therefore, a special effort will be made to provide information to women also.

There exists a great deal of confusion about the lottery system, and I will attempt to clarify part of this situation. It is important to note, however, that much about the system is still extremely unclear even to the Selective Service System. For your protection, you should at least be familiar with exactly what the areas of confusion are. The SSS is playing with your life, after all.

If you have a high number, and are eligible to be in this year's pool (i.e., you were 19 or older on or before Dec. 31, 1969) you should consider dropping your student deferment this year. Although the total draft call will probably be lower next year -- barring our intervention in the Mideast or other areas that the Nixon-Agnew paranoia determines threatens our national security more than militarism -- the pool of eligibles will be considerably smaller. As a result, they will probably reach a higher lottery number next year than they will this year.

Rumor has it that boards are not to draft anyone with a number higher than 195. However, rumor also has it that some boards are already calling people with higher numbers. To be sure, your safest course of action is to contact your local board to find out what number they are currently calling. This is public information, and they should tell you. If the clerk hassles you, hassle her right back, but gently. Be insistent. If you have a margin of 30, you're probably safe. If less than that, you may be on thin ice.

However, let's be positive. Your board is calling people with numbers up to 180 to be this month's shipment of beef to the Vietnam restaurant. Your number is 210. In this case, you should probably give up your II-S. You do this by writing to your board and telling them that you no longer wish to retain your student deferment and that you want to be reclassified I-A. As long as you have a 1-A through the end of this year, your board has had at least one meeting at which you could have been drafted if your number had been reached, and you turned 19 before Jan. 1, 1970, you will thus have completed your year of eligibility and will be reasonably safe from the clutches of the Selective Service.

You should remember, however, that nothing is ever as clear as it seems, and that this entire lottery system is really nothing more than a way to stop campus protest about both the war and the draft. You are not totally safe. I'll talk about this in a future column devoted to discussing how the SSS generally gives you the shaft.

People whose numbers fall near the cut-off point are to be left hanging in limbo for another year, however, thanks to the lack of clarity in the current law. All I can do is pose the questions which will probably be left to the courts to answer. If the national cut-off is 195, and your board only gets to 185, and your number is 190, are you safe because your number has not been reached? Will the cut-off, in other words, be determined by the highest number reached nationally or locally, or perhaps by state? There is no clear answer to this question, or, for that matter, any clear way to even pose the question. As a result, many people in this middle range have no factual foundation on which they can base their future plans.

If this makes you indignant, good. Do something about it.

Freshman Curfews Found Ineffective

By LINDA A. BALICKI
Staff Reporter

An MDC survey has shown that freshman curfews which require all first semester girls to be in the dorms by midnight on weeknights and 1 a.m. on weekends have no strict enforcement in many dorms on campus.

The survey, taken on a typical weeknight and repeated on a weekend night, revealed that enforcement measures varied from mandatory sign-out in certain dorms in the North Quad to a complete absence of enforcement in dorms in other parts of the campus. Voluntary sign-out and checking of I.D.'s were also reported as attempts at enforcement.

Although student security guards are employed in some dorms, particularly on weekends, it was discovered that these guards often serve as receptionists or perform minimal security functions and for the most part are not concerned with enforcing curfew. In some dorms their duties do include the checking of I.D.'s but not in all.

Checking of I.D.'s plays a major role in iniversity police attempts at curfew enforcement but this is often dependent upon spot checking. Police are not present in dorms at curfew and unless specifically summoned will not appear near dorms except for routine patrols.

These patrols, regular though they might be, do not prevent or discover all violations. There are many known cases of freshmen returning to dorms after curfew without question, often unobserved or reported. The instances of girls gaining admittance to dorms with the aid of friends inside are innumerable as are the cases of admittance gained through unlocked doors left that way by friendly counselors.

Regarded by freshman and upperclassman alike as a rule with no meaning because it is not enforced, the freshman curfew has come to be just another rule which is meant to be tolerated at the least and ignored at the most. This is evidenced by the fact that even residence hall standards committees, the judicial organs in residence hall government often do not regard the few curfew violation cases with any degree of severity. They are often inclined to issue a reprimand and warnings against future violations rather than issuing a severe punishment. Only those unlucky enough to be caught repeatedly are dealt with to any great extent and with any degree of exceptional seriousness.

Senate Advisory Group To Organize October 6

On Tuesday October 6, the University and State Communications Council (USCC) will hold an organizational meeting at 7:00 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge. USCC is an advisory group to the Student Senate President, which seeks to open channels of communication between the UMass administrators, faculty, and State Legislature on behalf of the student body. To achieve these aims USCC has developed three areas of concentration; Legislative, Internal University, and Mass Media.

In the past, concern with the State House has involved the filing of a bill and preparing the rationale in support of increased allocations for UMass library expenditures, lobbing against House bills to increase tuition, and sponsoring Student Legislators Day

Internal University has attempted to make known to the Administration student views and attitudes on campus issues. USCC worked with the President's Committee on Room and Fees, which sought alternatives to the proposed increase in boarding fees. The Council then made an earnest attempt to work with the University community through WMUA and the Collegian to receive campus opinion and suggestions on this issue.

Mass Media is the third area which sends news releases to Commonwealth papers concerning campus activity. Releases are an attempt to help correct bad publicity and inform the public of the issues on campus receiving no or misinformed coverage. Two such issues were the Humphrey incident and the STRIKE.

In order to promote the interests of the University and those of public higher education to the Commonwealth, it is necessary to show the needs and merits of the University. To do this much more communications needs to be initiated between the University and the advocates of high-quality low-cost public higher education.

Boots of Spanish Leather

There is a poet, sun in Virgo, a poet who speaks softly, more listening than speaking. As he was speaking, I was listening, and he spoke softly, and very well, with a certain sadness in his sentimentality, and his brown eyes envisioning a lighter shade of denim. A reflective poet, critical, but of himself moreso than of others. His name is John Phillips.

He reflects upon things that are close to his heart, and offers a little "free advice", like, "If you've got some habits that some people won't allow, won't allow, allow..... be cool, be clean, if you know what I mean. Like we've all got up ups (ups), and we've all got our downs (downs), some of us get careless, leave it lying' 'round, lyin' 'round, Be neat (neat), discreet (discreet), and keep your ear to the ground. Everyone has had a loved one who's far, far away, and if you don't wanna make that trip someday....be cool (be cool), be clean (be clean), if you know what I mean." We all know what he means.

He speaks of things that sadden him, too, things close to his heart, like "Strange, gentle young girls.... colored with sadness, eyes of innocence....masking their madness; walking the Strip, sweet, soft, and placid, offering their youth on the alter of acid. Children of Orpheus, called by the dove, all of the trip, but accompanied by love?" Love, love, sweet love, what process, what avenue?

He's not a great poet, he gets carried away sometimes. But that's only from trying too hard. That, and a trace of sad-eyed cynicism. He laments, "Some robbers, they don't need no knives or guns, they, they come and get you where you are. Those flunky bums, they come an' stole my black-pearled drums, you know, they come and took them from my car. Please, please be careful what you say, or the man will come and take you away. Watch out, watch out now, for what you do, oh I fear that they are looking for you.... yeah.....yes, they are.....oh yeah.". We all know what he means.

He is a people. In my tribe, I think that he'd be an interpreter of natural phenomena. He's transviewed blindness and gross lack of vision, like even ours, here, shaggy and chaotically vital. No one is exempt. He sings of being "Safe in our garden, where an ancient flower blooms, and the scent from it's nature.....causes me to swoon..... Could it be that we went hog wild? We came back, man, but we're very tired. They stole our minds and thought we'd never know it; With a bottle in each hand, too late to talk....to understand, we Don't care where it lands, we just throw it.....Somebody take us away, somebody take us away.....and when you go out in the street, so many hassles with the heat, oh no one there can fill your desire.....cops out with the megaphones, tell the people stay inside their homes.. Man!, can't they see the world's on fire?..... Somebody take us away, oh somebody take us away.....take us away....Safe in our garden, an ancient flower blooms, and the scent from it's nature.....slowly squares our room. And it's perfume, being such, that it's causing me to swoon.....Take us away, take us away..... away.....away." Far away, where we might laugh again, we have left you, you don't need us.

In our tribe, I think that he could very happily go around and name and categorize our wonder filled world, everything according to function and love essence, much like God's task for Adam. God knows this man has observed the world's jaundicing of human perspectives. He's seen things crumble out from under. Life is change. Nothing lasts. Witness his own life two years ago, when his first vehicle, the Mamas and the Papas, rusted--

"Sitting in our mansion, guarded by expansion, questioning our motives and our means....wondering why this isn't like the dreams. All the world surrounds us, people cannot hound us, a gentle Spanish lady cooks our meals.....but we never ask her how she feels.....Limousines and laughter, parties ever after.....If you play the game, you pay the price.....(Purchasing a piece of paradise?)..... Changes..... Changes..... Beatles and Stones.....Paris and Rome, making the scene, but missing our own..... Changes..... Changes..... Nothing left to bind us, people cannot find us, we live our lives, and live them as we please.... please, please, please Live your life and live it as you please.....(Please, please, please) Live your life and live it as you please....(Please, please, please).....Please live your life just as you please.....".

Please
Live
Your Life
Just As You
Please

Good advice, and free, too. Circles have no end, and no beginning. We can't complain, we can only look ahead from where we came, and go 'round and around and around, in the circle game. He's not a great poet, but he's a good poet. And there seems to be an abundance of bad poets inflicting themselves upon us today.

Pigs and Crazies have poor sentiment structure.
MUCH HARMONY TO YOU.

A Good Rap

"That was a good rap," Tom was saying. He was referring to a "rap session" which the black students had held before they ceased occupation of the Academic Center of a Chicago university in the spring of 1969.

We sat outside the building as it was all over. Tom had that glassy look in his eyes. He saw the takeover, one of many that month, as the beginning of a revolution which would sweep the nation.

At the rap session a young black man had spoken about the need for the oppressed peoples of the world to unite. He too had had that glassy look in his eyes. He was only about eighteen and had come from what was then known as Wilson Junior College on the citys south side. As he spoke, the others would yell, "RAP ON. RAP ON."

It was like the response at an evangelist meeting.

It is hard to believe that that was over a year ago. We were so sure that the apocalypse was upon us. But the campus is still there and growing.

Tom, I guess, is wandering around some place, trying to get his head together.

The young man from Wilson Jr. was sleeping one night in a Chicago apartment when the apocalypse did come. His name was Fred Hampton.

And the white boy who was looking on, he left the city to go east to school.

That spring ended abruptly for him in June. After graduation he worked as a meatcutter in a black neighborhood. One day as he was wrapping a piece of salt pork, salt working its way into the cuts in his hand, a black butcher looked over his shoulder.

"That," he said, "was a good wrap."

The Reds Are Dead

WASHINGTON--The Communist Party is having a rough time in the United States these days. No one is paying any attention to it any more, and it is probably in the worst shape it has ever been in, in this country.

A Communist friend of mine was practically in tears as he told me how the party was falling apart.

"We're not a menace any more," he said. "And everyone is ignoring us. Red-baiting has gone out of style. It's disgusting."

"How do you explain it?" I asked.

"No one can get any mileage out of attacking Communists in the United States any more. Student-baiting is the big thing now. The Red-hunters are spending all their time attacking students and professors and administrators. Nobody gives a damn what we do. We haven't been able to get in the newpapers in months."

"That's awful," I said. "I remember during a political year when everyone was accusing everyone else of being a Commie or a Commie dupe. What did you people do wrong?"

"We did nothing wrong. The Red-hunters discovered that people were more afraid of their own children than they were of the Communist Party.

"Vice President Agnew hasn't mentioned one Communist threat since he's been on his $100-a-plate lecture circuit. As far as he's concerned, the biggest enemy to the United States is not Karl Marx but Dr. Spock."

"Has this had any effect on your membership?" I asked him.

"I hope to tell you it has. Half our membership was made up of FBI undercover agents. We depended on them for all our financial aid as they were the only ones who paid their dues. Now they're leaving in droves to enroll at colleges and universitites. Our cells are down to nothing."

"You would think the FBI undercover agents would have some loyalty to the party after all these years," I said.

"The other day an FBI undercover agent, a nice fellow whom we all liked, came in and said he had been ordered to resign, as he had been reassigned to the freshman class at NYU. I begged him to stay, but he said it wasn't his decision. Communists just didn't mean anything as far as J. Edgar Hoover was concerned. The Reader's Digest won't even buy articles from him on us any more."

"Maybe you could get Congress to investigate you as they did in the good old days?" I said.

"It's hopeless. The internal security subcommittees are only interested in students," he said. "It's impossible to explain to Moscow that nobody cares what we do."

"Why couldn't you get the students interested in the party?" I suggested. "Surely you could get some attention if the student unrest was thought to be a Communist conspiracy."

"We tried, but the students won't have anything to do with us. They think we're as old-hat as the Republican and Democratic Parties."

"It's a crying shame," I said.

"We thought maybe when Nixon became President we'd get a break, because in his day he was one of the great Communist-hunters in this country. But he hasn't mentioned us since he's been in office. It wouldn't have hurt us to call us 'bums,' after all we did for his career."

WILLIAMSTOW, Mass., Sept. 26 (AP)--Williams College has issued guidelines on the limits of political activity on its campus, requiring that no political activities can be carried out in the name of the school.

The college president, John E. Sawyer, said Thursday that faculty members could not use their offices as return addresses in political activity. College services and equipment, such as duplicating machines, can not be used for political purposes. And college employes cannot take part in politics when on duty.

Campus Comment

To the Editor:

In your article concerning the financial difficulties of the Precissionettes Drill Team, I must admit that you have well described the reasons for the refusal of the Student Senate to fund this group.

The Precissionettes are essentially an off-campus group as far as their spending habits are concerned. The greatest part of their former Senate funding went to the transporting of the women's drill team to campuses and cities far removed from the student body of our University. Thus, those people who received the greatest benefit from student monies were, in the vast majority, non-students.

The article makes a major point (one of very few) that the Precissionettes bring to the University a large amount of publicity. Perhaps the place for the Team to go to find funding is the University's News Bureau, better known as the image-makers.

Must the students once again be exploited so that the Administration can shirk in it's duties of carrying the name of the University to prominence through academic excellence? I feel that it is time that our total community reconsidered it's priorities as to whether or not it wants a bunch of uniformed women parading on the football field at half-time, or to attempt to make some form of forceful change in what has become a stagnated society.

I notice that the Precissionettes are sending letters to their representatives in Washington and on Beacon Hill. Perhaps the girls will have better luck in funding a parade group than their University Administrators, who cannot get enough money to run our school effectively.

Richard Verrochi, Treasurer
Student Senate

To the Editors:

The news media, or more specifically (because of its availability), the MDC, seems to be a daily reflection and generator of our outlook on life. More often this outlook deals with hopelessness, and no wonder. What with the reported uselessness of Campus Unrest Reports and vaulted ceilinged marbletabled Campus Centers, write-ups of escaped Tim Leary's are rare joys.

Don Glickstein's letter concerning the architecture and general livingness of our campus was one of those joys. It dealt in tangible solutions, even if they may be doomed to remain on paper. A number of Glickstein's ideas seem to be unfeasable. It would be difficult to allow semi-free use of the new garage when officials inform us that parking fees are indeed the way we are going to pay for that garage. But his basic ideas of decentralizing the campus, of utilizing buildings already erected for other than their pre-conceived purposes, of looking outward toward the unused fields surrounding our campus for building sites, demand the consideration of everyone connected with this campus.

Transportation in a campus of low-slung, spread-out buildings would be a problem as Glickstein suggests, but not one that could not be alleviated. At present, the Student Senate supplies a bus service consisting of two buses, slow-moving affairs at best. But if the student body could only be awakened to the fact that the Senate can only manipulate and force a budget so far, and that spending priorities must be established. Has it ever been determined what percentage of students actually use their athletic tickets? And since the student body blew their chance to ditch the automatic Index, can someone on the Index staff tell me when that overgrown book will approach the artistic standards that a University publication (eg. Spectrum) should embody? When the powers-that-be finally realize that this University can do without some of the "benefits" that are forced on us, perhaps better use can be made of the State's and OUR money. A worthy transportation system is one eventuality; a more human place to live and work is another.

Today, the few solutions offered or found are negative ones, and to most of my contemporaries trapped in dorm life at UMass, they are also limited. Choose between: A) compromising for two years and moving off-campus to meet the pigs (Amherst landlord variety) face-to-face. B) sweating out exceptional grades for two years to make transference to a smaller "better" school possible ("Man, it's the bigness that's the problem. How can you relate to 20,000?" Or 3 1/2 billion?). C) belonging to an experimental community group, i.e. Project 10, Butterfield, Greenough, etc., that are of limited scope and value due to administrative protective zeal. D) leaving the University. (for where--British Columbia?). They are all valid and tried solutions. They are all unsatisfactory. They smooth and soothe our alienated paths and change nothing.

Changing the University (at least structurally) a la Glickstein is a positive solution. However, all the suggestions involve money and plenty of it, and token position on the Trustee's board or not, we do not in any way control that money. It seems then, that living solutions A) thru D) with variations will continue to remain limited-unless perhaps Glickstein's article is not filler in yesterday's newspaper, and some trustees do read the MDC. But is that any kind of a likelihood?

Karen Forsgard
Project 10

To the Editor:

For those of you who are thinking about political action, I invite you to join me in some real different politics in support of the LIBERTY UNION PARTY of VERMONT!

I'm a candidate for State Senate, as well as for the B.A., and work with the Head Start Project at the School of Education (Room 230)!

As a third party addressing a number of issues, of which the war is certainly one, we are called the "spoilers" since we supposedly (and in reality will) take Democrat votes and prevent elections of the better candidates, to quote a number of voters. However, our real reason for existance, as we see it, is because we can no longer accept a better of two evils type of political situation.

As a father of six, I am by most measures the wealthiest of the candidates and even though I qualify under Office of Economic Opportunities guidelines as poor have other assets, too, such as two rather sick cars which let both my wife and I go about our work for social change. At last count we also had some food stamps and 43¢ cash, plus some paper and postage stamps to aid us in our campaign.

One of our candidates is on welfare and has advised the Department of Social Welfare that he is seeking a job, that of Attorney General of the State of Vermont, but unfortunately has to go through a screening committee of about 200,000 voters before being accepted for a job. Another candidate for U.S. Congress is running out of funds received because of an error by some Wall Street broker who sent him stock certificates for some issue he never invested in.

We all would like to share our thinking and invite you to join us in our campaign. Most of us have some space where our friends could put up for an evening or two in modest surroundings should you desire to join us on the campaign trail and share some of our ideas.

Besides the Viet Nam issue some of us are talking about a new tax structure taxing liquid new assets and eliminating present loopholes. There are now over 700 Billion Dollars of net liquid assets in our country and this figure doubles every few years. This is the base of the power elite and the two party politics that prevails.

If you'd like more details, contact me at the School of Education - Rm 230, tel. 545-0925, or write me at 15 Pine St., Springfield, Vt. 05156. Some of the other things I'm doing include Secretary-Treasurer of the New England Poor People's Congress, Head Start, housing welfare rights, hunger, early childhood education, 4-C, role of paraprofessionals, and ecology.

Sincerely,
John Hammar, candidate
Liberty Union Party

Computer Scientists Working To Avoid 1984

By DAVID WILLIAMS
Issue Editor

The first thing you notice about the room is that it's kind of cold in there. All those machines that sit and spin and whir for hours on end eat up an awful lot of air-conditioning.

It's noisy there too. The print-out chatters away, all kinds of lights blink on and off. It's a pretty impressive machine. And it's pretty smart too.

That's what worries some of the people who work with the machine. Credit bureaus and government agencies such as the IRS or the Census Bureau have huge data-banks which contain who-knows-how-much information on the people in the United States. No one is complaining about this fact. But irresponsible use of these data-banks can lead to tragic results.

Three UMass grad students are very concerned about computers and the invasion of privacy and they have mounted a campaign to get legislation passed protecting the public. They are all grad students in the field of computer science and first became interested in computers and privacy when they read an article in the New York Times in early June.

Art Sabsevitch, Michael Sullivan, and Albert Zukatis, all members of the Pioneer Valley Student Chapter of the Association for Computing Machinery, wrote up a paper stating the position of their group on the matter of computers and privacy and sent it off to people who are in a position to do something about the situation. One of these people was Senator Sam Ervin of N.C., chairman on the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights. The upshot of this is that Dr. Caxton Foster of the Dept. of Computer Science has been invited to Washington to testify before the Committee.

The three also want to alert local people to this menace so they have arranged with Channel 8 in Amherst to have a panel discussion. The moderator will be Dr. Dean Allen of the University Health Services. Speaking against unrestricted data-banks will be Robert Bigelow, chairman of the Computers in Society committee for the ACM. Dr. Foster will speak in favor of the data-banks. Also participating will be David Matz, local ACLU chairman, and Dr. Michael Arbib, chairman of the Dept. of Computer and Information Science. The program will be aired at 7:30 on Channel 8 on October 15.

To illustrate what they meant about computers invading people's privacy, Art, Mike and Al took me downstairs to see the computer. This particular computer is the heart of the time-sharing system at UMass. It operates almost all day.

I was shown a roll of computer tape. One roll of this tape, about 10 inches across, can hold the equivalent of twenty typewritten pages of information about every man, woman and child in the country. A rack full of these tapes about the size of a filing cabinet holds the equivalent of 300 pages of information on everyone. This information is available within seconds to anyone knowing how to operate the computer.

What the people concerned about this are trying to do is to get legislation to keep confidential information that may accumulate in data-banks from falling into the wrong hands. A man who spends years building up a good credit rating may find he has none at all if something that goes into the computer is wrong. They also want to avoid the feeling that the people who built the atomic bomb have. The physicists who built the bomb said they had no idea what they were about to do to the world. Computer scientists want to be able to look back from the year 1984 and think to themselves that they realized their obligation to the public.

THIS RACK OF TAPE could conceivably hold the equivanent of 300 typewritten pages on every man, woman, and child in the country. Irresponsible use of this capability has led computer scientists to become very worried.

Persons born under Cancer are usually family-oriented. The house is a base of operations and good home seems to be a necessity. If you want to capture the heart of a Cancer man or woman — fine dining and an atmosphere of security are twin allies.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Accent on permanent ties. Saying "yes" could mean that you assume added responsibilities. No time to play games, in marriage area, permit mate to have spotlight. Make concessions.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Attention centers on children, school, special investment opportunities. Creative outlook is a necessity. Some past concepts are subject to revision. Agree to necessary changes.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Emphasis on home, the end of matters, the conclusion of report which affects you. Key is to be perceptive. Ask questions. Investigate. Be analytical. Discover reasons "why."

Yankee Conference Teams Suffer Winless Weekend

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Yankee Conference football teams fared extremely poorly this past weekend as each and every one of them lost. The point spread was 207-52, an excellent indication of the overall strength of the Conference.

Three teams can not be blamed for this horrendous showing: UMass, Connecticut and Rhode Island. Each of them played an Ivy League school on foreign turf, with the Redmen at Dartmouth, UConn at Yale and URI at Brown.

UMass' loss was the most lopsided of the three teams as the Indians skinned the Redmen, 27-0, but the final score was absolutely no indication of the contest that was held in Hanover, N.H. It's defense stopped the Big Green for three-quarters of the game but with a handful of nothing. New head coach Jack Gregory's Rams gained 263 yards on the ground to Brown's 236 and out-first downed the Bruins 25-20, bowing in the end, 21-14.

Pulling down the Conferences unrenowned reputation were losers Maine, Vermont and New Hampshire. Each club got whalloped, Maine by 48-20 to Hofstra, Vermont by 48-6 to Boston University, and New Hampshire by 53-12 to Delaware.

Very possibly, the Yankee Conference is one of the few college athletic leagues in the country in recent years to have every one of its members teams come up as football losers on a single Saturday afternoon.

• • • • •

While on the subject of the Yankee Conference, its weekly all-stars on offense, defense and its top sophomore of the week were announced yesterday. And, for the second week in a row, a UMass player received the defensive award. Last week it was safety John O'Neil; this week the spotlight belongs to John Farrelly, co-captain and linebacker.

Farrelly was in or around almost every Redman defensive play against Dartmouth. In fact he was involved in no less that 23 tackles and was readily recognized as the Redmen's number one spirit booster, constantly keeping his teammates "psyched" to stop the Big Green attack.

The offensive man of the week was New Hmapshire's Bob Hopkins, a quarterback. A 6'1-180 junior, Hopkins deserves his award for completing 12 of 19 passes in UNH's tremendous loss to Delaware.

The numbero uno soph was Grant Denniston of Rhody. He carried the ball five times for the Rams and gobbled up 71 yards against the offense blew it.

UConn, a team to watch, did itself proud against the favored Bulldogs. After 59 minutes and 58 seconds of play, the Huskies trailed by only three points as Yale pushed across a touchdown with only two seconds left in the fray.

Like UMass and UConn, the Rams from Rhode Island put up a spirited fight only to wind up Brown. One of his rambles was good for a 56-yard TD.

Other nominations were: Offense-halfback Vin Clements (UConn), quarterback Sandy Hastings (Maine), fullback Dick Narcessian (URI), halfback Bob Rodger (UVM),and guard Bob Pena (UMass), defense-safety Bob Warren (UConn), linebacker Joe LeVasseur (Maine), tackle Gary Sverker (URI) and tackle Gerry Elliot (UVM); sophomores-defensive back Brian Herosian (UConn), split end Dave Paul (Maine), defensive end Ed Booker (UNH) and return specialist Dan Leber (UVM).

UMass varsity soccer coach Peter Broaca was very much pleased with his team's 5-1 opening-season win against Maine, commenting, "It's always nice to start the season off with a win." He pointed out that Saturday morning's heat was a big factor in the outcome of the game, for Maine had to travel to UMass from a colder climate and the coach believes that the heat "took a toll on them in the second half."

With a big 5-1 victory over a Black Bear team that had beaten the Redmen a year ago, Broaca was "glad that everyone got a chance to play because later in the season this probably won't be true."

Broaca feels that the soccermen can make a run for the Yankee Conference title, the yearly possession of Vermont. He sees Rhode Island, Connecticut and UMass in a three-way dog fight to wrestle the crown loose from the Catamounts' grip.

When asked to note the most outstanding players in Saturday's big win, Broaca rattled off the names Duane Brown, Larry DeFelice, Lindo Alves, Augie Calheno, Dave Ouellette but then paused and concluded, "I was pleased with the performance of the whole team."

NEWPORT, R.I.(AP) - Intrepid won the America's Cup Monday for the United States, nosing out Australia's Gretel II by 10 boat lengths in a race so close the two crews at times could have passed the old trophy back and forth.

The victory by 1 minute 44 seconds gave the New York Yacht club defender a 4-1 margin in the best of seven series, but few challengers, if any, ever made it closer than Gretel II. It was the 21st successful challenge by the United States since it won the cup in 1851.

Federal Funds Earmarked For East Pleasant St. Development

Robert Gailey, president in InterFaith Housing Agency, announced yesterday that Interfaith Housing, working with GCA Development of Boston, has received an allocation of funds totalling about $4 million, under FHA 336 program for its proposed moderate income development on East Pleasant St. adjacent to the University of Massachusetts.

The Amherst development program calls for construction of 400 units on the 43 acre site. Initial construction of Phase I of 200 dwelling units is expected to begin this fall.

Rents for the one-, two- and three-bedroom units will be approximately $117 to $160 per month, including all utilities. Stull Associates, Inc. of Boston, the architect for the development, has been working with FHA and the town to develop a final site plan that will enable retention of the outstanding natural site characteristics and meet the requirements of the several organizations involved. The proposed housing rents would be from $200 to $275, without the Federal 236 interest subsidy funds.

When completed, the housing will be available to low income families including married graduate and undergraduate students. The InterFaith Housing development will be of significant benefit to the town, area, university community and low-moderate income families that desire to remain in Amherst.

Although several important details have yet to be fully resolved the major difficulty of obtaining the necessary funds has now been overcome, thanks to the efforts of many groups and individuals including Rep. Silvio O. Conte.

The plans call for Phase I to consist of 95 one-bedroom, 95 two-bedroom and 10 three-bedroom apartments. The two and three bedroom units will be of a town house design. Many of the large trees on the site will remain and a good deal of open space will be preserved for recreational and esthetic purposes.

The town house design will give maximum convenience and privacy to the families living in the development.

The location, near UMass., will prove convenient to occupants associated with the school. Selection of tenants will be under the control of InterFaith Housing of Amherst and carried out by Community Management, a subsidiary of DCA Development Corporation. Initial occupancy is projected for the fall of 1971.

George Culbert, chairman of the local group, has reported that plans to finance a similar housing development with funds from the state are coming along very well.

"However, Al Karner's death was quite a blow. He was my right-hand man, you know, and he'll be a hard man to replace," said Culbert.

He was referring to the death on Thursday of Albert Karner, a very active member of the Board of IFA.

Drugs For Children Seen Good Treatment

WASHINGTON (AP) - Behavior modifying drugs are a medically sound method of treating certain learning disabilities that may affect as many as four million U. S. school children under age 12, government specialists told Congress Tuesday.

But a House privacy subcommittee also heard testimony from laymen who questioned the safety of such drugs, hinted they may be administered in some cases to normal but fidgety children, and said some school officials in Omaha, Neb., and Little Rock, Ark., had harassed parents who objected to the use of drugs on their children.

Subcommittee Chairman Cornelius E. Gallagher, D N.J., said he remained skeptical of the merits of such drug use and intends to recall the government witnesses for further testimony later.

Dr. Thomas Points, a deputy assistant secretary of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, said drugs such as CIBA Pharmaceutical Co.'s Ritalin and certain amphetamines are, under proper medical supervision, a "safe and effective drug treatment" for a children's nervous disorder known variously as hyperactivity, minimal brain disfunction or hyperkine sis-the so called problem child syndrome.

He said there is no evidence such drugs are habit forming or addicting when properly administered, but conceded further research is needed.

Points said 38 studies over the years had all shown such drugs to be helpful in relieving symptoms of the disorder-inability to concentrate, restlessness, destructiveness, excessive energy and the like.

Dr. Ronald Lipman, a clinical psychologist with the National Institute of Mental Health, estimated 150,000 to 200,000 children are being treated with the drugs by their doctors.

He said current estimates are that 1.5 million to 4 million children could be affected by the disorder and might be helped. But Dr. Dorothy Dobbs of the Food and Drug Administration, said it is uncertain if drugs can help all those with hyperkinesis.

Points said that although the government had sponsored $3 million in research there is no national program to promote use of the drugs.

He said a doctor's prescription and parental consent are required for any child to receive the drugs.

Theodore J. Johnson, a medical research chemist from Omaha, said on the basis of his own citizen's inquiries he questioned the quality of research that has been conducted in the area.

He said he had a letter from another FDA official that contradicted a statement by Dr. Dobbs that all amphetamines had been certified as safe to prescribe for children. At that point Rep. Gallagher said he would recall the government witnesses who had left for further testimony later.

Johnson said he knew of parents in Omaha who had been pressured by school officials to allow their children to be treated with drugs, sometimes even threatening not to teach the children unless certain drugs were administered.

President's Pornography Report Escapes Nixon's Negative Remarks

WASHINGTON (AP) - A presidential commission's finding that pornography does not cause sex crimes has been toned down in its report coming out Wednesday, but its recommendations-including repeal of U.S. adult censorship laws - are unchanged.

The report-disavowed by President Nixon in advance also recommends state laws against showing or selling obscene pictures, but not "dirty words" which it says are so commonly used they've lost their shock impact.

The sharply divided 18 member commission's report was not for release until Wednesday afternoon but a two week old copy still subject to last minute revision was seen by The Associated Press.

Contending law "is not the only or necessarily the most effective way" to deal with pornography, the report recommends a massive sex education program both to blunt Americans' taste for smut and to forge an informed public consensus on the problem.

It says American public opinion does not support adult censorship laws, that they're so vague they are sometimes used against legitimate material and "there is no reason to suppose" their repeal would substantially enlarge the U.S. smut industry.

The finding in an Aug. 2 draft report that pornography does "not have any ascertainable casual relationship" with crime, juvenile deliquency, deviacy or emotional disturbance has been modified to say extensive investigation finds no evidence of such a relationship.

The report indicates the modification is based partly on federal statistics showing the increase in U.S. erotica since 1960 has been accompanied by an 86 per cent increase in forcible rape arrests of juveniles, a 55 per cent increase for adult rape arrests and an increase in illegitimacy among teen age girls.

But the majority report says sex crimes including rape have gone down 50 to 60 per cent since pornography was liberalized in Denmark and that U.S. sex crimes have not increased as fast as other crimes or as much as pornography has increased.

McCain Explains Referendum '70

By BOB CARMEN
Staff Reporter

John McCann, statewide chairman of the Referendum '70 program, told 150 persons at the Student Mobilization Committee's meeting in the Campus Center last night that his group offers persons a rational and possible avenue to end the war in Vietnam politically.

While saying early in his address that the responsibility for all revolutionaries and political radicals is "to move masses of people in the direction they see fit," he argued that too many people make the mistake of choosing tactics that cannot work.

As an example, he pointed out that some people are convinced that guerilla tactics will work anywhere in Latin America merely because they worked in Cuba.

McCann also argued that many Americans are using the wrong tactics in their drive to end the war in Vietnam. He claimed that people who bomb buildings are "too concerned with the glamour and romantic aspects of revolutionary acts," and are not really making any significant contributions toward ending the war.

McCann termed Referendum '70 as a proper anti-war tactic because its results can effectively warn the Federal Government that the people the war to be too important an issue to be left to the discretion of a few men in Washington.

He emphasized that popular support for the anti-war movement is consistantly growing as many people never expected the Shea anti-war bill to pass in this state. Because of precedent such as this, McCann believes that the Referendum '70 campaign has a chance to succeed, and is not merely a token protest.

He concluded by saying that people "cannot push their conscience on others" and must try to change people's minds through activities like Referendum '70.

Two Held For Bombings

TAUNTON, Mass (AP) - A suspended instructor at Bristol Community College, his wife and a Plainfield, Vt., woman face arson charges in connection with racial disturbances in New Bedford last summer.

The Bristol County grand jury Monday indicted Mark Dworkin, 25, his wife, Marilyn, 26, and Susan Reeves, 25, on charges of conspiracy to burn a building, and possession of a "Molotov Cocktail or similar device."

The three were arrested July 10 in New Bedford. Police charged they attempted to set a building afire.

Dworkin was suspended from the community college in Fall River on Sept. 10 after being arrested on shoplifting charges. He is scheduled to appear in New Bedford Superior Court in November, appealing a 160 day jail sentence for eight counts of defacing a public building.

Marcus Appointed to Direct University Public Relations

By KAREN DEGORE
Staff Reporter

The traditional concept of public affairs needs to be broadened if it is to remain effective. This is the view of the Faculty-Senate Long Range Planning Committee, according to Dean Joseph Marcus, Assistant to the Chancellor for Public Affairs.

Dean Marcus has just recently stepped into the role of Assistant to the Chancellor. Although he considers his position to be a temporary one, subject to the consideration and appraisals of the Search Committee, he feels quite at home in his new job. His past has well prepared him for this people-oriented position.

Since 1948 he has been active in the School of Engineering, and is still teaching, saying teaching gives me an input not found in the office - almost like therapy. He has aided in establishing the Engineering Alumni Association and has assisted in programs which invite friends of the University to visit the campus in order to discuss University problems.

In 1969, as a member of the Faculty Senate Long Range Planning Committee, he and his colleagues placed before the Chancellor their new proposition: that public affairs should extend beyond the range of media to include service to the Commonwealth.

Traditionally, public affairs involves development, as in cooperation with alumni or fund-raising programs, as well as communications. The committee's idea is not to destroy such a conception, but to add to it by providing service to the Commonwealth.

Citing one example, Dean Marcus intends to work with Dr. Willian Venman of the Continuing Education Program in an effort to bring education to the people, perhaps through high schools or evening classes. Such action will, he feels, develop the public image of the University.

Dean Marcus is amazingly enthusiastic about the University, remarking, "It's great! The faculty, students, and administrators are outstanding." However, he recognizes the old problem of geographic isolation - Amherst is far removed from the center of population and political activity. The University must live down such "historical accident"; o do so, its image must be changed.

Public affairs must create public understanding of the University's willingness to serve the state. Of course, it must be recognized that the primary function of the University is the education of its students. But Dean Marcus suggests that his program will broaden the concept of "student" to include those outside this University. "We cannot become a service station," he concluded, "but we can and should offer those services which are unique to a University.

Agnew Blasts Scranton Report

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) - Vice President Spiro T. Agnew denounced the Scranton report on campus unrest Tuesday as "imprecise, contradictory and equivocal."

He declared its refusal to lay sole blame on violent protesters and those who encourage them will "be taken as more Pablum for the permissiveness."

Agnew's denunciation in a campaign speech in Sious Falls for South Dakota Republicans was especially critical of the commission's call for leadership by the President in quelling campus unrest.

"To lay responsibility for ending student disruptions at the doorstep of this President-in office 20 months- is 'scapegoating' of the most irresponsible sort," the vice president declared.

It was the sharpest attack yet on the commission report by a high Nixon administration official, but White House speech writers on loan to Agnew for the campaign said it would not necessarily be interpreted as representing the views of the President.

There was no immediate comment from any of the commission members.

The report also came under fire in Washington by 56 Republican and four Democratic congressmen who wrote a letter to President Nixon saying it "totally ignores reality" in its proposed solutions and "blatantly disregards" the efforts made by Nixon to solve the campus problems.

In Agnew's speech he said, "In the indiscriminate fashion in which it diffuses and dilutes responsibility, in the total unfairness of the most widely publicized recommendation in the thinly rationalization for student disruption, the report comes out in its over all impression imprecise, contradictory and equivocal."

"It is sure to be taken as more Pablum for the permissiveness," he said. He said primary responsibility lies with faculty and administrators, adding, "The President cannot replace the campus cop."

The commission, which was named last spring by President Nixon and whose chairman was former Gov. William W. Scranton of Pennsylvania, said in its report issued Saturday that "only the President can offer the compassionate, reconciling moral leadership that can bring the country together again."

East German Treatment of U.S. Citizens Strains Diplomatic Relations

WASHINGTON (AP) - The State Department charged Tuesday that East Germany's treatment of Americans arrested in that country works against efforts under way in Europe to develop better understanding between Western and Communist nations.

A spokesman specifically denounced a seven year sentence imposed yesterday on 21 year old Marc Huessy of Jericho, Vt., who was accused of making statements against the East German regime.

The handling of the case by East Germany, press officer John King declared, "is a shocking example of disregard for justice." King said the sentence itself was unwarranted.

"Such action on the part of East German authorities," he said, "is not in keeping with and can hardly encourage serious efforts now being made in Europe to achieve a better basis for East-West understanding."

Three other young Americans held in East Germany under circumstances which the State Department deplored were named by King as:

-Jack Strickland, 28, a native of New York and Lyle Jenkins, age 30, a native of Massachusetts. Both of them entered East Berlin in September 1969 and failed to return. Jenkins was identified as a graduate student at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Strickland and Jenkins were convicted of illegal border crossings and sentenced respectively to four years and two and one half years in prison.

-Frank King, 24, a native of Detroit, was detained in July and charged with making provocative statements and spreading propaganda against the East German regime.

Gov. Curtis Raps Nixon Plan

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) - Gov. Kenneth Curtis said Tuesday New England can find no relief in the interim measures taken by President Nixon to ease the region's fuel oil crisis.

"They say that if oil prices go higher, our problems will be solved by the oil companies in a free market," Curtis said. "This would be true if the market were free, but the market is already distorted by the high prices caused by Government intervention in the form of the oil import program."

Curtis said Nixon's announcement that the 40,000 barrels a day additional quota originally grant from July 1 Dec. 31 will be extended through 1971 "was inevitable."

"The announcement that we may use this oil at the rate of 80,000 barrels per day over six months instead of 40,000 barrels per day over one year is completely meaningless," he said.

"We could have done this any way, and we undoubtedly would have since there is no reason for us to have waited until next summer to buy whatever heating oil was available," the Democratic incumbent said.

Curtis pointed out that none of the proposals that group recommended 10 days ago have been accepted.

"These steps would have included complete decontrolling of number two heating oil, additional imports of crude oil from Venezuela and substantial liberalization of imports from Canada," he said.

"The measures announced today don't provide a drop of new heating oil and very little industrial oil," Curtis said.

World Leaders Journey To Cairo For Nasser's Funeral

Leaders of the world or their representatives will attend Thursday's funeral for Gamal Abdel Nasser in Cairo. Egypt's differences with other nations-Arab and non Arab-will be forgotten for the moment.

President Nixon announced he was sending Robert H. Finch, one of his principal advisers. But when Finch had previous commitments Nixon named an official delegation consisting of former Ambassadors Robert Murphy and John J. McCloy, and Michael Sterner, director of Egyptian affairs in the State Department. Nixon considered it inappropriate to attend himself, since Egypt severed diplomatic relations in the 1967 war with Israel.

It was a different question with President Tito, long a close friend of Nasser. Since he was preparing to receive Nixon in Yugoslavia on Wednesday, he also delegated a top adviser to go to Cairo-Edward Kardelj, a member of the Council of the Federation.

First to arrive in Cairo was President Jaafar el Numairi of Sudan. He had hardly reached home after attending an Arab summit conference in the Egyptian capital at which Nasser in one of his late acts helped to arrange a truce in the Jordanian civil war.

Before leaving Moscow for the funeral, Premier Alexei N. Kosygin joined Communist party secretary Leonid I. Brezhnev and President Nikolai V. Podgorny in a telegram to Nasser's widow praising Nasser as "a tried, tested and consistent fighter against imperialism."

King Hussein is leading the Jordanian delegation to Cairo. Apparently he felt the truce between his army and Palestinian guerrillas to be firm enough to allow him to leave Amman.

With Hussein went Premier Bahi Ladgham of Tunisia, who was in Amman as supervisor of the truce.

Sir Alec Doubias Home, foreign secretary, will be there for Britain.

Pope Paul VI in a telegram to Egypt's acting president, Anwar Sabat, said he was profoundly saddened by Nasser's death and prayed "to God Almighty always to favor your country with a tranquil and prosperous future."

President Ahmed Hassan alBakr of Iraq, Nasser's chief foe after Egypt accepted the U. S. plan for a cease fire with Israel, sent Vice President Hada Takriti to the funeral. Iraq also declared a week of mourning.

Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president of the World Jewish Congress, said in Paris that Nasser's death "represents a great loss, not only for the Arab world, but also for all those who hope for an end of the Israel Arab conflict."

PRESIDENT NASSER OF EGYPT, who died Monday, was a close friend of Yugoslavian President Tito and visited him on many occasions. Tito will be conferring with Nixon tomorrow and won't be able to go to his friend's funeral.

Mid East Plunges Into Chaos

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Gamai Abdel Nasser's death has dimmed hopes for peace in the Middle East and created a potentially explosive vacuum in this volatile part of the world.

"It's a vacuum too horrible to contemplate," a Western educated Arab said Tuesday.

"I can see only chaos ahead," said a Beirut University professor.

"I have been pretty pessimistic all along," a diplomat commented. "Now I'm really blue. Who can bring the Arab world together now?"

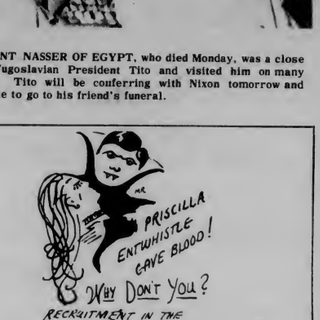
Despite his revolutionary role in modern Arab history and his anti American public posture, Nasser exerted a moderating influence on Arab extremists.

His country is easily the strongest and most powerful in the Arab world, and his seniority among Arab heads of state enabled him to provide a meeting ground for both leftist and right wing regimes in the area.

In Egypt itself, a power struggle appears inevitable.

And the Arab world, deprived of Egypt's dominating influence, faces a period of doubt, confusion, turmoil and probably violence.

Mobs took to the streets of Beirut, smashing windows and burning cars, within minutes of the announcement of Nasser's death.



Arab extremists - the Palestinian guerrillas and the leftist Syrian and Iraqi regimes - can be expected to try and fill the void left by Nasser.

But they are bitterly divided among themselves, and their struggle for supremacy carries risks of further bloodshed among Arab brothers.

Nasser and Jordan's King Hussein were the only Arab leaders to accept the U.S. Middle East peace initiative. Palestinian guerrilla opposition to a negotiated peace with Israel precipitated the fighting in Jordan.

Hussein now must face the guerrillas alone. If the guerrillas again-and this seems to be a matter of time-Hussein will have the bitter choice of unleashing his Bedouin armies against them or suing for peace with Israel, a step which could be suicidal.

No Arab leader seems of sufficient stature to pursue the American peace initiative. Hatred of Israel-and, by association, the United States - has been whipped up among the masses since their humiliating defeat in the war of 1967. Thus it is doubtful whether any of the Arab leaders currently in power could afford to adopt a conciliatory attitude toward Israel or the United States.

Biologists Agree

Life, In Some Form, Probably Exists on Mars

WASHINGTON (AP) - Two space agency biologists have concluded from evidence gathered by Mars spacecraft that, in spite of an apparently harsh environment, life of some sort may exist there.

Some earthly organisms can survive under conditions almost as severe as those on Mars, the scientists say in the current issue of The Quarterly Review of Biology.

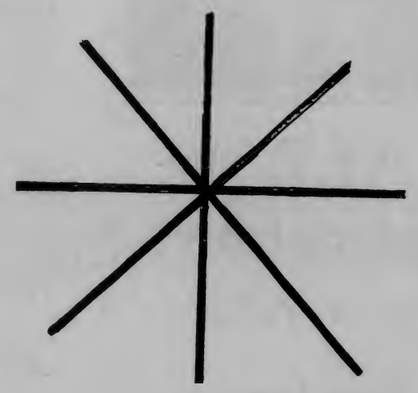
Dr. Cyril Pennamperuma and Dr. Harold P. Klein, of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Ames Research Laboratory, Moffett Field, Calif., base their report on data from the 20 per cent of the Martian surface that has been photographed, and on which temperature, radiation level, atmospheric pressure and water content have been measured.

Most of the information was obtained by three Mariner flyby missions, forerunners of the Viking 1975 76 unmanned lander which is to search for life on Mars.

The writers report these indications of the possibility of life on Mars:

-The atmosphere of the planet is extremely thin, compared with that of the earth, and the pressure is considerably lower on Mars. But "considerable variation in atmospheric composition and density can be tolerated by terrestrial organisms" and microorganisms can grow or survive at pressures much lower than those on earth.

-Because of the thin atmosphere, ultraviolet radiation, harmful to life, may penetrate to the planet's surface more easily than on earth - but any Martian life may receive some protection in regions that are often covered by a "blue haze which might effectively absorb ultraviolet radiation for varying periods of time." Furthermore, if Mars organisms exist, they may have evolved some means of resistance to ultraviolet rays.



-Although the atmosphere of Mars lacks oxygen and nitrogen "Most organisms do not require atmospheric nitrogen and even oxygen is not necessary for some."

-Temperatures on Mars range from 85 degrees above to 112 below zero. But earthly organisms can grow over a broad range of 205 above to 14 above zero, and can survive at much lower temperatures.

-Although the surface of Mars appears to be lacking, or almost lacking, in the liquid water that appears to be a requirement for life, water may exist beneath the surface as permafrost or ice.

West Aims At Reaching True "Communiversity"

By ALBERT BENSON
Staff Reporter

To most administrators the "communiversity" is a distant goal - something to be strived for. This is not the case with Mike West, Area Coordinator for the Quad, Central, and Orchard Hill areas in an interview, West outlined what has been done and what is going to be done to bring a sense of community to these areas.

The questions asked concerned the role of the Head of Residence in changing dormitory structures, the policy of the University towards dorm autonomy and self-governance, the economic status of Mills, and the problems involved with dorm security.

MDC: Do you think that the position of Head of Residence will be gradually phased out?

West: First of all I think that I should make the distinction between a Head of Residence and a Resident Director. A Head of Residence is a full time employee. He works twelve months and receives a full salary. Since this is a regular staff position, we want young married couples with children to fill this post. It will not be phased out.

The Resident Director on the other hand, is a part time employee of the University and has, in places, already been phased out.

In Cance House, for example, the money formally used for a Resident Director's salary is now supporting a tenant's council. This council, which is made up of students, governs the dorm. Undergrads are also running the dorms in Brett and Chadbourne.

MDC: Could you cite some examples of other innovations that have been made in the dorms?

West: In Butterfield House students have achieved fiscal autonomy. Funds collected from the dorm go back into improvements on the building itself. Students there have also established their own cafeteria.

Orchard Hill also has many new programs. Residents of Webster House are forming environmental workshops and are doing research into the relationship between counselors and students.

Interested people on the Hill are also trying to form a permanent theatre group. They hope to set up a moveable stage.

Others are working on the Orchard Hill Residential College Concept. These students would like to see Orchard Hill become a sepatate degree granting institution.

MDC: Since the dorms in the Northeast Area pay for themselves by collecting room rents from the people who live in them, who will be paying for Mills House now that it's an academic rather than a dormitory building?

West: Mills House is already payed for. The rest of the students in the area don't pay anything for it. Maintenance costs are taken care of by the state.

MDC: How are you planning to deal with the problem of dorm security.

West: I feel that many of the problems of dorm security can best be taken care of by allowing students more control of their own dorms. When students feel that they have a stake in their dorms and that the buildings that they live in are part of their community, the liklihood of a security problem decreases. In Thatcher, where residents painted their own building over the summer, students are taking measures against excessive damage.

MDC: Do you have any future plans for increasing campus security?

West: We have proposals for placing police sub-stations in different parts of campus. By so doing, we hope to reduce the possiblity of student police confrontation. In a potentially dangerous situation, students would react badly to the presence of police men who they had never seen before. They would react less badly to police men who were familiar to them. By placing police officers in different parts of campus, we hope to familiarize students with them, decrease the possibility of campus confrontation, and create a greater sense of campus community.

U.S. Officials Claim Moves To Leave Viet

SAIGON (AP) - The United States made three new moves Tuesday to disengage its men and machines from the war, including completion of the transfer of a big combat base to the South Vietnamese army.

It was the 57th American installation to be turned over to the Vietnamese since the U.S. withdrawal started just over a year ago.

The other disengagement moves announced by the U.S. Command were the further reduction in U.S. troop strength by 2,565 men and the transfer of 40 jet attack bombers to the South Vietnamese air force, next Thursday.

In war action, one sharp clash was reported but for the most part the battlefields remained quiet.

In the action, a South Vietnamese armored column engaged North Vietnamese troops along the Cambodian border and reported killing 21 while listing their own losses as six dead and 14 wounded.

The U. S. Command also signaled a forthcoming disengagement move. It announced that three units of the 1st Marine Division and an Army artillery battalion have been pulled out of action and are preparing to depart.

The combat base that was turned over to the South Vietnamese is at An Hoa, 20 miles southwest of Da Nang. It was set up four years ago by U.S. Marines and was once one of the largest bases for the Leathernecks in the northern sector.

The newly announced troops reduction lowered the current American strength to about 391,000 men and this figure will be cut by another 7,000 during the coming weeks.

The withdrawals are part of President Nixon's fourth phase cutback of 50,000 troops that will lower authorized American manpower in Vietnam to 384,000 by Oct. 15.

The 40 bombers that will be turned over to the South Vietnamese on Thursday comprise two squadrons of A37 jet attack aircraft. The transfer will be made at a ceremony at Bien Hoa Air Base, 18 miles north of Saigon.

SMITTY'S DELI

Sigma Alpha Epsilon

A movement in education is taking place and it is affecting society as well as the university community in many ways. Many of our institutions are being challenged and the fraternity system is among them. Fraternities can go one of two ways: they can resist change and eventually fade away, an anachronism in a swiftly changing world picture, or they can join the movement and become a vital part of education and character development.

At Sigma Alpha Epsilon, we feel we are working towards this change. Our realistic approach to the total development of today's college man leads us to believe the old conservative stereotyped fraternity is out dated. The fraternity of today must offer a new atmosphere where a man is no longer a number and he can mature and feel a sense of belonging.

The Students' Lawyer

'Students have been branded by the President, by the Vice-President, and by the Attorney General as being the largest criminal group in the nation. Therefore students need lawyers, have always needed lawyers, but have always been unable economically to have them. I want to do something about that."

Thus does Richard M. Howland, the newly hired Student Senate lawyer for the undergraduate students of the university, explain his reason for taking a job that is not a common one for lawyers.

Attorney Howland is available to any undergraduate seeking legal advise and counsel. He is unable logistically unless under certain circumstances to represent students in court. However Mr. Howland will furnish advice to any student about any legal problem from drug arrest to landlord problems, and assist in gaining for the student legal representation.

He is eminently qualified for a much needed service, and a service that could gain for U-Mass students, the ability to have fair trials, to avoid landlord exploitation, etc., etc., something that students are finding hard to find nowadays.

Howland is a 1957 graduate of Deerfield Academy, a 1961 graduate of Amherst College. He served a stint with the U.S. Navy where he was, periodically, for two years, in Vietnam. He acquired his law degree from Columbia in 1968, and since 1966 has been a member and partial founder of Vietnam Veterans Against the War, and Vietnam Veterans For McCarthy. He has worked with both a corporate law firm ("we didn't get along with each other very well") and a criminal law firm before taking his present job ("it is exactly into what I want to do").

He is the student's lawyer. He has no connection at all with administration, faculty or campus security. He is working solely for individual students and for student groups. And he must deal with students, many of whom don't really trust the system.

Howland however maintains, "Much of the dissatisfaction, and a lot of it is justified, is because students haven't yet lived in the system, haven't tried to make it work. A lawyer's speciality is dealing with systems and making it work, and finding ways to defeat it."

He also stresses that the problems don't have to be on the court level to require legal advice, "A lawyer's classic function," he adds, "is to keep things out of court."

Therefore, he is, at your service undergrads. And you should take the invitation if needed. For Attorney Howland's job is one of the best things your student government has ever come up with.

Howland stresses that it would be easier for him and probably do the student a service, to call him in the event of arrest. He will call any others the student wishes. And he can do the secondary legal work that students usually never can do.

His number on campus during the day is 5-5034l and off campus, at night, 549-6817. Call him if arrested. Call him if you need legal help. He's there for you.

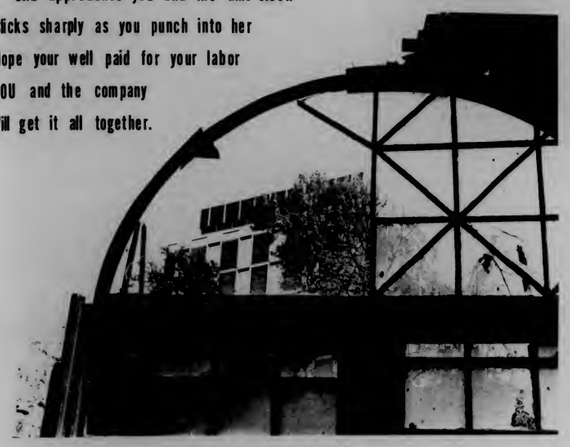
WARNING: YOU ARE WHAT YOU EAT...

Ed Bryant

I Went Home

Saturday afternoon was dragging by very slowly. Richard was in New Hampshire, everyone else was out or busy, I didn't feel quite up to Samuel Eliot Morison. There was myself, but I've seen enough of him lately: he's getting on my nerves. So I went to visit my family.



When I arrived there was no one home. As usual, some one was sick, this time it was my father. (With six kids and two parents, someone's always sick.) It turned out that the rest of them were at the Carnival. There's been a Carnival in Wellesley every year since I can remember. I guess there always will be. Every little kid hits his parents for five or ten dollars so he can be swindled, misled, and amused by those rascals offering stuffed animals and plastic jewlery. There is a Ferris wheel and a Merry Go-round and rides that make you want to regurgitate all the candy apples, popcorn, and cotton candy you've been eating all day. Then, like bandits, the tents are folded and soon disappear, leaving everyone a little poorer monetarily, a little richer spiritually. Because everyone enjoys the Carnival, even the Don Juans fron the Junior High who couldn't score.

Saturday night we went to Mass. Mass isn't the same as when I was younger. They sing when they come in, and all the prayers are in English, and I don't have to pretend to be holy any more. (When we were little we used to go to Communion and afterwards lean forward, pretending to pray.) The church is changed around a lot. Now the altar faces the people, so you can see the priest, and after about the third quarter, everyone truns and gives the guy next to him the handshake of peace. At the end, they've canned the blessapeas. The sermon was still the old fire and brimstone, but even the sermon, where they used to really lay it on you, even that was toned down, less false, less objectionable.

Does it mean anything? Something that used to make people happy still makes people happy. Something that used to bore everyone is less boring, almost meaningful and headed in the right direction. Neither one was doing anything concrete about racism, pollution, war, or the Campus Center. Time may very well run out on us in each of these matters, and that makes me very sad. Still, even if only a little bit, they made me feel good. And Saturday, I needed that.

Calif. Fires Cost $175M

COMFORT ON THE FIRE LINE - A weary fireman takes it easy while spraying water on a fire in the Santa Monica mountains west of Los Angeles. He was trying to keep the flames from reaching a home where he found the chair. Thousands of acres have been burned over a series of destructive fires that hit Southern California last week.

(AP) - Southern California's worst ordeal by fire seemed near an end Tuesday.

As cool, moist sea breezes took over from hot, dry desert biasts, fire fighters from Sequoia to San Diego said they had controlled or expected to control major blazes that have charred nearly half a million acres - an area almost as big as Rhode Island.

But even as the embers cooled, state officials were working on plans to ease what they say is the certainty of mudslides and flooding this winter on denuded mountain and foothill slopes.

The Los Angeles County sheriff's office said it suspects arson in some of a rash of smaller fires in the Los Angeles area. Spokesmen said the causes of most of the state's major blazes was unknown, although there was no evidence of arson in these fires.

In Los Angeles County, where 13 fires blackened 112,000 acres, the devastating Malibu blaze was finally checked. A section of a fire in San Gabriel Canyon remained uncontrolled.

Since the fires first broke out Friday, eight persons have died. The Federal Small Business Administration estimates the fire loss at $175 million, with 1,500 homes, business or other buildings destroyed or damaged. Most of the tens of thousands that fled ahead of 56 major blazes were back home - those who had homes.

Though the worst seemed over, some 2,300 men still were on lines around two huge blazes in mountains east of San Diego that burned over nearly 200,000 acres.

"We're very optimistic, said a spokesman for the State Division of Forestry. "The humidity is up and the lines are fairly static.

The 1970 legislature produced a bill providing for flood prevention measures including planting of trees and shrubs to hold soil, construction of basins to catch flood debris, and dams in gullies. The State Department of Water Resources said that most of the burned land is what is termed watershed and unless winter rains are unusually light, flood damage and erosion are inevitable.

In the three hardest hit counties - Los Angeles, San Diego and Ventura - 424 families were reported homeless due to fire destruction, with countless other dwellings damaged.

Three persons were fatally burned during the fire siege that began amid fierce desert winds. A pilot and four fire righters were killed Monday when a heilcopter crashed in nearby mountains.

Gov't Offers Help in Expected Fuel Shortage

(AP) - Federal officials said today they are relying mainly on market forces, cooperation from fuel producers, and self restraint by the public to avert the threat of widespread fuel shortages this winter.

However, they announced a series of modest government actions aimed at lessening that threat.

They emphasized that home heating needs take first priority and that no homes would be left without fuel. But a severe winter might impose temporary shortages on some industries.

Paul W. McCracken, chairman of the President's council of Economic Advisors, and George A. Lincoln, director of the Office of Emergency Preparedness, outlined the administration's approach in a joint statement and a news conference.

Circumstances have raised different threats for different parts of the country, they pointed out.

The east coast, dependent on imported residual fuel oil for more than 90 per cent of its needs, because of developments in the Middle East which have reduced the availability of both the oil and the tankers which carry it.

The southeast faces possible coal shortages due to a shortage of railroad hopper cars, they said.

In the midwest, they said, delays in construction of atomic power plants have contributed to increased demand for fossil fuels, especially low pollution types, for power generation.

To help alleviate such problems, the administration announced these steps:

Continued importation of an average 40,000 barrels a day of No. 2 fuel oil into district 1, the east coast, but concentrating the flow at some 80,000 barrels a day during the peak of the heating season. Permission to "top" skim lighter fractions from crude oil imported into that district, provided the topping is used for fuel.

Exemption of natural gas liquids from the import quota on Canadian crude oil. Permission to transport Canadian oil by waterway. Permission to "top" Canadian crude either for fuel use or for re export to Canada. Permission to import liquified petroleum gas from the western hemisphere, which means primarily Venezuela.

Relaxation of restrictions on viscosity requirements on crude oil used for burning.

The doubling, by the Interstate Commerce Commission, of the demurrage charge on hopper cars standing idle in loading or unloading zones. The increased charge is expected to speed loading and unloading, placing cars back in service more quickly to haul additional freight.

Analyzing New Massachusetts Consumer Laws

By JACK KOCH & BILL MATTHEWS

Two news releases from the Attorney General's office give general descriptions of two new Massachusetts Consumer Laws. Tous, these laws appear important enough to point out their shortcomings as they appear in the news releases.

The first of the two laws that go into effect January 1, 1971, deals with rental deposits. In New York City, the landlord is required by law to deposit the money in a savings account and inform the tenant which bank the account is in. There is nothing in the law telling the landlord what to do with the up to 5 1/4% interest, or restraining him from taking out a loan using his pass book as collateral so he can reinvest in 8% tax-free bonds.

Massachusetts appears to have taken a mini-giantstep for the tenant. Starting this January, landlords will be required by law to pay 5% interest per year on all rental deposits. All security deposits will be required to be returned to the tenant within thirty days of termination of lease. He may deduct for repairs and unpaid rent, but all deductions must be accounted for. If the deposit is not returned at the end of the thirty days, the tenant may sue for twice the amount of the deposit plus 5% interest starting from the day the money was due to be returned.

Unfortunately, this boon to the consumer of housing services does have some compromising drawbacks. One is that the interest applies only to leases lasting more than a year, and the other is that the interest does not begin to accrue until the end of the twelfth month. This drawback hits hard at the student, who normally does not enter into a lease of more than a year. Also, many landlords may quite lawfully refuse to give leases for more than a year, thus, becoming virtually unaffected by the new Law

The other new laws puts Massachusetts among the first to have a unit pricing law. Effective this January, supermarkets will be required to price per pound or liquid pint. Unit pricing will allow shoppers to determine the best buy at a glance. The truth in-packaging law (the net amount must be stated on a package) allowed package proliferation in a product line. Without unit pricing a math major wouldn't be able to pick out a best buy. This law too, has a drawback, in that only "as soon as" the new law becomes effective hearings will be held determining which items the supermarkets must unit price. According to the news release, this seems to indicate an indefinite lapse of time before we actually see the law in effect, and definite limitations as to which products will be subject to treatment. Hopefully, however, such pressures as unit pricing will eventually persuade manufacturers to voluntarily standardize their packaging, which has been, thus far consistently deceptive.

Marketing Expert Speaks Here Tonight

Tomorrow night, at 7:45 P.M., the UMass Market Club will be honored by a visit from Mr. Leonard G. Suscy. Mr. Suscy is Vice-President and General Manager of Construction for Progress, Inc. of New York. Owned by American Standard and Celanese Corporations, CFP is a forerunner in bringing truly low-cost housing to those most in need of it, ghetto dwellers. Mr. Suscy will present the marketer's responsibility in making low-cost housing a reality. His speech is entitled "THE CRITICAL LINK IN SOLVING URBAN HOUSING PROBLEMS". A question and answer period will follow his presentation.

While visiting the UMass campus Mr. Suscy will be the guest of Mr. & Mrs. Victor Buell. Mr. Buell is a past president of the American Marketing Association and currently a member of the Marketing Faculty here.

On Friday, October 2nd, Mr. Suscy will meet with marketing students and faculty of the School of Business Administration to further stress the need of both the academic and business world's responsibility in solving our Nation's social problems.

GEFF Series Slates Dryer Flicks Tomorrow

By MARTIN K. PURVIS
Staff Reporter

Two films by Carl Dreyer will be featured tonight in Thompson 104 as part of the GEFF series. Dreyer's reputation as one of the greatest directors in the world is based primarily on these two films -- THE PASSION OF JOAN OF ARC (1928), which will be shown at 8:00, and DAY OF WRATH (1943), shown at 9:15.

The Scandinavian countries had a very strong early tradition in films, and by the 1920's Dreyer, a Dane, had emerged as a leading figure. Scandinavian cinema, whose fascination with lighting techniques preceded even that of Germany, was a great influence on the German film.

In fact Dreyer made two films in Germany, and his determination to have absolute studio control over all elements of design, costume, setting, and makeup is in the German tradition. Dreyer, however, differed from most of his German counterparts by frequently finding natural outdoor locations which exactly reflected the psychological truth which existed in his mind's eye.

THE PASSION OF JOAN OF ARC was produced in France with an international cast and production company and acquired for Dryer a world wide reputation. Using little historical background or story, Dreyer eschewed typical historical pageantry to concentrate on the suffering and ecstasy of Joan of Arc during her trial and death.

The intensive use of close-ups and unusual camera angles won it great critical favor, but the emergence of the sound film that year prevented it from great financial success.

DAY OF WRATH, made during the Nazi occupation of Denmark, was Dreyer's first feature after a decade of inactivity, and it is his most popular film with modern audiences. Set in 17th Century Denmark, a time of religious persecution and witch-burning, this film evinces Dreyer's absorption with the complex interplay of spirituality, eroticism, and evil.

"Drum" Set To Expand As Second Year Begins

By SANDY MITCHMER
Staff Reporter

The 1969-1970 academic year saw the creation of the first black on-campus publication, The Drum. Drum is in reality a conveyance of literary news, history and contempary culture within the black community. The Drum was an idea conceived by a few black students, who were interested in providing an outlet for the literary talents of their fellow students.

Drum is not limited to students here at the University. Late last season the Drum branched into a five college organization. This year students from the five colleges will be contributing writings and art work.

Most of the staff members of Drum, many English and government majors have been turned off, by the other publications on campus. The belief is that they are not capable of providing relevent news reporting and cultural information to the community.

Many black students express a feeling of alienation or complete neglect in reading or "trying to read" Yahoo or the Index.

Drum is now beginning its second year of publication. Many of the difficulties that most young publications face, are being realized by the Drum. Staffing is always an important problem, many staff members are upperclassmen. Working for Drum is under a voluntary basis. It will need the following of each new incoming class to continue publication.

Distribution and publication were the big problems facing the staff last year. The earlier issues of the Drum were mimeographed and copies were sold for 25¢ an issue to any interested patrons. Second semester Drum presented a budget to the student senate. The reasoning behind this was that the student activities fee, required of all students, was being alloted for activities without any consideration of the interests of the black student body.

The senate, after some consideration and a lot more debate approved the bill. Drum was given a budget. This enables it's publication to be done by professional printers and distribution of the magazine for free.

Off Campus Housing Situation Tight

By WALT SOBZAK
Staff Reporter

Many students planning to move off campus to avoid the rising costs of dorms are in for an unpleasant surprise. In most cases, the cost of renting an apartment is the same, if not more than that of a dormitory room.

Realtors and property owners are quite aware of the supply and demand of apartments in and around Amherst. Add to this the fact that taxes are continually on the rise, and the results are in many cases, overpriced, needlessly sumptuous apartment houses, or overcrowded, needlessly 'rustic' farmhouses.

In the case of married students, the problem is somewhat alleviated by University Housing. The Lincoln Apartments, University Apartments, and nearly completed North Village, are owned by the University, and coordinated by the Off-Campus Housing Office in Whitmore.

This office also compiles a list of other available apartments, and seeks to aid persons looking for housing. According to Don Pelkey, head of off-campus housing, realtors have been taking advantage of students through the use of office facilities. Bringing a list of available apartments to the office, the realtor then charges a location fee if a person is found who desires to rent the property. Pelkey is determined to stop this practice. "This office is here to serve the students who want housing. They shouldn't have to pay the fee," says Pelkey.

Most real estate agencies raised their rent this semester. According to several larger realtors, the reason for the rise was the increase in the tax rate in the Amherst area. "There is no direct relationship between the rise in dorm rent and the rise in apartment rent", according to one realtor who wishes to remain anonymous. The dorm rent hike was a result of a rise in maintenance costs, due to a 6% state labor raise. The $5-20 a month raise in apartment rent, however, is the result of "taxes".

According to Pelkey, "many people with property aren't out to exploit the student. Most are just out to make a buck."

Area Artists Work Highlight Northfield Arts Festival Show

NORTHFIELD, - The Festival Committee of the First Parish Unitarian Church announced today the names of area artists who will have special exhibits at the Northfield Town Hall as part of the Northfield Arts Festival, October 9-12. Viewing hours will be 1-9 p.m. daily.

Each artist will show three works. Of the group, two are sculptors: Homer Gunn and Ruth Simonds. Gunn, noted locally for his War Memorial in Greenfield, has exhibited frequently throughout New England. From 1957-1969, he was sculptor in residence at Deerfield Academy. His commissions include work for the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Dominick & Dominick, Greenfield, Amherst Savings Bank.

Ruth Simonds lives in Orange and teaches sculpture at the Northfield School. A Wellesley graduate, she studied in England and with Frank Epping in Lenox. Her work has been shown in New England and New York. Local commissions include works for Linden Hill School and the Northfield School.

Greenfield will be represented by two painters: Helen Juchnicki and Alfred McClung Lee, 3rd. Mrs. Juchnicki, primarily a landscape artist, will show a still life, a portrait, and a landscape at the Festival. Her reverence for nature is a key to her painting and, to her life in the workday world: she spends her days as Office Manager at the Connecticut River Watershed Council, a conservation organization in Greenfield.

Alfred McClung Lee, 3rd, came to Greenfield five years ago to develop the art program at Greenfield Community College. Now coordinator of the Art Curriculum there, his recent showings include exhibitions at Greenfield Community College, Bradford Junior College, and the Berkshire Art Festival where he was a prize-winner. Born in New Haven, Lee holds a M.F.A. from Rutgers University and is represented in New York City by the Maisel Galleries.

Deerfield's Frederick H. Larrabee studied painting at the School of fine and Applied Arts, Portland, and the National Academy in New York. Landscapes are his specialty; he works both in watercolor and acrylic, and has been commissioned to portray a number of Old Deerfield homes on canvas. With an advertising background, Larrabee runs his own free-lance advertising and commercial art business in Old Deerfield.

A. Hale Johnson of Colrain, a representational painter, is a graduate of the Newark (N.J.) School of Fine Art. Vice President of the Deerfield Valley Art Association, he has exhibited throughout New England and New Jersey and is the recipient of several awards from the Annual National Academic Artists Exhibition.

Two painters will represent the Amherst area. Conway-born Stephen Hamilton, a watercolorist, will show landscapes of Hawaii and Labrador-spots he often visits. Hamilton, encouraged early in his career by Robert Frost, now teaches at the Stoneleigh-Burnham School. Active in the inception and organization of the Leverett Craftsmen and Artists, he is now a Director of the group.

Eleanora Johnson, portraitist and landscape artist has won several firsts for watercolors and is an illustrator of children's books. She teaches classes in oils at the Old Mill in North Amherst; her portrait of Professor Frederick Loomis hangs in the Amherst College Museum.

Elice Pleropan of Ashfield will contribute works in three different mediums for the Festival: oil, watercolor, acrylic. She is active in the Ashfield Autumn Festival (scheduled for the first weekend in October). Her work is on view at the Petersham Crafts Center and the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

Laurie L. Seamans, a Gill resident, does most of her painting on commission. Trained at the Boston Museum School of Fine Arts, and at Harvard, Mrs. Seamans' portraits may be seen locally at Mount Hermon, Franklin County Public Hospital and the Greenfield Girls Club.

Mount Hermon faculty member, David Jorgenson received his B.F.A from the Hartford Art School of the University of Hartford, his M.F.A. from the Rhode Island School of Design. A derivative abstractionist, Jorgenson will exhibit both drawings and painting in the Columbus Day weekend show.

Northfield, host to the Arts Festival, will have two painters showing: Bess Moore and Bernice Webster. Both have exhibited frequently in the area; Miss Moore most recently at the Southern Vermont Art Center in Manchester, Vermont. Miss Webster has a one-man show scheduled for mid-October at the Carriage House of the Northfield Inn.

Scholarship Sourses Explained

UMass derives it's scholarship money from two principal sources, one, from state-appropriated budgets and secondly from endowment and trust scholarships donated by private corporations.

The money appropriated by the state is divided between the Boston and Amherst branches. Candidates eligible for scholarships are judged by their financial need and academic standing.

One minor source of undergraduate scholarship money the past year has been fees collected through traffic fines.

N.H. Questions Validy Of Literacy Tests

(AP) - A three judge federal panel renewed Tuesday a temporary order compelling New Hampshire to give provisional registration to illiterates for the November elections.

The order will stand until the panel decides on a Justice Department request to throw out the state's literacy tests for voting and an injunction to order illiterates the right to vote in the Nov. 3 elections.

The panel, composed of Court of Appeals Judge Frank M. Coffin of Maine, Maine District Judge Edward T. Gignoux and New Hampshire District Judge Hugh H. Bownes, promised a decision by Oct. 29.

U.S. Atty. David Brock of Concord argued provisions of the state constitution and laws requiring voters to pass literacy tests violate the 1970 Voting RIGHTS ACT.

Atty. Gen. Warren Rudman and Asst. Atty. Gen. David Souter argued that since the act faces a constitutional challenge before the United States Supreme Court it should not be applied to supersede a state law unless the federal government can demonstrate a "strong showing of constitutional likelihood" the Supreme Court will uphold the act.

Rudman also contended if the federal courts rule illiterates may vote, and if after the election the Supreme Court found the act invalid, a "tainted election" would result.

"It could cast doubt upon the validity of an election which contained votes of people who should not have voted," Rudman said.

However, Judge Coffin noted the panel might rule against allowing illiterates to vote and a ruling by the Supreme Court the act is invalid also would make for a "tainted election."

Rudman said that "in the view of the state of New Hampshire the first possibility is more serious."

Brock disagreed. "I would rather err on the side of civil liberties," he said.

He also said Congress had the right to vote has been granted to any citizen it cannot be arbitrarily denied to others."

Brock said he believes the act would be found valid by the Supreme Court.

He argued that denying illiterates the right to vote excludes them from the franchise in violation of the equal rights provision of the 14th amendment.

He admitted an Office of Economic Opportunity report listing 16,000 persons in the state over age 21 as being without more than fourth grade education is probably too high a figure to use in determining the number of illiterates, whose number, he agreed with Rudman, is unknown.

The original restraint order was issued by Judge Bownes, and so far, Brock said, has resulted in the registration of three illiterates.

Brock said the Supreme Court is expected to issue a decision soon after it begins hearings on the law Oct. 19.

The act also includes the 18 vear vote but that provision is not a part of the New Hampshire proceedings.

Rudman has agreed to the restraining order. However, he has directed voting officials to register illiterates on separate lists until a court ruling is made.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Once you convince a Gemini man of your loyalty, you practically own him. A woman wanting a man born under this zodiacal sign need only prove she is dedicated to his welfare. From then on it will be smooth sledding. Famous men born under Gemini include Tony Curtis, Joe Namath and Dean Martin.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Allies and opponents seem to change roles. Nothing is apt to be cut-and-dried. Necessary to be versatile, alert. A friend could be a foe — and vice versa. Some day.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): More exciting work, career possibilities are indicated. Those with ability to change things become concerned with you. Have facts available. Stick to ground rules.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Unusual events occur involving children, romance, creative endeavors. Featured is change, travel and plenty of variety. Your kind of time. Make contacts; go places and do things.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Question of how much to invest in home repairs, purchases seems to dominate. Strive for more harmony. Include family members in decision. Stress comfort and secure feeling.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Fine to grab at opportunity, but be sure legal papers are in order. Means check details. Don't rush off in all directions at once. Get promises in writing. This saves time, money, embarrassment.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Display willingness to handle responsibility. Money is involved. Some around you may appear supersensitive. Respect seniority but also stand up for your own rights.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): You are especially dynamic. You rid yourself of deadwood. There is new deal which favors you. Cycle is one of sudden action, quick change and a chance to pounce on opportunity.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): There are restrictions. But most are for your ultimate welfare. Don't attempt to buck the odds. Ride with the tide. A secret is exposed. You gain. Great silly is patience. Be confident.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Friends respond in what could be termed eccentric manner. Your own desires are unusual. You could become involved in bizarre situation. Children figure prominently. Keep ideas young.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 18): One who has means expresses willingness to invest. Make contacts. Publicize and advertise. Get out of rut. You gain if you lead the way. Don't permit pride to block progress. Accept.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Your own desires come closer to reality. Rush ahead. Contact persons at a distance. Read and write. Spread influence. Ally efforts with Libra individual. Express feelings in diplomatic manner.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Ask plenty of questions. More answers than you might imagine are available. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Provocative situation could develop unless you are careful.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are artistic curious about life, anxious to live up to creative potential. Painting could make a wonderful hobby. You are about to enter cycle which will see you attempting many new things: Yoga, astrology, sketching, writing. Life will be transformed from ordinary to scintillating.

A Look at Freshman Football . . .

Small in Number, Large in Size

By DAN KAMAL
Staff Reporter

"Despite the small turnout, I think we will have a very respectable team. It will be a stronger team with less speed but much bigger size than we had last year and, barring any major injuries, I look for a good season."

Such was the comment given by freshman football coach, David Kelley in pondering the outlook for this season's Little Redman grid squad. He was quite disappointed at the turnout of only 35 candidates for the team, but he feels that the lack of size in numbers will be compensated for by physical size, versatility and good spirit.

As far as a starting team goes, Kelley is fairly set on who will take the field against Boston University in Friday's opener. However, he is faced with a coach's ideal "problem" at quarterback He has three good prospects at the vital position. "each of whom could start."

According to Kelley, one of the prospects, Paul Hanson, 6'1-190, who hails from the Bronx, is especially adept at running the option besides being able to throw well.

Tom McMahon, 6'0-210, from Weymouth and Mark Tripucka (son of former pro quarterback Frank Tripucka), 5'11-185, out of Bordentown, N.J., both are outstanding prospects, with Tripucka having a bit of an edge in the passing department.

Coach David Kelley

The rest of the offense has Ken Hoff, 6'3-205, from N.J. at fullback. Hoff is an exceptionally strong blocker and runner and has good speed for his size.

Jim Mahaney, 5'10-180, from Peabody, 1969 Class A State Champs, and Phil Roland, 6'0-190 from Boxford will start at the halfback positions.

Up front on offense are Tom Price, 6'2-240, Bordentown, N.J., at center, Bill Hale, 6'2-230, from Rawley and Lynn Zulick, 6'0-200, Orwigsburg, Pa., at guards, Kevin Moran, 6'2-220, and Gene Pease, 6'6-250 at tackles, and Ed Hajdusek, 6'3-185, from N.Y., at tight end.

Coach Kelley is especially impressed with the play of Moran at tackle and calls him his "best offensive lineman at this point."

"One of the best all-around athletes on the team" is the way the frosh mentor described splitend Tim Berra (son of former N. Y. Yankee catching great Yogi Berra) who is also the starting safety on defense. Berra, 5'11-185, is also from Bordentown, N.J. by way of Bordentown Military Academy as are Price and Tripucka.

Carl Mattarochia, 5'11-198 from Ipswich and Mike McNiff, 6'0-212 from Littleton are the strongside linebackers, and Paul Reilly, 6'0-210, from Jamaica Plains and Mike Duffy, 5'10-190, East Rochester, N.Y., are the weak-side linebackers.

The defensive halfbacks who, according to Kelley, show exceptional speed and aggressiveness, are Bobby Ambrose at right halfback and Kevin Donahue from Haverhill at left halfback. Ambrose stands 6'1 and weighs 185, and Donahue's physical stats are 5'11-175.

Other players who will see considerable action are Bobby Foy, linebacker, Steve Davis, offensive guard and center, Ken Berry, splitend, Carl Northrup, defensive tackle, Steve Brady, defensive back and Mike Phillips, also a defensive back.

Kelley had this to say about Friday's opener. "I don't expect great execution, this being the first game, but I do expect great spirit and desire. As far as reports on B.U. I have heard very little about them. However, I do know that the game against that club will be very physical.. they always are."

Precisionettes March

The Precisionettes, the women's drill team, represented UMass at the Fall Foliage Festival Parade in North Adams this past Sunday. In spite of a steady downpour, the team marched two and a half miles in answer to the Parade Committee's invitation. This is the second consecutive year the Precform in North Adams, and it was the team's first public appearance this semester

The previous Saturday, the team held a car wash in Zayre's parking lot to help raise funds for future trips, and are also selling programs at all of the home football games this season.

The team is composed of UMass co-ed undergraduates, and currently holds the titles of second in the Nation, second on the East Coast, and first in New England. They were among the top ten women's drill teams invited to compete in the National Championships in Washington, D.C., for the annual Cherry Blossom Fes-

Police Nab Three In Tower Hold-up

Three area youths all non-students were apprehended early yesterday by university security officers after they had bound and gagged three students in George Washington Tower, threatened them with a loaded .38 caliber pistol, and then robbed the students of money and numerous room articles.

The three, Booby Joe Tubbs and Jimmy Lowell King, both of Springfield and Victor Richardson, an Amherst College student from Tulsa, Oklahoma, were charged with three counts of assault with a dangerous weapon with intent to rob in Hampshire County District Court yesterday. Tubbs was also charged with possession of a harmful drug and possession of a firearm on campus, a state violation enacted under a new law prohibiting firearms on a state campus. King was also charged with the firearm count.

Campus security officer Phyllis George received a call before midnight at her dispatcher's post that three unauthorized individuals were roaming through Mary Lyons House. A cruiser was then sent.

However, at 12:15, Officer George received another call from a male student at Washington Tower that three persons were running out of the dorm with stolen goods. Officer George dispatched another cruiser to the scene and the suspects, who were armed, were arrested after a search of their vehicle at 12:29, by Officers Schearer and Gablec of the campus security force.

They were taken to campus security headquarters, and placed under arrest.

The three youths were remended to county jail with bail ranging from $7,000 for Tubbs, $6500 for King and $6000 for Richardson. All entered pleas of not guilty.

Director of Campus Security, John Marchant praised the efforts of the officers involved saying, "All the police performed very well, and wisely. They made the arrest without using their revolvers, even though the suspects were armed. It was a fine job by the police, the students involved were a great aid with their alert phone call and by the dispatcher."

Students Initiate Parking Security

By JAMES E. GOLD
Thursday Issue Editor

Several Southwest students concerned with vandelism, particularly in F-lot, have drawn proposals for increased security in UMass parking lots.

The student committee, headed by Ed Dempsey, Vice-President of the Class of '72, have been meeting with Ken Burnham, assistant Southwest area coordinator. Their proposals include two men on each of two shifts provided with cameras, walkie-talkie radios and an attendant's booth. Their aim is to stop the large number of breaks into F-lot cars.

The committee says it has started with F-lot because they consider it number one in lack of security. They cite two cars stolen there last Thursday. "Cars are being stripped constantly," according to Burnham.

Preliminary plans call for men working 3-11 and 11-7 shifts. They would record all visible information, take pictures and maintain radio contact with the security office. One regular security officer and one work-studies student would work each shift. A patrol car and an attendant's booth for F-lot alone are also in the plans.

The committee needs $5,000 to start these plans. Funds cannot come from this year's vehicle registration fees, since they are insufficient to pay for increased security. Fees now go towards present lot maintenance, so the committee has decidsd to try to get initial funds from the Student Senate.

If the Senate funded the operations and parking fees were raised from $1 to $10 per year, the entire system would become self liquidating by the end of next year according to Burnham.

Burnham said the biggest problems are getting manpower and money. From there the committee projects that the University could buy its own tow trucks and implement the same systems in all parking lots. With approximately 9,000 students and hundreds of faculty members registering cars, an estimated $150,000 would be raised annually for the parking office, said Burnham.

PANTY RAID--Myrtha Dryer, 86, enrolled in Wayne State University this fall because she doesn't "want to expire from shere boredom." The lively co-ed said that she does not expect to take full advantage of the school's newly liberlized open house regulations.

After Two Hours

Senate, Lacking Quorum, Adjourns

by WAYNE SOINI
Staff Reporter

Last week the student senate evidenced its deterioration when no quorum showed and its scheduled meeting never convened. Last night the same senate, with but days remaining in its term before elections next week, was able to meet for two hours until a lack of quorum again caused a cessation of activity. Last night may have been the last meeting of the present senate since, traditionally, the meeting scheduled for election eve has failed to achieve a quorum.

Several important recommendations were voted into approval:

To the Board of Trustees it was recommended that the Athletic Council be restructured to include 8 students, 5 faculty and 3 alumni. By N.C.A.A. tradition, the faculty of athletic councils are the largest voting blocs and by rule students must be outnumbered on the council.

In supporting the restructuring of the council that controls the half-million dollars of the student athletic fee fund, senate treasurer Rick Verrochi stated, "It is time that students started controlling their own money. It is time we started working toward student autonomy."

Also recommended to the Board of Trustees was that traffic fines, currently five-dollars apiece for any violation, be returned to the older system of no-fine for first violation, $3 for second, and $5 for every violation thereafter. According to testimony heard last year by the services committee, increased fines do nothing to alleviate the parking or traffic violations.

To Chancellor Tippo it was recommended that the tri-partite Committee on Rents and Fees be reorganized. Services Committee chairman Ackerstein worded the motion, considered under special business, very strongly. The committee was to investigate as to whether present fees are "justifiable and fair" for students.

To the CEQ, Draft Counseling and Free University groups it was recommended that their constitutions be reworded so as to assure that their treasurers would be undergraduates. Treasurer Verrochi felt that the practice of keeping the treasury in the hands of undergraduates, in turn under the jurisdiction of student courts, is an important security measure. Other constitutions, those for Mobe, April 10-11 Committee, Community Action Foundation, and Art History Club were approved because their constitutions had this safe-guard written in.

The senate adjourned before taking action to place on the October ballots the referendum question: "Do you approve of the student senate's funding social action groups such as Coalition for Environmental Quality, Community Action Foundation, University Mobe, Draft Counseling Services, etc.?" It is improbably that this question will be placed before the general student body.

Early in the meeting many appointments made by President Glenn Elters were approved without objection by the senate, but Vice President Pat Beharry emphasized that more positions remain vacant. She mentioned a need for students in the Revision of the Picketing Code, Academic Honors, Health Council, Faculty Senate Library and Faculty Senate Budgets Committee. These positions are open to any student as well as to senators, and applications can be picked up at the senate office.

Teacher evaluation, which the senate has long hoped to become active about and eventually publish a critique booklet containing concise summaries of many courses to add in intelligent selection of both courses and faculty sections, has for the past year been the theme of only two or three people. This is a committee in need of dozens of students for small and large tasks.

Minutes after nine o'clock, not two hours after the meeting had begun, Glenn Elters entertained the motion to adjourn by virtue of the loss of quorum. Twenty-seven senators were needed, twenty-six were present. So this senate, which served under three presidents-Bruce Balboni, Cindy Olken, and Glenn Elters-, which made many important decisions, was so active during the student strike, a historic senate which made many decisions, adjourned for probably the last time.

When it next meets there will undoubtably be some of its members, a minority, who are running for re-election, who return, but also there will be many new senators under a constitution which allows for over one-hundred senators. It will be quite a change.

Treasurer Rick Verroche (center, back to camera) had to take a back-seat to president Blenn Elters (right, facing camera), who declared "no quorum" as the treasurer was attempting to move on the controversial social action funding referendum. (MDC photo by Tim Fagan)

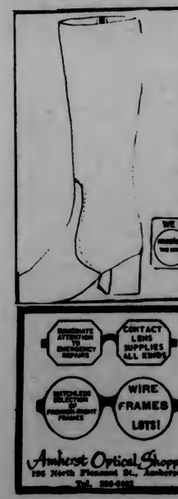
Action Lab Seeks Members

By LINDA A. BALICKI
Staff Reporter

"We have a program but no people." Such was the comment of Scott Caplain, General Educational Development Project Co-ordinator, following the extremely poor turnout at last night's Action-Lab meeting.

The GED Project is designed to assist people in obtaining a high school equivalency certificate by offering a tutorial service geared to student adaptability. Modeled upon an existing program in Fall River, the program would seek to involve members of the University community in improving the educational and vocational status of needy persons in the area.

The possibility also exists of expanding the program to include inmates of regional prisons. Irs goal would be to provide prisoners with the instruction needed to satisfactorily complete the General Educational Development Test. A follow-up service is also incorporated to assist interested participants in pursuing higher education or in the selection of an appropriate vocational endeavor.



Action-Lab, one of many projects sponsored by the UMass Community Affairs Foundation, is designed to allow members of the University community the opportunity to become involved in worthwhile community projects.

Rhodes Rebukes Agnew's Attack; Partisan Campaign Suspected

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - The youngest member of the President's Commission on Campus Unrest said Wednesday the "general tone, setting and context" of the criticism to the commission's report "suggests a political partisan intent."

Joseph Rhodes Jr., a 22 year old Harvard Fellow, told a news conference it was his opinion that Vice President Agnew, who criticized the commission's report before a luncheon audience Tuesday, "must have been acting on his own."

"There is no justification for the kind of partisan campaigning which pursues votes in an election year even at the expense of a public climate which may lead tc death on the campuses," Rhodes said.

Rhodes said President Nixon had assured commission members at a meeting Saturday that he would read the report thoroughly before commenting on its recommendations.

"Either the President was not acting in good faith," Rhodes said, "or the vice president was acting independently. I hope the President spoke in good faith."

"I find it regretable that Vice President Agnew would attempt to limit the President's options by publicly condemning the report while the President is out of the country," Rhodes said. President Nixon is presently on an eight day trip in Europe.

Shortly after Rhodes was appointed to the commission in June, Agnew called for his resignation after Rhodes was quoted as saying: "If statements by the President and vice president are killing people I want to know that." Rhodes was referring to students slain at Kent State and Jackson State colleges.

Agnew described Rhodes as make him counter productive to the work of the commission."

showing transparent bias that will make him counter productive to the work of the commission."

Rhodes said it was the feeling of the commission that "we must appeal to that single office in the country that can help the President's."

Although the report placed the blame for campus unrest on many shoulders, it said: "Only the President has the platform and prestige to urge all Americans, at once, to step back from the battlelines into which they are forming."

Agnew said the report "is sure to be taken as more pablum for the permissiveness." Rhodes called campus unrest "a national calamity" and a "major national division," and said the President must "be careful not to give support to those who are trying to divide the country." The President can show that he cares for the lives of students by not repressing those who attempt to change society."

Asked if he felt the vice president's criticism would bias the President's action on the report's recommendations, Rhodes said: "I will reserve my judgment on that until the President returns."

Nixon Given Orderly Yugoslavian Welcome

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) - President Nixon, "honored to be the first American president to visit Yugoslavia," appealed to all nations Wednesday night to respect the rights of others.

In toasting his visitor, Tito criticized the big powers for intervention in the Middle East and Indochina-and by implication the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968.

"The principles of independence, sovereignty, equality, non interference...must be respected with no exception," Tito said. "The infringement of these principles cannot be justified by any political, ideological or other motives."

Arriving from Italy, President Nixon received a friendly and orderly welcome from the people of Belgrade. Compared with his visit last year to Romania, however, the welcome seemed smaller and less vibrant. One reason may have been that Yugoslavia was just coming out of a day of mourning for the late Gamal Abdel Nasser, the Egyptian president whom Tito regarded warmly.

A Yugoslav security official estimated at 200,000 or more the crowd that lined the route from airport to downtown Belgrade.

has refused to recognize Moscow as the fountainhead of all Communist wisdom.

Latest Mideast Truce Violated; Jordanians Recontinue Attacks

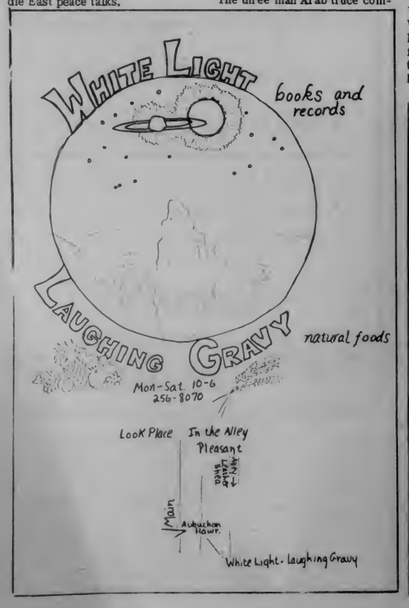
(AP) The Jordanian army launched artillery and ground attacks Wednesday against two guerrilla held towns in Northern Jordan in violation of the latest truce, the Palestine guerillas charged.

The three man Arab truce committee in Amman, the Jordanian capital, sent Arab observers to investigate. The two cities are Irbid, 50 miles north of Amman and the scene of violent fighting in the 11 day civil war, and Ramtha, 10 miles to the east.

In the United Nations, the United States appealed to Israel and Egypt to resume the stalled Middle East peace talks.

The Palestine guerrilla charge, broadcast over Damascus radio, said "the roar of explosions can be clearly heard from the Syrian border." Ramtha is only five miles from the frontier.

It called the bombardment "an open violation of the Cairo agreement" reached Sunday between King Hussein and guerrilla leader Yasir Arafat to stop the civil war.



A guerrilla communique described the ground attack as massive. It said the ground forces struck after a day long artillery bombardment of Irbid and Ramtha.

The three man Arab truce committee, headed by Premier Bahi Ladgham of Tunisia announced Tuesday a two phase plan for the restoration of peace. It calls for the withdrawl from Amman of both the army and the guerrillas.

The Palestinians in the broadcast from Damascus urged the committee to ensure the withdrawal of the troops without delay.

At the same time the Central Committee of the Palestinian Resistance Organization, the over all guerrilla leadership, ordered guerrillas to observe the cease fire.

At U.N. headquarters in New York, U.S. Ambassador Charles W. Yost, urging a resumption of Israel Egyptian peace talks, urged flexibility on all parties. He said the United States was willing to help get the talks reopened.

Sex Commission Urges Repeal Of Outmoded Social Regulations

WASHINGTON (AP) - Contending U.S. adult censorship laws are ineffective, unwarranted, often wrongfully enforced and unsupported by most Americans, a sharply divided Presidential Commission on Pornography recommended Wednesday that they be repealed.

It recommended state laws against public display of obscene pictures or their sale to children, but no similar ban on written matter. And it asked mass sex education so Americans can frankly and openly deal with sexual matters on an informed basis.

"The commission believes that there is no warrant for continued governmental interference," said the commission's 12 member majority, "with the full freedom of adults to read, obtain or view whatever material they wish."

The commission was named in 1967 by President Lyndon B. Johnson at the direction of Congress.

The White House has been at pains to note the commission was not appointed by President Nixon and has, in effect, disavowed its findings in advance. This indicates that few, if any, of its recommendations will be submitted as administration sponsored legislation.

The 18 member commission's majority, led by Chairman William B. Lockhart, said "the spirit and letter of our Constitution" prohibit governmental interference unless there is a clear threat of harm-and extensive investigation has produced no evidence either that smut is a significant cause of sex crimes or deviancy or that it corrupts the nation's moral climate.

But three dissenting commissioners accused the majority of recommending moral anarchy and slanting its report in favor of the pornography business. The dissenters, including Nixon's only appointee, Charles H. Keating Jr., said the purpose of anti obscenity laws is to protect the public, not individual, morality and never was based on what they called the impossible task of proving specific harmful effects.

"The commission's majority report," they asserted, "is a Magna Carta for the pornographer."

The majority said it considered and rejected both the fears of national moral decay and that legal pornography for adults would lead to greater exposure to children before concluding that adult censorship laws should be repealed.

It said such powerful influences as availability of contraceptives and the changing American woman's role-not pornography- are determinative factors in sexual crime and deviancy.

Army Washed Out By Monsoons

SAIGON (AP) - Monsoon storms are beginning to lash the critical northern sector of South Vietnam and could force the allies to abandon one or more of their forward bases.

Already, the northeast monsoon has cut heavily into American bombing strikes and reconnaissance flights.

And it could bring a large scale enemy offensive.

If the North Vietnamese follow their performance of the past, they will use the tropical rains as cover for a drive toward South Vietnam's populous coast lowlands.

Such a monsoon offensive would be aimed at capturing such cities as Hue, Quang Tri and Da Nang, long sought prizes of Hanoi's drive to control the South.

There was no solid indication of an oncoming assault but, as one U.S. commander noted, "It is always a possibility."

In Saigon, Gen. Creighton W. Abrams, commander of U.S. forces in Vietnam, was reported "resting comfortably" Wednesday night after he collapsed while attending a military ceremony earlier in the day.

The 56 year old commander suffered a dizzy spell shortly after noon during ceremonies honoring Australian army forces at Vung Tau, a seaside resort city 40 miles southeast of Saigon.

The role of acting commander of U.S. forces fell to his deputy, Lt. Gen. Frederick C. Weyand, who has been nominated for the four star rank of full general.

Germans Bust Big Talker

JERICHO, Vt. (AP) - The father of Mark Huessy, the 21 year old Vermonter sentenced to seven years in prison for remarks "against the state" in Ead, 18, called from Berlin to say the lawyer, Wolfgang Vogel, was going to talk with Mark about an appeal.

"The Berlin press noted in a news story this week that no appeal has ever been successful in cases of this kind," Dr. Huessy said.

Dr. and Mrs. Huessy are to go to Washington Thursday to see state department officials before going to Berlin themselves.

"Whether there was any defense attorney there at all, we don't know," the professor said, adding that advance indications were that the trial would last for a week and extra witnesses were to be called.

"This was a bunch of balony" he said. "The trial lasted only Monday and Tuesday. Apparently the court didn't make a decision until the end of the week when the seven year sentence was announced."

Mark, held in an East Berlin prison since January, was convicted of making "an inflamatory statement against the state." Dr. Huessy said his son allegedly remarked that "the East German government would collapse if Soviet troops left the country."

He said his son had gone to East Berlin to do research on the works of playwright Berholt Brecht.

Nasser Lies in State, World Leaders Convene

CAIRO-(AP)-Egypt is saying goodby to its leader Thursday on a scale probably unseen since the days of the Pharaohs.

Officials said they expected a million Egyptians to take part in the funeral of Gamal Abdel Nasser.

On the eve of the final farewell, vast crowds of Egyptians, many still screaming their grief, marched arm in arm in downtown Cairo. World leaders converging for the state funeral filed past Nasser's body, lying in state in Kubbeh Palace, the presidential residence.

Foremost among them was Premier Alexei N. Kosygin of the Soviet Union who came Tuesday.

Others arriving were: Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia, President Makarios of Cyprus, Premier Jacques Chablane Delmas of France, Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas Home of Britain, U.S. Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Elliot Richardson, the chiefs of state of most Arab countries and high level delegations from nearly all nations.

There were some notable absentees. President Nixon's decision not to attend was no surprise since Egypt has had no formal diplomatic relations with the United States since Nasser alleged American intervention on Israel's side in the 1967 war.

More unexpected was the absence of President Tito of Yugoslavia, who long was regarded as one of Nasser's closest friends, and Prime Minister Indira Ghandi of India who shared Nasser's claim to leadership of the so-called third world. Tito was receiving Nixon in Belgrade and apparently was more interested in that than making a gesture of respect to Nasser's memory.

Draft Loopholes Shut By S.S. System Order

WASHINGTON (AP) - Still plugging holes in its draft lottery system, the administration has knocked down the chance of escaping induction by becoming 1A late in the year.

The Selective Service System announced Wednesday a three month extension of draft leability for any 1-A man whose draft board has reached his lottery mumber but who has not been drafted by the end of the year.

The aim is to prevent the unfairness of drafting one man according to the lottery of last December and then passing up another man with a lower lottery number just because he became available along with a crowd of other low numbered men after the manpower needs were filled.

That is the kind of situation created by the mid year graduation of hundreds of thousands of college students, many holding lower numbers than those already called.

The time it takes to process such men into 1-A status leaves them unavailable for a draft call until late in the year, and the Pentagon has been unwilling to wait that long for recruits. The move leaves unsolved, however, a related fairness problem-that of the men already drafted to meet Pentagon needs because the latecomers were not available sooner. The carryover men will tend to benefit the new manpower pool facing next year's draft, while this year's pool sends extra men in their place.

The carryovers will in fact, be drafted for 1971 calls even before the regular 1971 manpower pools is toughed. Their draft priority will be second only to that of volumteers during next January, February and March.

Selective Service officials said they have no estimate of how many men will be carried over with this three month extended liability.

Selective Service has placed a ceiling of No. 195 nationwide this year, meaning the more than 4,000 local boards may not call men with higher numbers. But below that ceiling the boards have reached widely varying upper numbers.

Oil Prices Slip Upward

WASHINGTON (AP) - Two New England senators kept the pressure on the Nixon administration officials Wednesday to do something to ease what they called a worsening crisis over the supply and cost of home heating oil.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D Mass., called two of those officials to his capitol office.

He said later they told him several oil companies have agreed to produce more residual oil, used for heating and industrial purposes.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D Maine, in a statement released by his office, said the program the two officials outlined at a news conference Tuesday "reflects a callous disregard of New England's fuel shortage and began seeing the application of ways to effectively cope with the shortages," Muskie said.

Horton Succumbs Tuesday At Californian Home

ENCINO, Calif. (AP) - Actor Edward Everett Horton, fluttery master of comic befuddlement in plays, television and more than 100 movies during a 60 year career, is dead at the age of 84.

The wispy, purse mouthed character actor succumbed Tuesday at his estate in this San Fernando Valley suburb of Los Angeles. No cause was announced but the family requested donations to the American Cancer Society in lieu of flowers.

A lifelong bachelor who lived with his mother until she died at the age of 102, Horton is survived by two brothers and a widowed sister. The latter had shared his home in recent years.

Born in Brooklyn, N.Y., the son of a compositor for the New York Times, Horton made his professional debut in 1910 in the chorus of "The Mikdadd" soon after graduating from Columbia University.

He was alert, vigorous and busy almost until the end, making guest appearances in TV shows.

His last was a "The Governor and J.J." show taped a few weeks ago. He was hospitalized briefly earlier this month at Glens Falls, N. Y., for an undisclosed ailment, then returned here.

Horton polished his style until he was virtually an acting unique. A spindly six footer with an expression of genteel timidity, his trademarks were an air of flutter anxiety in the face of crisis, and his sly, mischievous grin. He was known as a master of drawing room comedy, but played almost any role that called for a display of confusion, panic or disintegration in the face of adversity-sales clerks, fussbudget businessmen, busy body relatives.

Sometimes he had played it straight. In his younger days, he was leading man to such stage beauties as Gertrude Dallas, Mary Servess, Dlance Yurka and Dorothy Dalton.

Horton's bread and butter over four decades was the play "Springtime for Henry" in which he appeared more than 2,600 times. Horton played Henry Dewlip in the tale of a reformed gay blade and the problems of mismatched lovers, mugging, laughing, crying, dancing. He executed to perfection the dovetailing line-starting a sentence, pausing at a certain point, then finishing with a change of thought usually good for a laugh.

In recent years he was often seen as a guest in television dramatic shows. Only last March he told an interviewer he figured he was "good for another 20 years."

He toured in stage vehicles into his 70's, but was best known to the public for his films. His heyday was the 1930's when he made as many as six films a year at $5,000 a week.

Why did he never marry? "Hard to say. You become so mesmerized by work that the idea of socializing you rather resent."

Time and date of private funeral services, at Forest Lawn Memorial Park in nearby Glendale, were withheld at family request.

Price Index Rises, Nixon Shown Wrong

WASHINGTON (AP) - Wholesale prices turned back up in September, taking some of the bloom from the Nixon administration's rosy view that it is winning the battle against inflation.

Food and fuels were the major factors in the rise of four tenths of one per cent in the government's Wholesale Price Index for September reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics Wednesday. The rise wiped out a four tenths drop in wholesale prices in August, the first decline in nearly three years.

The bureau's price report coincided with other government reports warning of possible widespread fuel shortages that could further boost prices, and a 2 per cent rise in prices paid to farmers for raw products.

Most of the wholesale price changes in both August and September were due to food prices which are frequently subject to month to month fluctuations. The corn blight caused sharp price hikes for corn and other grains, the report said.

Prices of a broad range of industrial raw materials rose a modest two tenths of one per cent, it said.

The price figures for September are preliminary and subject to change when fuller details are available.

Administration economists had cited both the August wholesale price drop and the relatively small rise of two tenths of one per cent in living costs as strong evidence that the battle against the worst inflation in 20 years is being won.

The September rise boosted the Wholesale Price Index back up to 117.7, meaning it cost wholesalers $117.70 on the average to buy food and industrial raw materials worth $100 in the 1957 59 base period.

The Wholesale Index was 3.6 per cent above a year ago, still in line with the approximately 3.5 per cent average of the last few months.

The bureau said fuels and power led the rise in industrial prices, echoing the government report warning of the possibility of winter fuel shortages.

That report by Chairman Paul W. McCracken of the President's Council of Economic Advisers and other officials said the government is easing import restrictions and other regulations governing fuels to try to avert shortages.

Ski Club Holds Raffle

An eye-catching display of ski equipment, the latest in ski wear and movies and slides accompanied the UMass Ski Club's raffle and membership drive yesterday in the Student Union lobby. Some 600 people purchased tickets in the raffle for a pair of Northland metal skis. Glenn Olcerst, 1974, was announced the winner in a late afternoon drawing.

The largest RSO group at UMass, the Ski Club had 600 members last year and hopes to grow to 1000 this year, according to 1969-70 club president John Newman. Ski enthusiasts, including faculty and students from other colleges, meet September through May to share movies, lectures and demonstrations on the sport of skiing at the club's bi-weekly meetings. New officers will be elected at the Ski Club's next meeting on October 13 at 8 p.m. in Mahar auditorium.

The Ski Club raises funds through dances, raffles, and its $4.00 annual membership fee. It provides members with free transportation on its trips throughout ski season. In addition, the club owns several sets of equipment which are rented to members at $1.00 per day, as well as publishing its own newsletter.

Five to seven day ski trips, weekend trips, week-long intercession trips and a 10-day European ski vacation will be arranged by the club this season.

Plans also include night ski trips and free on-campus lessons for beginning skiers. Club members receive a reduced price on lift tickets on all trips and are entitled to discounts on purchases at area ski shops.

Coordinator of Public Affairs

Howard Named to New Post

UMass has named Dr. Irving Howards, professor of government and specialist in state and local government, to the new post of coordinator of public affairs.

He will work with Prof. Joseph S. Marcus, special assistant for public affairs to Amherst Chancellor Oswald Tippo.

Dr. Irving Howards, newly appointed coordinator of public affairs.

Prof. Howards has had extensive experience working with state and local government offficials throughout the country. After receiving his doctorate from the University of Wisconsin he worked in the Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations and the Institute of Government and Public Affairs at the University of Illinois. He was also director of the Local Government Center at Southern Illinois University.

He came to the University as director of the Bureau of Government Research, and in the last few years has obtained more than $200,000 for the University in federal funds to support research dealing with various areas of state and local government.

During the 1969-1970 academic year, Prof. Howards was a member of the Faculty Senate Long Range Planning Committee. He will continue as professor in the department of government and is teaching a seminar in local government.

Agnew

Agnew's inflamatory remarks last Tuesday night in reaction to the Scranton Commission's report of campus unrest is singularly different from his previous vindictive bellowings.

The difference is that Agnew condemned a report which included the following paragraph:

"We strongly urge public officials at all levels of government to recognize that their public statements can either heal or divide. Harsh and bitter rhetoric can set citizen against citizen, exacerbate tension and encourage violence."

The importance of Agnew's "public statement" lies in the fact that it is a confirmation of the Nixon Administration's unwillingness to listen, much less heal.

The demise of the "Princeton Plan", the rampant apathy infecting American University, the continuing war in Vietnam, the Middle East boiling pot, the D.C. Crime Bill, etc. etc. ad nauseum, are all indications that political, social and cultural improvements are not about to occur without a change of methods on the part of the national student body.

And if you don't believe this, Agnew is right there to remind you that improvements are not forthcoming.

We will say one thing, Agnew is revolutionizing this country faster than any other single man. Whether this means struggle, liberation, repression or anarchy to you, you must admit that things are coming down hard, and our past fears are now our reality.

Unrest

WASHINGTON--There's probably nothing more embarassing for the President of the United States than to appoint a commission to investigate a serious situation in the country, and discover he's part of the problem.

This seems to have happened with the President's Commission on Campus Unrest, and the White House is taking it very hard. There is even some talk of a presidential commission to investigate unrest on presidential commissions.

A spokesman for this group, Harvey Troglodyte, told me:

"It's a terrible thing for this country, not to mention the fall elections, when a presidential commission blames the President and his Administration for what's going on in the United States."

"It sounds like another Pearl Harbor," I said, trying to ingratiate myself to him.

"We're not going to let it happen again," Troglodyte said. "If we can't have a presidential commission that supports the President we'll do away with presidential commissions for good."

"That's a very serious step," I said.

"It's not our fault. The President appointed the commission on campus unrest in good faith. He told them to get to the bottom of the student crisis and give him the answers to the hard questions that confront us all. He told Gov. Scranton to let the chips fall where they may. Instead of doing that, the Scranton report found the Vietnamese war, the President's decision to go into Cambodia and the rhetoric of his Administration partly responsible for campus unrest."

"But that isn't what the President wanted to hear," I protested.

"You can say that again," Troglodyte said. "Just because you tell a commission it has carte blanche to find out what is wrong in this country, the commission doesn't have a license to attack the Administration."

"What are you going to do about it?"

"We have several plans in mind. For one thing. We're seriously thinking of writing the report first and then appointing a presidential commission to sign it."

"That would eliminate a lot of soreheads," I agreed.

"It would also save the commission a lot of time and money. We know what should go into those reports. They have to start from scratch."

"It doesn't matter how you do it as long as you arrive at the truth," I agreed.

"The purpose of a presidential commission has been misunderstood by a vast number of Americans."

"What is its main function?" I asked.

"When the President announces he is appointing a presidential commission to study something, he is saying to the American people he is very concerned, and he is asking for answers to questions that all Americans are entitled to know."

"That's well put," I said. "What else?"

"That's it," Troglodyte said. "By the time the commission has come up with the answers, the President is counting on the problem to have gone away.

"By attacking the Administration, all the Scranton Commission has done is keep the 'campus unrest' issue alive."

"Gov. Scranton should have known better," I said.

"We should have," Troglodyte said. "One of the rules of politics is, 'Never ask for whom the bells toll during an election year."

The Movie Screen of Dorian Gray

About now the theater is filled with a rich odor of roses. All this is very essential since Boss the Novice is in town. Who made a film and sits back in the electric-green and motherfucker-purple upholstered seat to catch the first rushes. Boss changed his old name, which was Dorian isaac Gray, to Boss the Novice because he just didn't dig the other one. All is totally cool. His staff is all around with no clothes on, and they helped shoot the film "Charlie Darwin was a Dirty Old Monkey" for their own private kicks. This is a private showing out loud.

A bullet is going right through you ha ha ha, but it's aimed for the person on the other side. You can look too if you pseudoplease...Full moon chick picks the petals of her subterranean happy scalp and stuffs it in her ears/goes deaf..."loves me loves me not"...goes bald/blank trauma sees great Hollywood great himself Fred Astaire walking down the street step in some shit cha cha cha. She looks like Helen of Troy. Stonehenge is moving getting up. Wow! How do they do that? How did the cavemen lift all those big things and drag them all those miles? Was it easy?

No/ it's really a reckless trip here inside this bottle on the high seas. The needle is swimming on the surface of the record like a waterbug...or Jesus Christ...but it skips everytime the waves say "shoobee doo bee doo" She was semibeautiful. Someone left her out on the table too long.

So the snake says take off your clothes (in your head...since she was naked anyway). and I'll shed my skin for you. So she did this as a token gesture and coyly gave the excuse that the laundry was dirty anyway...So then the snake picks the rose and the rose is sniffed and all the pollen in the air gives certain people hayfever so we got to have rules about not sniffing roses in public.

"Hey I thot we wuz watchin a educational stag film of the times!" says Boss the Novice surprised at the mixing job that was done to the origianl takes. "hey! wot happined!" The screen was blank naked. It got up off its frameup and raped the staff, Boss the Novice included.-Stonehenge rerevisited with the sky falling down on top. When the usher entered he found hanging upon the wall, an empty space...as clean and precise as any space could be. Lying on the floor was a campfire of burnt boulders piercing the sky. They were withered, wrinkled, and loathsome of visage. It was not till he examined the markings that he recognized what it was.

A Voice From The Underground

(Ed. Note: The following is the letter signed by Dr. Timothy Leary and delivered to the offices of the Los Angeles Free Press, following his escape from prison a little over a week ago. It is reprinted here as a definitive statement from the underground.)

The following statement was written in P.O.W. camp and carried over the wall in full sight of two gun trucks. I offer love and gratitude to my Sisters and Brothers in the Weatherman underground who designed and executed my liberation. Rosemary and I are now with the underground, will continue to stay high and wage revolutionary war.

There is a time for peace and a time for war. There is the day of laughing Krishna and a day of grim Shiva. Brothers and Sisters, at this time let us have no more talk of peace. The conflict which we have sought to avoid is upon us. A world wide ecological religious warfare. Life vs. death.

Listen. It is a comfortable self-indulgent copout to look for conventional economical political solutions.

Brothers and sisters this is a war for survival, ask Huey and Angela, they dig it. Ask the wild free animals, they know it. Ask the turned on ecologists, they sadly admit it.

I declare that World War III is now being waged by short haired robots whose deliberate aim is to destroy the complex web of free wildlife by the imposition of mechanical order.

Listen. There are no neutrals in genetic warfare. There are no noncombatants at Buchenwald, My Lai, Solidad. You are either part of the death apparatus, or you belong to the network of free life.

Do not be deceived. It is the classic strategem of the death apparatus, or you belong to the network of free life.

Do not be deceived. It is the classic strategem of genocide to camouflage their wars as law and order police actions. Remember the Sioux, and the German Jews, and the Marijuana Pogroms, and the pious TWA indignation of airline hijacking.

If you fail to see that we are the victimes, defendents, of genocidal war, you will not understand the rage of the blacks, the fierceness of the browns, the holy fantacism of the Palestinians, the righteous mania of the Weathermen, and the persuasive resentment of the young.

Listen Americans, your government is an instrument of total lethal evil.

Remember the Buffalo and the Iroquois!

Remember Kennedy, King, Malcolm, Lennie!

Listen. There is no compromise with a machine. You cannot talk Peace and Love to a human or a robot whose every federal bureaucratic impulse is soulless, heartless, humorless, lifeless, loveless.

In this life sturggle we use the ancient holy strategies of our organic life:

1) Resist lovingly in the loyalty of underground Sisterhoods and Brotherhoods.

2) Resist passively, break lock-step...drop out.

3) Resist actively, sabotage, jam the computer... hijack planes...trash every lethal machine in the land.

4) Resist publicly; announce life...denounce death.

5) Resist privately; guerilla invisibility.

6) Resist beautifully; create organic art, music, music.

7) Resist biologically; be healthy...erotic... conspire with seed...breed.

8) Resist spiritually; stay high...praise God... love life...blow the mechanical mind with acid... dose them...dose them...dose them...

9) Resist physically; robot agents who threaten life must be disarmed, disabled, disconnected by force.

Arm yourself and shoot to live...life is never violent. To shoot a robot genocidal policeman is a sacred act.

Listen, Nixon. We were never that naive. We knew that flowers in your gun barrels were risky. We too remember Munich and Auschwitz all too well as we heralded love and raised our Woodstock fingers in a gentle sign of peace.

We begged you to live and let live, to love and let love. But you have chosen to kill and get killed. May God have mercy on your lost soul.

The last seven months I, a free wild man have been locked in P.O.W. camps. No living creature can survive in a cage. In my flight to freedom, I leave behind a million Brothers and Sisters in the P.O.W. prisons of Quintin, Solidad, Con

Sober Judgement

(Ed. Note: The following article by Neil Giroux was reprinted from The Greenfield Recorder, September 28, 1970.)

By NEIL GIROUX

BOSTON- University of Massachusetts Chancellor Oswald Tippo's "sober judgment" during his convocation address that radical student outbursts would bring "repressive legislation and serious budget cuts" must have served as a soothing salve for those taxpayers who get hot under the collar in the face of student disruptions.

The truth of the matter is, however, that the enlightened members of the state legislature realize that the window-smashing, obscenity scrawling, education-halting radicals constitute but a small proportion of the 20,000 Amherst-campus students.

Taxpaying parents--who incidentally vote the 280 members of the General Court into office every two years - would no doubt take a dim view of repressive legislation and budget cuts which affected the education of their children, especially when most students - children spend a judicious amount of time with the books.

* * * * *

DURING THE 1969-70 SESSION of the legislature, the House leadership frowned on an effort by a few generally conservative members who made a move to kill the $56 million UMass operating budget. There was a lot of "whip those student radicals into line by tightening the pursestrings" rhetoric, but the budget passed by a wide margin.

Several bills to curb students who were involved in building takeovers, and other disruptions were filed, but these were buried in committees - never again to see the light of day.

The level of activity in the legislature for repressive measures will undoubtedly fluctuate according to how much radical activity is taking place on the state-facility campuses, but progressive leadership, such as that provided by House Speaker David M. Bartley, D-Holyoke, will be able to forstall any strict measures that would adversely affect the entire student-faculty-administration structure.

* * * * *

MOREOVER, MANY MEMBERS of the House and Senate, including some who sit on the Ways and Means Committees that dole out state funds, pride themselves in being able to tell constituents that they were instrumental in promoting university growth.

There is little doubt that because this is Tippo's first year at the helm of the Amherst campus under the reorganized UMass system that he wanted to assure--as much as he could before hand--that the entire campus community understood clearly where he stands.

"Certainly you would have to be a moron to think that the taxpayers of this state will continue to appropriate large sums of money...if the university does not stay open to provide the education for which the money is voted," Tippo told the convocation gathering.

* * * * *

ASIDE FROM HIS UNFOUNDED fears on repressive legislation and budget cuts, Tippo was on very solid ground in attempting to cover all bets on what might come to be difficult campus situations during the coming year.

His calls for open job recruiting policies, freedom of speech for all points of view and freedom for all students not to have to put up with being denied access to classrooms because of strikes undoubtedly was aimed at radical students, but more importantly, it was aimed at faculty members who insist on positive direction from the top.

At the same time, Tippo was telling the students who are militating for change that they would have their opportunities to be heard and that students in general would have a voice in policy-making.

He promised, for example, that the administration would consult with students, faculty and administrators before the police were called onto the campus to quell any disturbances.

* * * * *

"BUT SURELY ANY THINKING person must realize that if we do not bring in the police in the event of a serious disturbance, the matter will be taken out of our hands," he warned.

The chancellor urged each faculty member to become acquainted with at least 15 students during the coming academic year--a move obviously calculated to disarm the students and faculty who claim the university is too big and impersonal.

It must be remembered , too, that the UMass system is headed by President Robert C. Wood who is committed to a policy of intra-university communication, with students-faculty and administration taking a full part.

As an additional checkvalve to unreasonable student pressures for immediate changes, Student Senate, Faculty Senate and administration channels of dialogue are open and working.

* * * * *

THE DANGER - as society demands that stability be restored-is that university administrators will begin to fear repression that might develop and then predicate policy on the basis of what might be.

Dr. John W. Lederle, who retired as UMass president last summer, said in an interview nearly two years ago that "none of us likes to admit it but the tactic of student takeover has been successful."

"Students have succeeded in forcing decisions that are usually debated long and hard, but we, as university presidents, have to try to keep ahead of the problems that cause students to take over buildings," Lederle said.

Campus Comment

To the editor:

If the University of Massachusetts can afford to build a gigantic student center, then why can't they afford to put a few lights in V lot for the protection of the motor vehicles of the students who park there? I am not saying that the installation of lights in V lot will stop the vandalism completely, but I believe it's a step in the right direction. If the University requires that I park in V lot, if I park on campus at all, I believe that they should assume minimal responsibility in protecting my automobile from the treachery of vandals.

To the editor:

Like what I'd like to know is what does somebody have to do to make a campus phone-call around here? Here in the Student Union--the meeting place of 18,000 people, there is one free campus phone...with a ragged piece of outdated crap hanging off a chain, for a telephone directory. Many people have surely gotten hassled by this idiotic deficiency. I always try calling information and it's always busy--5-1515. I am mad and I want to see this cheapness vindicated! Do I hear voices of agreement? Right on!

ICE: Did you know that there's no ice to be found on the UMass Campus for hockey? It's a pretty poor school, in our opinion, that does not have an indoor rink, especially since Massachusetts is one of the largest hockey states in the country.

According to Mr. MacKay of Amherst College, there have been numerous requests for ice time from interested persons of the UMass campus. In fact the interest in hockey in this area is so great that it is feared that in the next few years even the intercollegiate participation of UM-intercollegiate participation of UMass. will cease, unless this school can come up with it's own accommodations for ice.

It's really hard to believe, that with all the building going on on this campus and the high interest in the hockey program by the student body, that we have no rink, not even one on the drawing board.

13th floor of John Adams

To the Editor:

Concerning Mr. Verrochi's comments on the non-funding of the Precisionettes which appeared in Tuesday's Collegian; He omitted and failed to explore several points which are relevant to understanding the situation of not only the Precisionettes but also of many other interest groups on campus which are having financial problems as a result of Student Senate action.

"The greatest part of their former Senate funding went to the transporting of the women's drill team to campuses and cities far removed from the student body of our University." First of all, the team's performances are not far removed from the student body--the team members are a part of the student body. The two annual competitions in Boston are not far removed from the University--part of the University is in Boston, and a large number of UMass. Students are from the Boston area. Also, the parades in which the team represents the University are in cities such as Holyoke, Springfield, North Adams, Pittsfield and Amherst---hardly areas far removed from the University. The invitation to compete in the National Championships in Washington, D.C., is an honor bestowed on the team and the University. This recognizes your school, Mr. Verrochi, as having one of the top ten women's drill teams in the nation.

"Thus, those people who received the greatest benefit from student monies were, in the vast majority, non-students." The ones who received the direct benefits of the student monies were the students on the team who worked 450 extra hours in one academic year to compete with other teams for recognition and trophies to bring back to their sponsor. It may be said that those who see the team perform in competitions and parades receive some benefit from the monies, but in an indirect sense. What they do receive is pleasure from watching a team working together, having fun, and taking pride in what they do.

"Perhaps the place for the Team to go to find funding is the University's News Bureau, better known as the image-makers." The Precisionettes have carried the name of UMass to New York, Vermont, Washington, D.C., and throughout the state; the University Chorale has toured the state, the East, and has brought the name to Europe; the Basketball team has brought the name of the University to national prominence by its invitation to the N.I.T.; the Marching Band has contributed greatly to football games here and at many other colleges; the Football team has publicized the University by its Yankee Conference Championships; the Flying Redmen, the men's drill team, have contributed to the University's name. There are many other groups with varied interests, campus sponsored, who have created and held up an image--a good image of UMass and of themselves. Thousands of Alumni throughout the state look for this and appreciate it and consider it when making their contributions. This is something very necessary and very valuable for the academic maintenance of this school.

The students are not being exploited by having their Student Activities Taxes used to fund extracurricula groups at the University. Every student has many opportunities to participate in these groups. Is not your organization, Mr. Verrochi, funded by student monies? And do you not have the opportunity to vote on your own budget whereas other organizations do not? Your argument of exploitation (by such groups was your inference), so that "...the Administration can shirk in its duties of carrying the name of the University to prominance through academic excellance" is fallacious. Student-created, student-organized and student-supported groups are far removed from administrative control. Organizations such as the ones existing on campus are a part of academic excellence which includes opportunities to broaden interests, develop specializations, and have some constructive fun. No one can operate in an academic vacuum.

"...it is time that our total community reconsidered its priorities as to whether or not it wants a bunch of uniformed women parading on the football field at half-time, or to attempt to make some forceful change in a stagnated society." The Precisionettes do not "parade" on a football field; they execute an intricate drill routine which involves many hours of practice, creativity and imagination. Not funding the Precisionettes and other organizations is not going to change priorities and will not contribute to forceful change.

In reality, the money which you accuse the Administration of being unable to get in order to run our school effectively has its ultimate source in the taxpayers who see, read and hear about UMass., its varied activities and the human components of its community. They have to te considered as well as those in the state house when it comes to the question of the University obtaining money. Furthermore, a society (i.e. this campus community), has not, will not, and cannot become stagnated of many opportunities for individuality are open to its members.

Intoxicated Mothers Make Stoned Kids

High school students who have seen their mothers intoxicated have a significantly greater tendency to be drug users than those who have not.

This is one of the conclusions reached in a survey published in October's SCIENCE DIGEST conducted by two Port Washington, N.Y., high school students among 1 416 of their classmates.

The 47 question computer-aided survey was made under faculty supervision by James Velleman, 17, and Theodore Lawrence, 18, seniors at Schreiber High School, Port Washington.

Specifically, the survey shows that 44 per cent of the students who had observed their mothers under the influence of liquor had smoked marijuana and three times or more.

Only 27 per cent of those who had never seen their mothers drunk smoked marijuana three times or more.

Of students who had seen at least one parent have more than two or three drinks at a sitting, 16 per cent had used LSD more than twice. Only 7 per cent of those who had seen a parent drink less than two or three drinks at a time used LSD.

Use of tranquilizers or sleeping pills by parents also significantly increased the chances that the student was a drug user according to the survey. Even parental smoking is linked to student drug use, although to a lesser degree. Parental fighting, separation and divorce, on the other hand,showed relatively week correlations.

The strongest correlation revealed by the survey, however, was the use of marujuana by 70 per cent of the students whose long-time friends were users too. Only 6 per cent of the students whose friends were not users smoked marijuana. A strong correlation was also found between friends' use of LSD and the respondent's use.

'Obstructs President
Agnew Attacks Goodell

MONOT, N.D. (AP) - Vice President Spiro T. Agnew said Wednesday he would have to include New York Republican Sen. Charles E. Goodell, in "that awful fadical liberal coalition that has been obstructing the President's program since 1968," He said he would not support Goodell for re election.

And in New York, Goodell attacked Agnew, saying he was "deeply disappointed in Agnew's public statements about the presidential commission's report on campus unrest.

In a television interview taped for showing Wedvesday night in several North Dakota Cities, Agnew said: "Sen. Goodell has left his party. He has not supported this administration on the key measures."

At Palm Springs, Calif., Sept. 12 Agnew declined to specify that Goodell was one of his "radical liberal" targets, but said, "I probably will make some judgement about that particular senator somewhere along the campaign trail."

Goodell also faces Rep. Richard L. Ottinger, D N.Y. in the senatorial election.

Goodell said President Nixon has been "far ahead of Vice President Agnew in exercising constructive leadership on the issue" of campus unrest, and in such statements as a recent speech at Kansas State University, "has taken great care to moderate his own voice."

The presidential commission issued its report following an investigation of student deaths at Kent State University in Ohio and at Jackson State College in Mississippi.

Goodell said Agnew "has long been saying that it is the duty of men in public office to speak out against violence in our universities," and added:

"That is precisely what this report does-only the report, unlike the vice president speaks in balanced and moderate language.

Rabbi Gets His Own Hash Mark

Washington (AP) - The Treasury Department said Wednesday a Salem, Mass., rabbi has been charged with transportation and concealment of 10 pounds of hashish.

Myles J. Ambrose, commissioner of customs, said the package from Israel was examined in the mail division of the Customs Bureau in New Youk City Sept. 29. It was addressed to Gerald Kenneth Goldstein, Rabbi of Temple Shalom 287 Lafayette ST., Salem, and was delivered to him there under customs supervision, Ambrose said.

Later the package was taken to Goldstein's home. Customs agents entered with a search warrant, seized the drug valued at about $1,500 a pound and arrested Goldstein.

Goldstein was taken before a U.S. commissioner and released on his own recognition. A hearing has been scheduled for Oct. 23.

Drug Abuse In Service Labeled Communist Plot

WASHINGTON (AP) - A member of the House Armed Services Committee said today a Communist plot was responsible for some news reports of widespread drug use in the armed forces.

"Let us not forget for one minute that some of these outrageous and unconscienable allegations and reports are much more than just selling news media," said Rep. Durward G. Hall, R Mo.

"They are in fact implanted there as a part of the...planned deterioration of the esprit de corps, the morale, the command function and everything else of our armed forces by the Communist aggressor, and there isn't the slightest doubt about that."

Sen. Thomas Dodd, D Conn., has held hearings before his juvenile delinquency subcommittee in which some witnesses testified that the extent of drug abuse in the armed forces was much greater than the Pentagon would admit to.

Barlime said three recent "responsible" polls indicated roughly that 30 per cent of the servicemen in Southeast Asia had tried marijuana at some time before or during their service career, but that 70 per cent of those were only casual experimenters.

"I cannot emphasize too strongly that by far the overwhelming majority of service men, like other American youth are not drug users or addicts," Bartime said.

"They are clean cut, upstanding, intelligent individuals with a purpose in life."

Selective Service Revised Image With Tarr's Direction

WASHINGTON--(CPS)--For the last five months Curtis Tarr, the new director of the Selective Service system, has been engineering a full-scale drive to convert the image of the draft machine from one of the inept, unfair, discriminatory bureaucracy it was under Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, to an efficient, modern, benevolent agency which is seeking to meet the needs of the military while being as fair to everybody as it possibly can.

The image is a good one, with a face-lifting on every level. The new image doesn't change the fact that the Selective Service System is in the business of deciding which young lads are going to become cannon-fodder or pencil-pushers for the armed forces.

But Tarr has eliminated the most obvious and blatant inequities and rhetoric that used to anger liberals about Gen. Hershey's operation.

One area in which this is especially clear is the respect which the new director has shown for the unfavorable rulings recently handed down against the Selective Service System by the Supreme Court. In June, when the Supreme Court ruled that conscientous objectors need not base their claims of religious grounds, Tarr swiftly responded by drafting the first interpretation of the law and regulations ever done by the Selective Service System, embodying the spirit, and indeed, in several instances, the actual words of the Supreme Court decision.

In contrast, when, in 1965, the high court ruled that church membership and belief in a Supreme Being were not prerequisites for CO status, Gen. Hershey's only response was to issue unexplained, three years later, a new version of the CO form which eliminated references to church membership and belief in a Supreme Being.

The system's new "liberal and modern" image is also reflected by changes which have been made in the system's house organ, Selective Service News. Gen. Hershey's amusing but grisly front page, right-wing editorials have been eliminated and the news has taken on a totally new look. The format has changed from an old-fashioned, four-column letterpress job to a more fluid three-column offset format, printed in dark blue ink on pastel blue paper. Tarr has moved his column to the inside pages, and the copy has lost its humorous nature. The News used to be packed with wonderful trivialities which read like a Ripley's Believe It or Not for the war machine. This fascinating copy has been dropped, and the News now concentrates on hard news about the functioning of this system. Tarr also makes sure that the articles mention recent court decisions which have come down against the system whenever they are relevant, another innovation for the News.

These changes, however, are merely deceptive shirts of the system's image. Under all the new, liberal rhetoric, the system still continues to concentrate on its dual role of channeling the lives of young men and providing the military with men to be converted into killers.

Tarr's response to the Supreme Court's action in January, which eliminated punitive induction of violators of draft rules, became clear in late June, when the Selective Service regulations were amended to allow induction of men whose numbers had been reached but who had failed to report to a Pre-induction physical when ordered to. Confronted with the large number of men who fail to report to physicals, and the unwillingness of the Justice Department to prosecute these men for violation of the draft law, Tarr amended the regulations in such a way that serious resistors could be weeded out from procrastinators and men who are not certain that they are willing to face prison.

Under the new regulation, men who fail to report for the physical will be ordered to report for induction, and given a complete physical at the induction station. Those who fail to show up, or who refuse to step forward when their name is called will then be reported to the Justice Department for refusal of induction. Many men who skip the physical are apparently expected to report for induction, thereby accomplishing the system's purpose without the expense and hassle of a criminal prosecution. In this way the number of draft law trails is kept low, which was the function of the more blatantly oppressive delinquency rules in the first place, and yet the system is able to efficiently deal with the failure of men to report for physicals.

The Iron Horse ScreeningSunday

On Sunday, October 4, the UMass Speech Department Film Study Series will present "The Iron Horse," one of Hollywood's great western films. This 1924 epic was directed by John Ford, a master of the western film form. The theme focuses on a great historical event--the construction of the first transcontinental railroad in America.

Film critics have highly praised The Iron Horse and Ford's talented direction.

British film historian Paul Rotha in "The Film Til Now" states: "I remember with feeling the long line of railwaymen's camps on the progressing track, the spirit and adventure of the pioneers, the clever rendering of the maneuvers of the encircling Indians, and above all, the far stretching landscape across which the steel track was to run."

Ford combined clever direction and meticulous reconstitution of historical fact in "The Iron Horse." There is enough action, adventure, fine cinematography, and use of natural settings to please all film fans. "The Iron Horse" has truly become a most significant contribution to American film history.

There will be two showings of "The Iron Horse", 7 and 9 P.M. in Thompson 104. Series tickets will be available at the door. The general public is cordially invited.

UMass Black Theatre Stages We Shall Overcome: Or Else

The University of Massachusetts Black Repertory Theatre will present We Shall Overcome: Or Else on October 16 & 17 at 8:30 P.M. and October 18 at 3:00 P.M. in Bowker Auditorium. The play was written by Danny Scarborough, a graduate student in the UMass English Department and will be directed by Ester Terry, a Ph.D candidate in the Department of English and a member of the W.E.B. DeBois Department of Afro-American Studies.

production of We Shall Overcome: Or Else is the premiere performance of the play. The play is scheduled to run for one week at Saint Augustine's College in Raleigh, North Carolina in November. This particular production is jointly presented by Shaw University and Saint Augustine's College. Hampton Institute, in Hampton, Virginia and the Back Alley Theatre in Washington, D.C. have also expressed an interest in the play.

We Shall Overcome: Or Else is Scarborough's third play. He is presently nearing completion of a fourth, entitled Everything I Touch Turns. His other plays include The Extremist or Everything Oughta Be Black, which has been produced at numerous colleges and high schools, and Beyond the East Ridge, which has not beem produced, pending the completion of an ending for it.

When asked about his role as a Black playwright, Scarborough replied, "I try to communicate the language of my people, the inspirations of my people and the aspirations of my people. Unlike some modern Black playwrights who have been seduced into a mystical or hate whitey bag, I am interested in writing plays which, for the most part, stay within the realm of reality. This reality, because of the history of Black people in the United States, can, and on some occasions, should be one that can handle a Black/white encounter from a historical or asthetic perspective without becoming obsessed with "up against the wall...honkie." I am not trying to create a higher form of white art in Black face. I am desperately trying to work towards a form of liberation theatre that will encompass both the soul and spirit of the various Black experiences."

The basic setting for We Shall Overcome: Or Else...and if you are wondering "or else what" you will need to attend the play to find out.....is that of a custom from the author's community concerning the Wake. The Wake provides an opportunity for a cross-section of the Black Community to meet since the body of the alike another hit. "loved one" is brought home to "lie in state." The "Wake" in We Shall Overcome: Or Else gives the audience an opportunity to meet such people as Larry, who believes in the brotherhood of all people, and Bernard, who believes in the brotherhood of all Black people. The following quotes are from the play:

Larry: Look, Bernard, don't preach to me. I've served my time on the street. Man...how do some folks say it.....I've paid my dues.

Bernard: I, I, I,...It's always I. Why don't you ever speak in terms of We? We the people, We the United Black front, We the Black Community...We...

Larry: We some shit. I am only Black-assed Larry! One man, Bro. I speak for me.

Wilbert: Well you're doing a piss-poor job of that.

Last year, the Black Repertory Theatre produced Dutchman, Ole Judge Mose Is Dead, and Ceremonies in Dark Old Men. We Shall Overcome: Or Else looks to

Internal Security Comm. Votes To Keep Detention Camps Open

WASHINGTON (CPS) - The House Internal Security Committee (HISC) has voted to continue concentration camps in the United States, but with a provision barring detention "on account of race, color, or ancestry."

The committee voted 7-1 to report to the full House a bill which would leave intact the key sections of title II of the Emergency Detention Act of 1950, which allows the President to round up suspected subversives and put them in detention camps if he deems it necessary.

Concern over the bill had risen since the Nixon administration took office, especially after Asst. Attorndy General Richard Kleindienst was quoted in Atlantic Monthly Magazine as favoring their use for some radicals. He later denied having made the statement.

The Nixon administration recommended, and the Senate agreed, that the provisions establishing the detention camps should be repealed. However, HISE chairman Richard Ichord (D.-MO.), who feels radicals, especially the Black Panther Party, pose an imminent danger to the U.S., first bottled up the bill and finally agreed to report out the new amendment only after considerable pressure from other committee members.

The non-discrimination clause was intended to assuage the fears of both blacks and Japanese-Americans, who were rounded up during World War II. However, it would still allow the President to round up a group of radicals and throw them in detention camps, as long as he did not discriminate according to race, color, or ancestry.

There will be an attempt to amend the bill to bar all concentration camps when the bill reaches the floor of the House. If that fails, attempts will be made to find a compromise between the Senate and House versions in conference committees

Preminger Innocent In Cemetary Filming

QUINCY, MASS. (AP) - Film Director Otto Preminger was found innocent Wednesday on a charge of desecrating a cemetery while filming a scene in which actress Lisa Minelli allegedly took her clothes off.

Preminger testified that if he had known he was breaking the law "or injuring the feelings of anybody," he would not have filmed the scene for the movie "Tell Me that You Love Me Junie Moon" in the Blue Hill Cemetery in Braintree.

Braintree police Chief John V. Polio said he went to the cemetery July 31, 1969, and talked to Preminger, who he said "gave a brief description of what was going to happen-a scene in which a girl drops her dress and panties. Nothing much."

He said Miss Minelli lowered her dress to her waist several times while holding a bouquet of flowers in front of her, and then disrobed completely.

Grade Grievances Still Changeable

The University Academic Grievance Committee, set up by the Faculty Senate last May to deal with grievances registered by students who felt that they were being penalized by their instructors for taking part in the "strike," is still active and urges all students who still wish to protest a grade resulting from the "strike" to get in touch immediately with some member of the Committee.

If students want a letter grade changed to a "P" or if they got an "F" and want to changed to a "W", should go to the Registrar's Office. The membership of the Grievance Committee is:

CHICAGO (AP) - Third base man Ron Santo of the Chicago Cubs said he returned home from the club's current windup series against the Mets in New York because of ill health and not because of a purported threat against his life.

Santo, treated Tuesday for a virus attack, told Baseball Writer Edgar Munzel of the Chicago Sun Times: "My return home had nothing to do with that death threat. I was having dizzy spells and just wasn't feeling well. I came home to undergo a medical test.

"As a matter of fact, no threat was made to me directly. But I can't give any details or say anything about it at this time."

Santo said the club physician Dr. Jacob Suker, also found the Cub captain's blood pressure was up slightly and recommended a few days rest.

The death threat reportedly came in a letter from a disgruntled fan after the Pirates clinched the National League East title.

Yaz Winds Up at .329 With Hit in Sox Finale

BOSTON (AP) - Fritz Peterson became a 20-game winner for the first time in his career last night as the New York Yankees edged the Boston Red Sox 4-3 in the final game of the year for both clubs.

Carl Yastrzemski got one of the Boston hits, winding up at .329 in his bid for a fourth American League batting title.

Peterson gave up a solo homer to Billy Conigliaro in the second and a two-run shot to Luis Alvarado in the eighth in hiking his record to 20-11.

The Yanks scored in the third when Peterson doubled and scored on a wild pitch and added three more in the fourth on a run-scoring ground out and Jerry Kenney's two-run single.

Peterson gave up eight hits in 8-1/3 innings before Lindy McDaniel came on to get the Red Sox out with two men on base.

Jock Scholarship Cut-Backs Tabled at UVM

BURLINGTON, Vt. AP - The Student Association at the University of Vermont tabled last night proposals to cut back athletic scholarships.

The proposal, presented to the session by Gary McQuesten, of Montpelier, called also for a cut-back in the football schedule to the more modest ones played a few years ago.

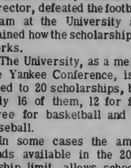
Football Capt. Gerry Elliott, and Dennis Lambert, assistant athletic director, defeated the football program at the University and explained how the scholarship system works.

The University, as a member of the Yankee Conference, is restricted to 20 scholarships, but used only 16 of them, 12 for football, three for basketball and one for baseball.

In some cases the amount of funds available in the 20 scholarship limit, allows schools with low in state tuition rates to give grants to more than the 20 persons who can get them where the tuition rates are higher.

The motion to table, which was adopted, called for further investigation before action is taken.

Frosh Hoop Team Meeting



There will be a team meeting of all freshman basketball candidates on Tuesday, Oct. 6 at 7 p.m. in room 249 of the Boyden Building.

Defensively-Tough Buffalo Hosts UMass in 'Must Game

Winless Bulls vs. Hungry Redmen

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

Buffalo is a hard team to figure. It has so much potential yet has met with no success at all. But the game against UMass has to be considered a "must" game for the Bulls if they are to make anything at all of this 0-3 season. However, the Redmen are hungry for another victory, too. So it looks to be a most interesting contest that will take place at Rotary Field in Buffalo on Saturday at 1:30 p.m. In 1969, Buffalo had one of the best all-around defenses in the nation. In fact, it ranked among the top ten in defense against scoring, pass defense and total defense. And considering the fact that the Bulls have most of their lettermen returning on defense, it is hard to understand their 0-3 record.

Coach Bob Deming, in his second year, must be quite disappointed in his squad's showing this fall. However, it must be considered that the Bulls have not exactly fallen on their faces. The three teams they have lost to, Ball State, Toledo, and Kent State, are all solid football teams. Yet undoubtedly, Deming expected more from his 1970 Bulls.

And so he should have. Here is what UMass will be up against on Saturday, interspersed with comments made by Redman defensive backfield coach Milt Piepul at yesterday's Redmen Quarterback Club Luncheon.

At quarterback will be 6'2-195 lb. junior Kirk Barton. Barton "likes the option" and has improved gradually in the Bulls three contests this season. Also seeing action this fall has been Ed Perry, but because Perry fumbled two snaps from center last week against Kent St., Barton will probably be doing most of the signal calling.

Joining Barton in the backfield will be halfbacks John Faller and Doug Kozel. Faller averages about 4.5 yards a try and is "the workhorse" of the team while Kozel, 5'11-190 lb., helps keep the defense honest.

At fullback is 6'1-205 lb. senior Joe Zelmanski. Zelmanski is described as a "dangerous runner" and teams with Faller to provide a powerful one-two running punch for the Bulls.

Anchoring the offensive line is co-captain Chuck Donnor. The 6'1-215 lb. center has lettered for two seasons and is regarded as one of the best in the East.

Flanking Donnor are guards Jerry Elwell, 6'0-200 lb., and Tom Centofanti, 6'0-210 lb., along with tackles Mike Gasper, 6'2-227 lb., and Bill Winnett, 6'2-226 lb. Elwell is "the best blocker" on the team while Centofanti was an Associated Press All-East honorable mention choice in 1969.

The ends are seniors Joe Moresco and Joe Hudson. Hudson, 6'1-222lb., has been switched from defensive end. Moresco, 6'2-176 lb., though not big in size, has good hands and caught one TD pass last yewr.

That, then, is the Buffalo offense. Whether it operates efficientlY or not is generally the key to the Bulls' success. For as far as defense is concerned, Buffalo has little to worry about.

The Bulls "down four men are their toughest men on defense" and probably the toughest UMass will face all season. At tackles, Buffalo has two of the biggest around. They are Rovell Jones, 6'2-266 lb., and Barry Atkinson, 6'2-265 lb. Those weights are conservative estimates and the interior Redman offensive linemen will probably have their sternest test thus far against this twosome.

As good as the tackles are, the ends are probably better. Although not possessing the tremendous size of Jones or Atkinson, Tom Vigneau, a 6'1-212 lb. senior, and co-captain Prentis Henley, a 6'0-236 lb. senior, have at least as much ability. Among the awards that Vigneau received in 1969 were selections as Buffalo's defensive player of the year, Associated Press All-America honorable mention, Associated Press All-East, and All-ECAC Division I.

The Bulls employ four linebackers in their 4-4-3 defense. The inside men are 6'0-210 lb. Dave Majcher and 6'0-205 lb. Larry Madden while 5'11-195 lb. Ted Butler and 6'1-185 lb. Bruce Fraser dover the outside. Along with these four, the Bulls have a great deal of depth at this position.

If there is a weakness in the Bulls defense, it would have to be the inexperience of their secondary. Coach Deming will be starting three sophomores against the Redmen and this fact could lead the Redmen to a more active passing game than that which they are usually accustomed to.

The sophomores are safety Tom Osika, 6'0-180 lb., and halfbacks Buddy Boughton, 5'10-177 lb., and Walt Nichols, 5'10-182 lb. Nichols has been converted from an offensive halfback and Osika is also a punter.

With the 1970 season being a flop of flops for Buffalo, UMass should be very wary of the Bulls. This is a team that many experts selected as among the best in the East and yet they are winless at this point. A situation like this must cause some feeling of frustration among the Bulls personnel and one would expect that some of this will be directed at the Redmen on Saturday at Rotary Field.

QB Luncheon Honors Pena, Farrelly

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Another large turnout saw UMass guard Bob Pena notch his second straight offensive player of the week award and witnessed a deserving John Farrelly honored as the top Redman defensive performer, both for their efforts in UMass' 27-0 losing cause against Dartmouth this past Saturday, as the Redmen Quarterback Club presented its third weekly luncheon of the young autumn yesterday afternoon at the Newman Center.

With eight luncheons yet to follow, the first three Varsity M Club-sponsored events have drawn well over 100 persons each week. The initial week count was 140 and, last Wednesday, 130 showed up. Yesterday, another crowd of about 130 attended.

None of the many present were surprised at the selection of Pena, who has been the top Redman offensive performer for both of UMass games this fall. And little wonder, as films of the Dartmouth game showed Pena, a 6'2-240 lb. native of Falmouth and Red Sox star George Scott's brother-in-law, opening up gaping holes for the passages of Redman runners.

Farrelly, who was honored earlier this week as the Yankee Conference defensive player of the week, certainly deserved this additional crown. He was literally all over the field against the Indians last Saturday. The 6'1-210 lb. senior co-captain of UMass was in on no less than 23 tackles in that fray.

As a featured speaker for the affair, Redman defensive backfield coach Milt Piepul presented a scouting report on UMass upcoming opponent, Buffalo. He labeled the Bulls as "probably the most massive piece of humanity we'll see all year."

In providing a quick review of Buffalo's year to date (The Bulls are 0-3 thus far) Piepul said that it looked like a terrible football team in its first game, a 14-7 loss to Ball State, but improved noticably in the second half of its second defeat, at the hands of Toledo, 27-6. Piepul indicated that errors cost the Bulls a win in their third game in which they were drubbed 27-21 by Kent State.

Buffalo's problem area, much like UMass, is its offense, but Piepul feels that the Bulls are getting stronger on the attack from week to week. On offense, they're stingy; they like to keep control of the ball for as long as possible.

Ferriter Pleased With Parking Proposal

By PAULA MAXIM
Staff Reporter

"Great" and "wonderful" were the adjectives used by Mr. Robert Ferriter, Parking Coordinator, in describing the proposals for parking security which were drawn up by a committee of Southwest students. This committee, headed by Ed Dempsey, Vice-President of the Class of '72, and in collaboration with Ken Burnham, assistant Southwest Area Coordinator, called for increased protection for UMass parking lots, with particular attention directed at F-lot.

Increased commuter population is causing traffic snarls and cramped parking spaces. An old problem - any new solutions? (MDC photo by Steve Schmidt)

Mr. Ferriter emphatically claimed this to be a "timely article" but stressed that in order to put these proposals into action "authority must be delegated as well as responsibility." The point in question is that the Parking Authority is not an authority as such, but a SERVICE committed to function within the limits of a general fund, these funds being employed in the present maintenance of the lots.

In regard to the proposal of raising the parking fee from $1 to $5, Mr. Ferriter refrained from citing a specific or ideal fee, but termed the present fee of $1, which registers a car for both semesters, as a "good buy" when compared to the usual parking fees in other areas outside of the University which range from $2 to $5 an hour and even higher weekly rates.

One area of the proposal with which Mr. Ferriter was particularly pleased was the use of the work-study students. He feels that the students of UMass are exemplary in their actions and their attitudes and that their participation in the proposed security plan would be of invaluable importance. He optimistically added that their presence could be successful in deterring 50% of the would-be crimes.

While praising the student security proposal, Mr. Ferriter made it clear that none of the lots are without a form of protection at the present time. Although F and V lots, situated near the stadium, are without attendant's booths, they are included in the "runs" of officers who periodically check each lot for suspicious actions. He cited that each time parking enforcement agents have seen persons under or tooling with a car, they have stopped, asked for identification and checked them out. Although many of the persons are the owners of the cars, they have repeatedly expressed thanks for the precautions.

Concerning the crowding of the lots, Ferriter vows that the Parking Authority has "tried to accomodate each lot with the maximum number of cars possible." Due to the tremendous increase of commuters, approximated at 3000 more than previous years, V-lot has been opened in order to assure parking spots for all.

Eagerly looking forward to the opening of the Campus Center Garage next week as relief for some of the crowding, Ferriter termed it as a "good investment" and pointed out its excellent location and reasonable prices, $0.25 for the first hour and $0.15 for each following hour up to $2.

In dealing with violators, Ferriter termed the policy as a "soft-sell enforcement." Towing is looked upon as undesirable by the Parking Authority but need does arise. Therefore, towing is applied "only in tow zones and when the parking is detrimental to the health and welfare of the community."

When questioned about the student parking which has occured on N. Pleasant St. in front of the School of Education, Mr. Ferriter clarified that this was beyond his jurisdiction and was under the control of the Town of Amherst. However, he did warn that the Amherst Police have been known to give out tickets when the situation became obstructive.

Mr. Ferriter went to great lengths to stress his high regard for the Parking Authority staff, namely the students in the office and the men who make up the ranks of Parking Authority agents. He emphasizes that theirs is a "public relations service" established for the students.

Referendum '70 Begins With Leaflet Campaign

The UMass Student Mobilizing Committee, will begin leafletting in Holyoke and Springfield tomorrow as part of their active support for Vietnam Referendum '70.

The aim of the leafletting is, according to the Student Mobe, to inform people that a planned withdrawal of troops is nothing more than the government's present policy of gradual withdrawal and does not mean an end to the war...The only clear anti-war position and the only policy which can end the war and let the people of Vietnam direct their own destiny, they contend, is an immediate withdrawal of all troops from Vietnam.

To accomplish this goal, Mobe members will be mounting a massive "Vote C for Immediate Withdrawal" leafletting campaign in area shopping centers and factories each Saturday until November 3. These activities will culminate in a large-scale campaign during the days for anti-war demonstrations on October 30 and 31.

Saturday, October 3, shopping centers in Springfield will be leafletted to vote for Immediate Withdrawal.

All those interested in participating should meet in the Old Student Union tomorrow at 10 A.M. for Springfield and 1 P.M. for Holyoke.

Financial Aid Office Explains Work—Study

Gerald Miller. "The intent of congress was to provide a source of earnings for those who need it," said Miller adding that this was the "Spirit of the legislation."

Those students on the Work-Study program are employed throughout the campus with priority for "campus wide" functions such as security guards in dorms and student telephone operators. When asked why there seemed to be difficulty in acquiring work study students in most departments and activities, Morrissey responded "Very few, if any departments got the number of work-study students requested." He pointed to the inadequacy of the funds saying, "if everybody on work-study worked ten hours instead of fifteen, we'll just about come out with the skin of our teeth." He explained that the federal funds, which are administered by H.E.W., only provided 80% of the students income. The rest must come from the employer of the student.

The biggest drain on the funds according to Miller is the summer, full-time employment programs on work-study. Miller also cited the 15¢ rise in the minimum wage this year to $1.60. If the funds did seem tighter this year it might be the fact that last year work study received a $100,000 shot in the arm late in the summer. Those monies went directly into the Fall payrolls.

For further information and assistance students are advised to contact Gerald A. Miller at the Placement and Financial Aid office in Whitmore.

In 1964 the U.S. Congress approved a bill, the Economic Opportunity Act, which, in its present form, has provided UMass with close to a half million dollars in aid to students. The program "Work-Study" gives financial backing for approximately 350 students at UMass who are employed around the campus - one quarter of the student labor force.

Robert J. Morrissey, Director of Financial Aid and Placement, explained that Work-Study, contrary to rumor, has expanded its monetary base this year from a total of $403,533.00 for the calendar year 1969 to $540,000 for 1970. Morrissey further told of efforts to double next year's work-study budget to over one million dollars. He noted, however, that 25% of the funds is allocated to UMass-Boston.

Students who were informed of their acceptance into the work-study program this summer are urged to contact the Financial Aid office by Wednesday, October 7. According to Morrissey, EVERY STUDENT who received a letter from financial aid, has received a job under work study, but, after October 7, "Those who show up with the letter won't be honored." He added that there aren't any more work-study jobs available to those who did not apply last spring. Cut off for next year's work study was set at March 1.

Work study is granted on the "basis of financial need" according to Morrissey's assistant

Tippo Urges Fac-Sen To Choose Academic Officers

By DAVID WILLIAMS
Tuesday Issue Editor

Stating that he didn't want to rush anyone, but that they had two weeks to do the job, Chancellor Oswald Tippo urged the Faculty Senate to get on with the job of selecting search committees for the Chief Academic Officers.

Tippo outlined the make-up of the committees for the Senate, approved in principle by the Trustees earlier in the summer. The make-up of the committee for the Academic office, now held by Associate Provost Robert Gluckstern is ten faculty, four undergrads and one graduate student.

The search for a new Student Affairs head, the post now handled by Special Assistant to the Chancellor for Student Affairs Randolph Bromery, will be led by two faculty members, ten undergrads, one graduate student and five people from the area of student affairs.

The successor to Special Assistant Joseph Marcus in the Public Affairs office will be chosen by four faculty, three undergrads, one grad student and four people from the field of Public Affairs.

Six faculty, six undergrads, two grad students and six people from the field of Supporting Services will search for a man to fill that post.

Tippo urged the Senate to begin selection of the committees as soon as possible.

The make-up of the committees has been weighted in favor of the group that is most directly affected by the particular job. Thus the Academic Officer committee has more faculty than students while the Student Affairs committee is dominated by students.

Turning to other matters, the Senate heard a report from the Senate representative to the Trustees, John Roberts, and complaints from various members about the Princeton Plan.

Professor Henry Korson was taken to task for remarks allegedly made after a Trustees meeting. Some members of the Senate felt that Korson had exceeded his authority as delegate to the Trustees by remarking that he did not think the Senate would pass the Princeton Plan after the Trustees passed the amended version of it.

Professor Ellsworth Barnard then raised a question about the grading and testing policies during the last week of October. He was at first ruled out of order but was allowed to speak eventually. He said that the days of the "divine right of kings" were over and that instructors and faculty should recognize this.

He prefaced his remarks by reading portions of an editorial which appeared in the Daily Collegian which stated that some teachers had threatened to take punitive action against students participating in the amended Princeton Plan. He announced his willingness to serve on a grievance committee should the need arise. Various other senators also spoke on this issue and the consensus seemed to be that all those teaching at the University should comply with the Trustee's wishes in regards to the amended Princeton Plan.

Int'l Program Described At Prince Coffee Hour

By DAVID CASTALDI
Staff Reporter

A definite need to create closer relationships between foreign students and other students on campus was expressed at an informal coffee hour held last night in Prince House.

Before considering the topic of the night, guest speaker Dr. Barbara Burn, director of internationan programs at the Whitmore office, spoke to the group. The office of international programs, which was organized less than two years ago, handles most of the paper work vital to the interest of foreign students studying here at the university, and those students who desire to study abroad. Dr. Burn stated that about 600 foreign students per year come to study at UMass, whereas only about 300 university students travel overseas to study.

The number of foreign students here is continually growing despite the fact that the university is not so conveniently located as Harvard in Boston and University of California at Berkeley are for newly-arrived foreign students.

The office of international programs, although relatively new and operating with a staff of four full time members and one part time member, is striving to involve itself with as many activities as possible. The office members work cooperatively with the faculty senate committee on foreign student academic affairs to aid foreign students whenever possible. Recommendations on programs and policies are provided, as well as a bulletin which publishes information on visas, apartments, financial aid and other information.

Dr. Burn mentioned that the Student Senate has recently donated funds for helping undergraduates studying abroad with their expenses, for bringing more foreign students to the United States, and for establishing closer contact between foreign students and American students.

"Funds from the Student Senate went from 0 in '68 and '69 to $500 and then up to $1,000," she said.

Dr. Burn also expressed that she hopel to develop projects designed to enrich the program of the International Club, many of whose members were in attendance at the coffee hour. The International Club is open to all members of the university community and is not restricted to foreign students as some mistakenly believe.

It is not only Dr. Burn's desire but also the desire of others at the international programs office to see the eventual creation of an "international house". Prince House, which is composed of about 1/3 foreign students is the closest the administration has come to achieving this goal.

At the close of the talk, the president of the International Club at Amherst College invited all to attend a picnic in two weeks for all club members within the 5-college community area.

The meeting then proceeded to the topic at hand--"What Life is Like in Russia." Slides were shown, accompanied by explanatory notes. A graduate student who spent last summer touring Moscow, Leningrad, Kiev, and other large cities gave the talk.

Two More Arab Leaders Ill Nixon To Spain; Increases Aid

(AP) - LONDON - London monitors of Middle East radio reported that Acting President Anwar Sadat suffered a heart attack while attending deceased President Abdul Nasser's funeral yesterday.

According to the report he apparently recovered after medical treatment. The report also said that Deputy Secretary of the Arab Socialist Party Ali Sabri also suffered a seizure.

The news agency attributed the attacks to "emotionalism" brought about by Nasser's death. Sadat, the report went on, was able to return to the funeral later and visit Nasser's house.

There was no additional report on Sabri.

Campus Center Suggestion Box

Complaints, gripes and general criticism about the Campus Center abound in profusion. Some of the criticism is well-founded and highly constructive while a good part of it is misinformation. The SUG Board has installed a suggestion box in the second floor lobby next to the scheduling desk. This suggestion box is a vehicle through which you can shape this building to your needs. SUG Board determines what suggestions will be acted upon and instigates that action through people responsible for those areas which are being criticized. Corrections can't be made if faults aren't known. Use the suggestion box to your own advantage and to the advantage of the community at large. The following suggestions represent some of the more common issues raised.

SUGGESTION; How about opening the rest of the building for students?

ANSWER: This building IS open to students.

The first two floors are almost exclusively student oriented. The fourth through the seventh floors are hotel rooms. These rooms can be reserved by students on the big weekends (Homecoming, Winter Carnival, etc.) and during graduation week. The eighth floor contains the administrative offices of the Campus Center and meeting rooms. The ninth floor contains the offices of the division of Continuing Education and more meeting rooms. These meeting rooms are open to students on a reserved basis at no charge. See scheduling desk for further information. Some of these rooms will be open for study. The number will be listed on the daily schedule posted in both the Center and the Union and in the elevators. The tenth floor contains small dining rooms, meeting rooms and a large cafateria. These are also on a reserved basis, open to student groups. The eleventh floor contains what will be the Top of Campus Restaurant, a cocktail lounge and two small dining rooms which can be reserved for all types of functions. For further information see scheduling. Contrary to popular belief these floors are open to students and student activities. No rental fees are charged (unless an admission is charged.) It is a simple matter of reserving a meeting room for your group or organization.

SUGGESTION: To create a more livable feeling in this insane structure, I suggest one paint the walls with an enamel paint in different warm colors and hang curtains and artworks. Get rid of the goddam coldness! We're people, not machines.

ANSWER: The Art Committee of the Campus Center Program Council is investigating the possibility of purchasing a type of surface covering which could be painted on and hung easily for a graffite wall. Murals and tapestries also being considered.

SUGGESTION: The lounge areas are full of students sitting on the floors. The "Conference rooms" are empty and locked. Breuer likes static space. We don't. Space is space. Names of rooms don't have to define the way they are used.

ANSWER; Certain number of these rooms are being opened for studying. The numbers will be listed on the daily schedule in both buildings and on the elevators.

SUGGESTION: Put obvious signs on the walls showing how to find rooms--where to go for which numbers.

ANSWER; Being done now.

SUGGESTION: As one who helped finance this building I am concerned to help diminish the theft in this building. It is well worth the effort time, money, etc. necessary to put porters at exits to observe possible "Campus Center lifters" or at least there should be a walking detective or two to help alleviate the problem (as in dept. stores.)

ANSWER: There are three guards on duty and one in the bookstore. Plans are being made for more.

SUGGESTION: Please regard selection of radio channel.

ANSWER: There are plans to obtain tapes for the Campus Center, however, equipment must first be purchased on which to play them. Until such hardware is installed WMUA will be played.

SUGGESTION: Have a drug store that will be open on Sundays.

ANSWER: The University has no permit to operate a drug store. The lobby counter in the union carries aspirin, cough drops, etc. In order to operate a drug store a registered pharmicist would have to be on duty at all times.

SUGGESTION: Put plants in the lobby, ferns, rubber plants, Zebra, and Philodendron and hanging potted plants on the walls.

ANSWER: Looking into possibility of obtaining these from Agriculture Department.

SUGGESTION: Coin operated book lockers in the vicinity of the campus bookstore. The lockers in the Student Union were arranged such that they returned the coin when the locker was reopened, thus costing the student nothing to have his books kept safe.

ANSWER; Old ones have been brought over.

SUGGESTION: Put at least one mirror over one sink (or next to a sink if hair is a problem) in the ladies and mens rooms.

REASON: Many people who wear contact lenses need water to apply them as well as a mirror. Present situation makes it pretty hard for girls and impossible for guys.

ANSWER: Mirrors all on order.

Southwest Area Plans Elections

Students interested in running for the Southwest Assembly positions should obtain nomination papers in Mrs. Schnarr's office in the lobby of Coolidge. The deadline for filing is October 7 at noon. Elections will be held the following day.

To deal with the problems of environment, lack of communication, and finances, the Assembly is urging more student involvement and planning structural reforms.

An important part of the area reform is a proposed Southwest Area Newspaper. By putting out an area paper, members of the assembly hope to keep students informed of area happenings.

The Assembly will also work to improve the poor food services. This includes not only the quality of food, but also the problems involved with mandatory meal tickets. Students will also explore the possibility of alternatives to the Little Hatch.

A new committee structure will also be experimented with this year. The new committee structures will allow a greater concentration of energy on area such as environment, cultural-academic affairs, finances, and social life.

To the editor:
Aware of the importance of a healthy self-image to the emotional well-being of an individual, I am both insulted and upset by the proposed "Playboy Evening". This is a manifestation of the need that exists for men to define women as sexual beings primarily and human beings secondarily. Their unconscious need to dominate has resulted in centuries of oppression, suppression, and exploitation of women. Tonight is an example of male chauvinism because men have standardized such an assessment of women. The promotion of women as desirable sex objects is sold to men as something natural. Yet, the stereotype of a sexy bunny promotes vulnerability, dependence, and susceptibility by preventing a woman from defining herself as a person apart from men and her sex role.

Those who consider attending entertainment of this nature should examine their rationale. Assess your conception of the nature of womanhood and withold support from those events that inherently degrade and insult another human being.

Art

We are looking for Art. If you've seen him around lately bring him into the office (or mail him) in the form of poetry, illustrations, short, short stories, and miscellaneous blurbs. Wednesday's page opposite the main editorial page is an example of what we are trying to do. Art must be hiding somewhere among the people.

Political Pot-Luck

You feel bad about it sometimes. Sure, most all of the politicians you've ever heard of are, as far are you can tell, just old hacks. And, of course, it is hard to keep any blind faith these days for some kind of political messiah to come marching along and save everything. But still, deep down somewhere you figure that there have to be some good politicians somewhere. There must be some little guy, tucked in a remote, faceless office somewhere who must be honest, decent. Some little guy who can give you just the tiniest bit of hope.

State auditor. Little, faceless office. State wide election, sure, but when have you ever seen a State Auditor's commercial on television, -a Frank Bucci on "Meet the Press," a Thaddeus Buczko in debate with Mike Wallace?

Thaddeus Buczko, incumbent State Auditor. Little man running a small campaign for re-election. Never makes any headlines, never says all of those stupid and frustrating things that make you hate all the other candidates in the State. He may not say good things, but at least he doesn't say the real bad things. Maybe he's the nothing guy who's not all that bad.

THADDEUS BUCZKO

Coming here to Amherst, the editor said, all unimportant office. The skills of the trade are the same everywhere.

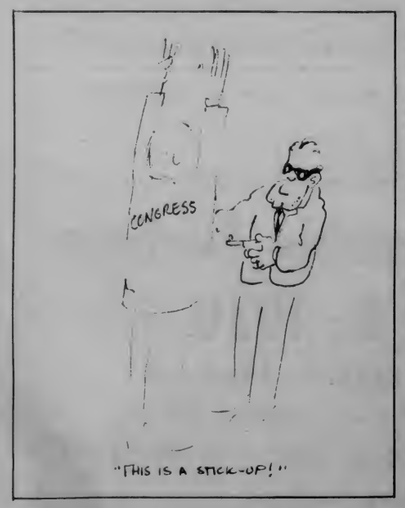
In marches Thaddeus Buczko. All Rise. He circles the office shaking everyone's hand. "Hi, I'm Ted Buczko, I'm running for State Auditor." All Hail.

We ask our own questions. Things like a pending investigation into fund mismanagement by a UMass Dean and a University law suit concerning fiscal policy.

He doesn't know the answers. But he doesn't say that he doesn't know the answers. He just talks for about 10 minutes around each question, saying that his office doesn't inform him of what it is doing.

Thaddeus Buczko gets up and leaves, taking with him his press secretary and the big stupid looking chaeuffer who drives his big black car with the blue State plates. All hail the candidate. All hail the candidate. All hail the politician.

You hope that there is a little guy somewhere who, just because he isn't too visible, can't be all that wrong. But you're wrong. There's no real difference between Thaddeus Buczko and Col. John J. McCarthy, everybody's favorite Teddy-bopper. They're both hacks. Just old political hacks.



Buczko isn't visible, but he knows as little, cares as little and impresses as poorly as all the big name candidates. He talks in circles, comes with a pretentious and obnoxious entourage and looks like a poor man's Melvin Laird as he sits there and talks like Spiro Agnew.

Its ridiculous to write this long a column about anyone as unimportant as Thaddeus Buczko. But, isn't it just as absurd to write pages after pages about all the other candidates who are just as repulsive?

Isn't it stupid to place any more importance on the campaign of a fool running for Governor than on that of a fool running for auditor?

Brother Can You Spare A Dime

The Washington social season has never been more fraught with cocktail parties, dinner parties, autograph parties and testimonials, all in the name of political fund-raising. People in this town live in fear every time the mail arrives that among the bills and junk letters will be buried an invitation to someone's house for a friendly drink.

This drink can cost the invitee anywhere from $25 to $500 as a political contribution to some poor senator or congressman's campaign.

Last week was typical of what is going on here. On Monday I arrived home and my wife said, "The Jessels have invited us for cocktails tomorrow night to meet Sen. Bolt."

"Who wants to meet him?" I said. "I saw him last night at a fund-raising party for Congressman Ax."

"Well, we can't say no. I run into Ginny Jessel at the hairdresser's every week, and she'll think we couldn't afford $50 to come to her party."

The next night as we were getting dressed for the Jessel bash, my wife said, "There's an autograph party for Sen. Finney at the Quagmires tomorrow."

"An autograph party?"

"Yes. Sen. Finney is autographing his new book, 'The Sensuous Senator.' If you contribute $100 he'll sign it to you personally."

"Well, the Quagmires reminded me that they gave us $100 for the Junior Village Telethon, and so I said we'd come."

A few nights later I was home reading my autographed copy of "The Sensuous Senator" when a telegram arrived. It read, "YOU ARE INVITED TO A TESTIMONIAL DINNER CELEBRATING CONGRESSMAN ALF KLOTZNICK'S 30TH ANNIVERSARY AS A MEMBER OF THE HOUSE DISTRICT SEWER COMMITTEE. A TABLE HAS BEEN RESERVED IN YOUR NAME. PLEASE MAKE OUT A $150 CHECK IN NAME OF KLOTZNICK FOR CONGRESS COMMITTEE."

"Now they've gone too far," I said to my wife. "I wouldn't be caught dead at a testimonial for Klotznick."

"You can say that now," my wife said. "But the next time our sewer breaks, Klotznick will block the bill to fix it in his committee."

We had no choice but to go to Klotznick's testimonial.

For two days after that we didn't get any invitations to go out, and I was starting to worry that we had been crossed off everybody's list.

But on the third evening, when I came home from the office, my wife said, "Guess what?"

"I'm not going to any more cocktail parties, autograph parties or testimonial dinners this year, and that is final," I yelled.

"You don't have to go to any," she said nervously.

"Great."

"Sally Fowler called and asked if we could come to a brunch on Sunday for Forest, who is running against Sen. Boots Kimberly. I told her how you hated to go out on Sundays, so she asked if we could hold it here."

"You wouldn't," I said.

"Well, now that we owe the Jessels and the Quagmires, it will be an easy way to get even."

'We're Starting The Year One'

WMUA: Bigger, Better And Working to Improve

By ED JEWETT
Staff Reporter

Over the last two years, the Student Activities Tax Fund gave over $95,000 to the student radio station, WMUA, (91.1 FM). This semester WMUA began to utilize this subsidy to a point where the student will shortly receive its benefit. More than fifty per cent of those funds were earmarked for new equipment, the product of which will be improved and better reception, better programming and, hopefully, a better communication vehicle for UMass students.

The Federal Communications Commission is currently reviewing WMUA's application for a construction permit. Over the next six or seven months, the station will undergo a process of testing and application ending with the grant of a new license for one thousand watts stereo transmission. WMUA now operates at ten watts monaural. The bulk of that $95,000 will pay for the equipment required by law to broadcast in stereo at that level.

A seventh floor ironing room in Emily Dickinson House will house the new transmitter, and the antenna will be moved from its site on the Engineering Building. This move cannot be started until the Physical Plant does the necessary renovation and the permit is OK'ed by the FCC.

Construction is also going on at the studios where the finishing touches are being put on a news studio, and major renovation is being done in the master control room. Over the summer, a new production studio was completed.

A sizeable amount of equipment has been purchased for these three studios to round out their capability. In these studios there will be enough equipment for two radio stations. That includes seven turntables, three stereo and three mono tape recorders, seven cartridge playback units with three recording units, as well as two portable tape recorders, two stereo and one mono control boards, two of which have the additional capability of controlling four studios at once. The news department has access to Metromedia, an audio news network, a United Press International teletype and a number of typewriters. Add to this the stereo transmitter and over $7,000 of complex monitoring devices necessary to adjust and evaluate transmission. Phone lines to every major auditorium on campus, as well as the Student Union and Campus Center, the Cage and Alumni Stadium have been wired into the studios.

All the equipment will eventually be wired together by the Chief Engineer, Jay Ballard, who along with other students have FCC First Class licenses. Most of this equipment is mounted in readily dismantled modular cabinetry. This may seem to add up to too much of a good thing; that is its purpose and its strength. Each studio is equipped with very high quality resources, very possibly the best of any college station in the U.S., and each studio is capable of keeping WMUA on the air with no other equipment needed. Add to this ten thousand LP's and sixteen 45's and a wide selection of remote broadcasting equipment. What do you do with it all?

The answer is being supplied by some fifty members of WMUA, headed by a few serious-minded semi-professional broadcasters, sometimes disguised as University students. According to station manager Ken Horseman, a senior Mass Comm major with an eye on grad school and a future in broadcast management, "WMUA is starting in Year one." Pointing to the recent departure from the standards of the last few years, Horseman says that WMUA is becoming a second-service station that provides programming not found elsewhere on the dial. No longer is the music of the Top 40 variety; instead, progressive rock, jazz, and classical music provide the fill between news and public affairs programs. The specialized music programs are heard late at night and on weekends, usually after programs like Focus, or The Drum, a Black Affairs program that originates at WBUR-FM, Boston University.

John Zizis, News and Public Affairs director and Dick Pohalek, Program Director, have pointed WMUA in the direction of keeping students informed on campus issues and events, and providing students with a forum for their views, as with The Drum. Black students from UMass produce and air live local segments of The Drum, and other students are involved with programs of similar interest.

Sports is a part of WMUA's service, with live broadcasts of all UMass football and basketball games, and selected hockey, lacrosse and baseball games.

Horseman noted the change from a club organization to a radio service with increased emphasis on professionalism as a result of the increase in power and the change to stereo. "WMUA's raison d'etre is the student community. To better focus service on the campus and community, including commuters, is the primary justification for one thousand watts stereo," says Horseman.

Programming for the communities surrounding UMass will still be oriented to students and student problems as they relate to the usual town and gown issues. The new signal will be heard north and south along the Connecticut Valley in Massachusetts, and will eliminate most shadow areas of reception, particularly in the Southwest complex. Despite this strongly magnified coverage area and increased audience potential, WMUA will still program for the student. Horseman says simply, "Student funding means that WMUA owes its allegiance to the students."

WMUA's future depends on several questions being debated now. Plans are being formulated to move its studios to the old bookstore in the Student Union. The new license is still an if, although all the facets of the application have been thoroughly researched. Budgets for the future years will emphasize programming innovations, as the past years stressed technical improvements.

Another question is that of control by the Administration which has in the past, according to Horseman, "exerted its influence without full knowledge of the facts." He went on to say that "if the Administration in the future would realize that WMUA takes its job more seriously now than it has in the past, and if the management would at least be given a chance to clarify its position when an issue arises, then a better judgement may be made.

"WMUA's future also relies on the students at UMass, for they have at their disposal something of which they can be very proud. They have a radio station that is an excellent laboratory for Mass Comm majors, and that is fast becoming a vehicle for expression within the UMass community. But of prime necessity is the bank of ideas and the expression of those ideas that must come from the students."

Draft Counseling Information

Training Program Set For Draft Counsellors

The Draft Counseling Services at the University of Mass. will offer a training program for those interested in becoming draft counselors. Attempting to fill a serious need in this area, the training program will be open to men and women who are interested in learning about the Selective Service System so that they can counsel young men about their rights and options under current laws.

The training program will begin Tuesday, October 6, at 7:00 p.m., and run for three consecutive Tuesday evenings. The program will meet in Room 175 of the Campus Center at UMass.

There will be a charge of $2.50 to cover the cost of materials, but scholarships are available. As the size of the group is limited to thirty, interested participants should register early by calling 545-2661 or 545-2789.

The program will familiarize participants with the options available to draft-age young men under Selective Service law. There will be an extensive review of general Selective Service procedure. This will be followed by a comprehensive discussion of medical deferments and the conscientious objector position, as well as student, hardship and other deferments. There will also be time devoted to role playing of counseling situations to give trainees confidence in the new skills they are learning.

According to Gil Salk, the UMass draft counselor, there are no prerequisites for this program except for a personal commitment to use the counseling skills gained through this program. It is hoped that people learning counseling will commit at least an hour a week to counseling at UMass or in the surrounding towns.

Counseling Service Obtains S.U. Office

The Draft Counseling Services now have an office. It is located in Room 418E on the second floor of the Student Union, in the southwest corner of the building behind the Cashier's Office.

Office hours will be from 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Monday through Friday. Volunteer receptionists to make appointments and take phone messages are needed. Draft counseling is now available to the entire University community through the Draft Counseling Services. Gil Salk has been hired by DCS and a full-time counselor and program coordinator. He will be assisted by other trained volunteer counselors.

As volunteer counselors become available in sufficient numbers, branch counseling offices will be opened in each residence area on a part time basis. Presently, office space has been offered by The Open Door in the Northeast area and by the Southwest Master's Office. Residents of these areas should check locally for the hours when counselors will be available.

Congressional Hopeful To Speak at Campus Cen

Father Robert Drinan, Dean of the Boston College Law School and the democratic primary upset winner in the Third Congressional District over congressional veteran Philip Philbin, will speak at the Campus Center Auditorium, Tuesday at 7:30. Drinan will give a brief address followed by informal questions and answers.

Drinan, is one of several candidates being backed by the Movement for a New Congress that have been touring college campuses to organize student campaign workers for peace candidates in the fall election.

Also appearing in the Five College area will be Representative Allard Lowenstein (D-N.Y.) who will appear tonight at Smith College's Wright Auditorium at 7:30. Lowenstein will give a prepared speech entitled "An Alternative to Agnewism."

A liberal representative, who was one of the original supporters of Eugene McCarthy and the Dump Johnson movement, Lowenstein is facing a serious challenge in the Nassau Fifth District from Conservative party candidate Norman Lent.

Drinnan is facing Republican opposition from John McGlennon and a possible write in candidacy from the defeated Philbin.

Candidates also seeking student helpers in Massachusetts through the Movement for a New Congress include Garry Studds, a democratic in the 12th congressional district and incumbent Michael Harrington, in addition to Drinan.

Noel Joins Gonzalo In Spanish Concert

The Spanish soprano Sophia Noel will perform in concert with the noted guitarist Eugene Gonzalo in Bowker Auditorium Saturday Oct. 3 at 8 o'clock P.M.

Sophia Noel has given more than 350 concerts in Europe, her native Spain, and the United States during the past four seasons. She is a unique artist who is able to combine the beauty and excitement of Spanish music with an educational message through her commentary on the works she performs.

The repertoire will include a group of Sephardic songs of the 15th century sung in the original language, songs by Federico Garcia Lorca, and indigenous songs from Central and South America, Cuba and Haiti.

Senor Gonzalo will accompany Miss Noel and offer a group of solo works for guitar.

The program is presented under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council in cooperation with the department of Spanish at the University. Reserved tickets may be obtained through the University's Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at the Bowker box office one hour before the concert.

Miller to Present Concert at Smith

The first of this year's series of Sunday evening recitals in Sage Hall at Smith College will be presented by pianist Robert Miller, Professor of Music, assisted by members of the Music Department. The concert, Sunday, October 4, at 8:00 p.m., is open to the public free of charge.

Mr. Miller has taught piano and theory at Smith since 1961, and has given annual recitals there and at Northwestern and Denison Universities where he taught previously. He studied in Paris, where he made his debut and received the Licence de Concert from the Ecole Normale de Musique.

The program on October 4 will include works by Claude Debussy, Alvin Etler, and Ludwig van Beethoven. Opening the program Gretchen d'Armand, soprano, will sing four songs from Debussy's "Proses Lyriques". Mrs. d'Armand was recently one of three winners of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities competition, "Young Musicians: Performance in Prospect."

John Lynes, clarinetist, will perform a "Sonata for Clarinet and Piano" with Mr. Miller. This piece was written in 1969 by Alvin Etler, Henry Dyke Sleeper Professor of Music at Smith College, and received its premiere last spring. The new composition employs twelve-tone techniques and is a worthy addition to 20th century clarinet leiterature. Because of this, Mr. Miller and Mr. Lynes were anxious to perform the piece a second time, in order that more listeners might be exposed to Mr. Etler's work.

To conclude the program, in commemoration of the bicentennial of Beethoven's birth, Mr. Miller, with Philipp Naegele (violin) and John Sessions ('cello), will perform the "Archduke" Trio, Opus 97.

Other faculty recitals will follow on Sunday evenings throughout the year, to be supplemented by the Smith College Concert Course. For information, contact the Music Department.

Juilliard Cancelled

The Fine Arts Council of the University of Massachusetts announces that due to the illness of cellist, Claus Adam, the concert by the Juilliard String Quartet scheduled for Tuesday evening, October 6, 1970 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium will be postponed until a later date.

We regret any inconvenience this may cause our subscribers and will make every effort to reschedule this important event in the near future. Persons holding tickets to this concert are advised to retain them for use at the rescheduled event.

Weekend Arts Calendar

By Robert Nesti
Fine Arts Staff

Theater

ROOM SERVICE
This vintage Broadway farce from which came the classic Marx Brothers' film is presented three times this weekend by the Amherst Masquers. The comedy was recently revived on Broadway to some widely divided critical opinion. It is very broad slapstick, not for lovers of Shaw or Coward. At the Kirby Theater, Amherst College, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday evenings at 8:30. Tickets available at $2.00.

THE REPERATORY DANCE THEATRE/UTAH
The permanant modern dance company of the University of Utah makes a temporary home of Smith this weekend. Walter Terry, dance critic for Saturday Review, said of the group that they "soared to unquestioned success in a series of superb performances..." This Friday and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. in Theater II Smith College.

Dance

STEVE MILLER BAND, B.B. KING, AND DREAMS
Blues guitarist B.B. King and the Steve Miller Band headlive two concerts this Saturday night in the cage as part of Senior-Sophomore Weekend. Times are 7 and 10:30 p.m., tickets at $2.75.

Music

SOPHIA NOEL, AND EUGENIO GONZALO
The UMass Fine Arts Council presents this unusual evening of Spanish music Saturday evening at 8 in Bowker Auditorium. Soprano Sophia Noel is accompanied by guitarist Eugenio Gonzalo in this sophisticated, highly-acclaimed program. UMass undergraduated $1.50, UMass graduate students and other students $2.00, UMass faculty and staff $2.50, and all others $3.00.

Films

THE BOYS IN THE BAND
Mart Crowley's off-Broadway smash is brought to the screen intact. You are invited to quite an unusual birthday party in this extremely funny, thought-provoking film. It contains some of the finest ensemble acting ever on the screen and, thanks to excellent direction, is cinematic in every way.

CATCH-22
Probably the year's best film, a grim and raw view of the absurdity of war. Directed by Mike Nichols and acted superbly by a large cast headed by Alan Arkin. The perfect film for the cocktail party.

COOL HAND LUKE (Friday, Mahar)
A must for any Paul Newman fan, and, for that matter, anyone interested in seeing an unconventional comedy-drama. At times a bit heavy in philosophy but overall an interesting film with some unusually fine performances.

HELLO, DOLLY!
A musical film with the style and feel of a turn-of-the-century IBM computer. Barbra Streisand camps Mae West in the title role yet even her mugging, sort of Jerry Lewis-in-drag, cannot save this behemoth from smothering beneath its own weight.

THE IRON HORSE, (Sunday, UMass Film Studies Series, Thompson)
This 1924 classic western, directed by master of this gendre, John Ford, concerns the construction of the transcontinental railroad. For subscription ticket holders only.

JOE
Hard hats meet the drug culture in this controversial film. It tends to be exploitive to the point of being a cliche and manages to top any recent film in violence. Peter Boyle as Joe makes the entire venture worthwile. It'll make you want to take a construction worker to lunch--at the Dining Commons.

THE LION IN WINTER
"Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" set in the court of Henry II in this highly entertaining and well-acted drama about just who gets the crown when Henry is gone. Peter O'Toole plays Henry (the same king he played earlier in "Becket") and Katherine Hepburn received an Oscar for her portrayal of his wife, Eleanor of Aquitaine. An all-round excellent historical drama.

POPI (Thursday, Student Union Ballroom)
Alan Arkin stars in the title role as a man who desparately attempts to remove his two sons from their slum environment by having them pass as Cuban refugees. Warm, human, family-type film.

RIDER ON THE RAIN
French director Rene Clement directed this intricate thriller which has been hailed as "the best since 'Z'".

THE REIVERS
Steve McQueen stars in this leisurely, funny adaptation of Faulkner. A very enjoyable film.

WILD STRAWBERRIES (Sunday, Student Union Ballroom)
Swedish director Igmar Bergman's highly-regarded 1957 film. For the true film buff.

Redman Booters Face Rising Eagles

By EDWARD DOHERTY
Staff Reporter

After their impressive 5-1 opening game victory over Maine last week, the Redman booters were busy this week preparing for a non-conference match today against Boston College, at B.C., which could be the surprise team of greater Boston this fall.

Last season, after a slow start, including an early season loss to UMass, the Eagles earned their way to a 5-4-3 record including victories over perenniel powerhouse Boston University 3-0, and Yankee Conference contender Rhode Island, 2-1.

The B.C. booters will be primed for an upset to avenge the Redmen's last visit to the Heights in 1968 in which the Eagles were on the short end of an 8-0 shutout. UMass will be difficult to beat, however. Coach Peter Broaca brings a healthy team with excellent depth out of the Maine game, and will field the same team that has scored 13 goals and allowed three in its last two Saturdays, including the Western Mass. Jamboree.

Starting on the forward line will be seniors Larry DeFelice and Duane Brown, along with junior Lindo Alves. Second year co-captain Rick Matuszczak and junior co-captain Augie Calheno team with senior Tony Nunziante to form a halfback line with both offensive and defensive potential.

The tenacious Redman fullback line, which held the Maine team to a mere 13 shots, remains intact. Veteran Dan Howle, second-year starters Gary Hart and Joe Cerniawski, and soph Dave Ouellette will be trying to protect sophomore goalie Bill Leary from the B.C. booters.

JOE CERNIAWSKI, a two year veteran, will be one of the UMass soccer team when it tangles with B.C. today.

In other action this past week, Connecticut, the next Redman challenger, tied last year's Conference champ Vermont 1-1 in the only other league game. Rhode Island bowed to a strong Brown team 3-0, Worcester Tech downed the University of Hartford 3-1 and the Coast Guard lost to Providence College 2-1.

Ruggers Host Beacon Hill

By FRED WYSHAK
Staff Reporter

Tomorrow at 1:30 p.m. the UMass Rugby Club, coming off a strong opening game victory against Vermont, will meet Beacon Hill, last year's New England Championship XV, at home.

The Redmen will be seeking their second win with the likes of Mike Bull, John Long, Al Brown and Bill Wiler. These four ruggers, along with the rest of the XV, demonstrated UMass' potent offense, scoring 18 points to Vermont's zero in last week's match.

Saturday's tilt should prove to be an excellent one, bringing some very talented players to Amherst. If the Redman defense can remain as tough as it was against Vermont, spectators should be in for a very exciting afternoon.

"This will be our toughest game, but we're ready," said UMass coach Dale Toohey. "If we can play to our game plan and get a few breaks, I think we can win. We're going into this match to win."

Fr. Football

The UMass freshman football team initiates its season today with a home game against the Boston University frosh at 3 p.m. Little Redman coach David Kelley heads a squad that is small in number but one which has great physical size and very good spirit.

Three candidates are vying for the starting quarterback assignment on the team, Paul Hanson, Tom McMahon and Mark Tripucka. The Little Redman split end is Tim Berra, who is the son of Yankee immortal Yogi Berra.

UMass vs. Buffalo-A Must Win for Both Teams

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

Upon leaving Boyden Building yesterday morning, a question directed to UMass assistant football coach David Kelley was overheard. The by-passing questioner asked the coach if the Redmen would be ready to take on the big Bulls tomorrow in Buffalo at 1 p.m. and Kelley replied, "If they're not, they'll never be better prepared."

And so the Redmen fly off to grungy Buffalo, N.Y. to face a pack of honery Bulls, honery because they have failed to win any football games this fall, sporting a disappointing 0-3 record.

And Buffalo is a very fine grid club. "One of the best teams we have on the schedule," says UMass coach Vic Fusia. So, why the 0-3 mark? The Bulls have had to face all tough squads thus far.

The weakest opponent they've faced is Ball State and Buffalo played terribly and lost, 14-7, but, after that one, the Bulls went up against Toledo, considered by some to be the second best team in Ohio next to Ohio State, and got scrunched, 27-6, and last weekend against Kent State, probably the third best Ohioan team, bowing 27-21.

Its schedule has been unkind to Buffalo although the Bulls have steadily improved from game-to-game. And now UMass, considered by Metawampe to be the second best team in Massachusetts next to Boston College, presents them with yet another high hurdle to jump.

In all seriousness, it should be a great contest because both teams need the victory, Buffalo to save its season, UMass to get back on the winning road after being sidetracked by Dartmouth last weekend, 27-0.

Both squads boast proud defensive units and both have put in extra time trying to shore up their attacks. For the Redmen, a glimmer of hope has appeared. In practice sessions this week, UMass' offense has finally begun to click. Coach Fusia commented, "They've shown signs for the first time this year that they can move the ball."

During recent sessions, the offense has been subject to "a little more scrimmaging than usual." Indulging in more detail, Fusia pointed out that the attack has shown its "first sign of moving the ball with any semblance of consistency. The timing has improved somewhat, along with execution."

But, to stem the flow of undirected optimism, Fusia cautioned, "This can't be done in spurts, it has to be done consistently. We can't expect to play good football until the offense catches up to the defense."

Fusia offered a quick strategy for the Buffalo tilt: "Our job is to get to them fast and stay right on top of them."

SIDELINE SCRIBBLES - UMass has made a few lineup changes on that offense...Starting at center will be Ron Marino in the place of Dave Levine...Mark Russell will be running at halfback as Mike Sawyer, who didn't dress for the Dartmouth affair, has improved a great deal but is still not ready to resume his regular post...Backing up Russell will be Art Corsaletti...The split end slot will have as its starter either Bob Cabrelli or Steve Shubert...Joe Lang, who has seen action at the split end position, has been moved to tight end and will share that spot with starter John Hulecki... Four Redmen to keep an eye or an ear out for will be John Farrelly, Dennis Collins, Joe Sabulis and Mark Leamy, UMass' stellar linebacking corps...The coaching staff is particularly proud of this unit, which has been stone-solid against enemy offenses in the Redmen's two contests so far this year...UMass and Buffalo have met but four times in football play; the first of the short series was held in 1964 and the Redmen won it, 24-22...The Bulls have taken the three games after that by scores of 18-6 in 1965, 23-0 in 1968 and 16-6 last year.

Metawampe's Grid Picks

All right, all right so the Great One blew a few. But after all, even the greatest of greats have an off day occasionally. Call it a mental letdown. Maybe he needs a rest. But like his fellow alliterator, Spiro T., he continues to fight a never ending battle for truth, justice, and the American football card. Sort of makes your blood curdle, doesn't it?

But have no fear. The inspired injun' has returned to prestigious paths of his anemic ancestors to call them as he sees them. After all, he can't be blamed if he's wrong once in a while. The Great One simply predicts. He does not play the games (though some Sunday mornings he feels like he had). So on he goes, never looking back (he wishes his followers would do the same) and willing once again to pit his whimsical wit against the somber selections of some other salubrious soothsayers (Tom Harmon, eat your heart out!).

Redman Runners Continue Rivalry With Northeastern

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

Franklin Park in Boston is the setting tomorrow for the continuation of the annual cross country rivalry between the UMass Redmen and the Huskies of Northeastern University. With both teams among the very best in New England, this race has all the ingredients to be the best dual meet in New England this season. Starting time is 2 P.M.

Northeastern possesses the deepest group of runners in New England at this time. Six of the seven top runners from last year's team are back, with Larry Joseph and Dave Carnes performing the best among these returnees.

Add to this group sophomores Tony Frontierro and Paul McElroy. As freshmen last year Frontierro and McElroy finished second and fourth respectively in the New England Championships.

This isn't all, as the Huskies also have two of the finest freshmen around in Bruce Butterworth and Steve Rowe running for the varsity tomorrow. Butterworth was very impressive in his varsity debut against Harvard and Rowe ran the second fastest freshman every time on the Franklin Park course against the Harvard frosh.

Coming off a very impressive opening meet against Providence, the Redman harriers have been waiting anxiously all week for tomorrow's shot at the Huskies. Continued team improvement was the theme for practice all week and Coach Ken O'Brien feels that it will show up in tomorrow's race.

The Redmen are a stronger team up front, with co-captain Ron Wayne and sophomore Tom Jasmin representing one of the best one-two punches in New England cross country this year. Wayne ran an outstanding race at P.C. last Saturday, winning by 22 seconds in a record performance. Jasmin ran a strong third behind friar distance' ace Bill Speck. The Huskies will have all they can handle in these two Redmen.

What will decide tomorrow's race will be the ability for the Redmen to show team depth in the middle positions. This is where the Huskies are always strong and O'Brien is hoping tomorrow for an indication of the depth that the team will need by the end of the season.

Tom Swain, Leo Duart, and Rick Barry ran fine races last weekend. If they perform as well this weekend and if Bruce Blackburn and Larry Paulson can stay with them then UMass will have the depth needed to turn the tables on Northeastern.

Besides the team battle, there will also be some individual battles to add spice to the race. Wayne and Duart have had battles with NU's Joseph since their freshman year. These have always been tough battles.

On the sophomore level, Jasmin and Swain will have it out again with Frontierro and McElroy. Last year these four met in a dual meet, the New England's, and the IC4A's.

In the final pre-meet analysis, O'Brien sees tomorrow's encounter to be a close one, with possibly the fifth man deciding the race as was the case last Saturday at P.C.

On the freshman level, the UMass frosh will be facing their toughest meet that they will have this year. The Huskie freshmen are coming off of an outstanding victory over the Harvard frosh and ran very fast times over the Franklin Park course.

All Forms of Violence Condemned in Kent State

WASHINGTON (AP)- Student violence and National Guard gunfire alike at Kent State University were condemned as intolerable and inexcusable yesterday by a presidential commission which probed the May 4 killing of four students and the wounding of nine.

"Intolerable" was the word the President's Commission on Campus Unrest assigned to the actions of some students. "Unnecessary, unwarranted, and inexcusable" was the commission's judgment on guard gunfire.

"The Kent State tragedy must surely mark the last time that loaded rifles are issued as a matter of course to guardsmen confronting student demonstrators," the commission said.

Further, the commission used the Kent State experience to underline the recommendations of its main report last week which called for a cooling of rhetoric on all sides, moral leadership by the President himself, and an end to undue leniency by some collefe administrators and unwarranted harshness by some law enforcement officials.

In a 22,500 word report titled "the Kent State Tragedy," drawn from hundreds of interviews, three days of hearings and 8,000 pages of FBI investigation, the commission found in part:

-The weight of evidence shows no order was given to National Guardsmen to fire that Monday at the students or anything else.

-The guardsmen were not under sniper fire. "Nothing was found to indicate that anyone other than a guards man discharged a firearm during the incident," the report said.

-Aggressive people in the crowd were not closer than 20 yards to the guardsmen-never at bayonet point as one said-and the main body was some 75 yards away when the firing occurred. The danger "was not a danger which called for lethal force."

-The specific student assembly in a legitamately busy campus area which prompted the guard action was peaceful at the outset.

T-The guard itself became the transcendant issue, and it never did disperse the crowd as it set out to do.

-Nothing was found by the FBI to suggest SDS, Students for a Democratic Society, elements had a hand in the disturbances. However, FBI information indicates the burning of the ROTC building Saturday night may have been planned since, "railroad flares, a machete, and ice picks are not customarily carried to peaceful rallies." Also "a significant proportion" of those at the burning were not Kent State students.

-There was no evidence to suggest drug use among demonstrators. Only one marijuana cigarette was found- in a pocket of someone else's jacket used to cover a shooting victim.

-The 61 shots were fired from M130 caliber high velocity rifles, a shotgun and two 45 caliber pistols in 13 seconds at about 12:45 p.m., hitting the 13 students.

-The nearest students wounded, two of them, were 20 yards from the guardsmen. The nearest killed, Jeff Miller, was 85 to 90 yards away. All told, 11 of the 13 were from 75 to 250 yards away. Dean Kahler, 100 yards away, was prone when he was hit in the left side of the small of his back. Kahler was paralyzed from the waist down.

-Guardsmen had bullets in the chambers of their weapons "loaded and locked" from the moment they stepped on campus Saturday night. All that was needed to fire was a finger flick of a switch near the trigger. Twice before in the 35 hours before the shooting, Guard detachments had knelt and leveled their rifles without firing.

The commission, headed by former Pennsylvania Gov. William W. Scranton, had this to say of students:

"Violence by students on or off the campus can never be justified by any grievance, philosophy, or political idea. There can be no sanctuary or immunity from prosecution on the campus...

"Those who wreaked havoc on the town of Kent, those who burned the ROTC building, those who attacked and stoned National Guardsmen, and all those who urged them on and applauded their deeds share the responsibility for the deaths and injuries of May 4."

The traditional Homecoming Float Parade will be held Friday October 23, at 6:30 p.m. The Float Parade Committee is expecting an enthusiastic turnout in the competition for trophies and silver bowls.

An organizational meeting has been scheduled for tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in Room 165 in the Campus Center. Any organization that wishes to enter a float must send a representative to this meeting. Rules, general information, and any questions will be discussed. Also, this will be the ONLY opportunity to obtain the necessary entry forms.

The Float Parade will kick-off the Alumni Homecoming Week-end when UMass will play the Huskies of UConn.

"Elections '70" Begins Tomorrow

"Elections '70" will hold its first meeting tomorrow evening, beginning at 8:15 PM, in Thompson 104. All students interested in the November elections are urged to attend.

John Howe, project co-ordinator, will distribute information on the candidates and their interest in student volunteers. Jerry Mileur and Stanley Bach, faculty members in the Department of Government, will discuss the potential and limitations of electoral politics, and the stakes of the 1970 elections nationally.

The idea for "Elections '70" originated with interested students and faculty in the Department of Government. Sponsored by the Government Department, the project is now being organized and run by volunteer graduate and undergraduate students.

According to Mr. Howe, "Elections '70" is acting as an "information clearing-house." "We know that many students are anxious to get involved voluntarily in political campaigns, and we hope we can help them. We know who the candidates are, what kinds of help they need, and how they should be contacted. This information should help everyone avoid thrashing around--looking for which candidates to support and how to find them."

Every major party candidate in Massachusetts for Congress, for the state legislature, and for statewide office, has been contacted. "All the candidates who have replied have been very interested in having students work with them, and they've told us what their special needs are. We'll make all this information available so that every student can select his own candidate and the kind of volunteer work he wants to do."

A series of seminars will also be presented on different aspects of campaigns on elections. On Tuesday, October 20th, Sidney Kraus will discuss "Campaigning and the Media," and on Tuesday, October 20th, John Fenton will talk about "The American Voter: Some Recent Trends." Both of these seminars will begin at 8:15 PM in Thompson 104. "Elections '70" will also sponsor an Election night watch in the Student Union lounge on November 3rd, from 9 to 12 PM. And David Mayhew of Yale University will lead a discussion on the results of the election on Thursday, November 12th.

"Candidates" who want to meet and talk with students are being invited to a "Candidazes' Open House" in the Campus Center on the evening of Thursday, October 15th. Mr. Howe also indicated that plans are also being made for one or more debates between candidates for some of the major offices in Massachusetts. "We aren't in a position to announce anything yet, but we hope to have all the details worked out by the end of this week."

Students interested in this project and who want more information should contact "Elections '70" in 408 Thompson Tower or at extension 50485.

Students Help Select Degree Recipients

For the first time in UMass history, students have won the right to a substantive voice in the nomination of honorary degree recipients at graduation.

A Student Sub-Committee for the Recommendation of Honorary Degrees has been born in response to the Board of Trustees' May 29th decision to allow official notice to student proposals in this matter.

The committee is comprised of members of the senior class. It will study the names submitted by the UMass student body for consideration.

Senior class president Norm Patch opened the nominations to the whole campus via a notice in the Collegian to assure as much participation as possible. To further broaden his base of involvement, he chose the members of the committee from a wide group of campus organizations.

Criteria for candidates as designated by the Board of Trustees include "intellectual achievement of which the University wishes to indicate its approval, and extraordinary contribution to the well-being of the University, the Commonwealth, or the country."

"I personally would like to see special attention paid to people who are involved with the University and the state," said Patch, "because I think they are often by-passed in favor of national figures who actually have little to do with the University community."

The categories for the degrees encompass the fields of Fine Arts, science, law and humane letters. The number is unrestricted.

Last night at a closed meeting of the Student subcommittee the candidates so far submitted were reviewed. Today is the final day for nominations ro be brought to RSO, Campus Center or Box 871.

The next committee meeting will decide the final selections to be recommended to the Advisory Committee. Two seniors from the incoming class ('71) represent the campus on the Advisory Committee.

After further discussion and elimination the proposed recipients will be processed to the Executive Committee, which will in turn deliver its choices to the Board of Trustees.

The Trustees still retain the sole power to confer honorary degrees. However, the Student Subcommittee is one step toward total student involvement and selection.

Among past recipients of honorary degrees at UMass have been Kingman Brewster, President of Harvard, Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, and Robert Francis, poet.

Proposals Exchanged At SWAP Meet

SWAP, a campus-wide organization composed of students, faculty, and administrators met last night to discuss ideas and exchange proposals concerning their December conference.

In order to facilitate the flow of ideas, the committee is divided into sub-groups. Each of these subgr oups discusses and formulates goals for the conference. These goals are then re-hashed at general meetings.

One group, the planning committee, presented ways and methods for future campus planning. The problems involved with the psychological impact of a 30,000 student multiversity were discussed. According to one student, " we must face the problems of architectural planning, student alienation, and campus-wide ecological conservation. In relation to these problems a recent Collegian article on campus design was examined.

Another area probed by the panel was the various channel for change within the University. Students felt that many people on campus were not aware of channels for change that were open to them. It was decided that these channels should be made more public.

According to Dick Polomba, SWAP spokesman, this year we're going to make the group more open. "We'd like to get as many students interested as we can", he stated. In conjuction with this, all future meetings are open to any members of the campus community.

Other topics of discussion included the actual date of the conference itself. Originally the meeting was scheduled for November 21, 22 and 23. Because of conflicts with the Board of Trustees' meeting and Legislator's Day, the date was moved up to December 11, 12, and 13.

Application procedures and forms for the SWAP Committee will appear in next weeks Collegian.

Hampshire College Convocation

Speaker MacLeash Praises School's Curriculum Planning

By MARK SILVERMAN
Managing Editor

Hampshire College climaxed its 12 years of planning and building Saturday when it officially opened its first academic year by dedicating itself to a role as pioneer in innovative higher education.

Originally conceived by several academicians in 1958, the College developed as the result of the institutional cooperation of the Five College Plan in the 1960's.

And at its opening convocation this weekend, Pulitzer Prize winning poet Archibald MacLeash called the school "the first real effort I've seen to help solve the Troubles of the Universities."

He blamed a dehumanizing society and the reluctance of colleges to help dismayed students as the major reason for what he called the failings of the nation's system of higher education.

"Only when freedom is human, as well as humanity free, can a nation of free men exist," MacLeish said. "And only when the balance between society and the self is reestablished can the self be realized. Hampshire College understands this and has chosen to do something about it."

He praised the school's planned curriculum which allows students to make up courses of instruction by themselves as a means by which students can involve themselves in the areas of education which they find most rewarding, and he criticized other schools for their rigid curricula.

"It is the university which is the trustee of the culture, and the trustee of the state of the civilization," he said.

"And as trustee," he continued, "The Universities have failed in these years in which the culture has lost its human values and has deteriorated into a mere technocracy which exploits knowledge as it exploits everything else... so that the triumphs of the epoch make no distinctions between the glory of modern medicine and the horrors of modern war."

MacLeish said that the turbulence on University campuses was not the fault of the young.

He explained, "The contemporary young have their faults obviously... Their generation includes the usual shoddy elements familiar to every campus generation: the campus politician, the adolescent marching and shouting society, the plain bad actor and the psycotic. But, by and large, they are the most deeply committed generation we have seen in this century with the single exception of the returning soldiers of the second world war."

University troubles are not disciplinary or political, MacLeish stressed. "They are troubles at the heart of human life, troubles in the culture itself, in the civilization -- which cannot be cured by the ranting of government, however misguided or directed, or by the sending in of national guard troops whenever the provocation, but only by restoring to the culture wholeness and health."

Prior to MacLeish's address, the school conferred honorary degrees on him, Amherst College Scholar Henry Steee Commander and U.S. Rep. Silvio O. Conte.

The school's first class of 263 students began classes last week, marking the final completion of the Five College Program, initialed in 1966.

The school's funding, in addition to tuition fees, is supported largely by the Ford Foundation and several educational groups.

Noted poet Archibald MacLeash was the guest speaker and recipient of an honorary degree at Hampshire College's Convocation Saturday.

Chancellor's Coffee Hour Today

Chancellor Tippo will hold his weekly coffee hour in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union this afternoon from noon to 2 p.m.

Chancellor Oswald Tippo has announced that he will resume his practice of holding regular open coffee hours every Monday noon, in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. Time will be 12 to 2 p.m.

The Chancellor's open discussions provide an opportunity for any member of the University community, and expecially students, to raise questions about general campus issues, seek answers to particular questions, or to hear first-hand what the principal administrative officers are thinking and planning.

The practice of the regular open meetings with free coffee available to all, originated last year and is credited with allowing for greater two-way campus communications on issues affecting the entire University.

All students with particular matters to discuss, as well as those interested in just listening, are cordially invited to today's discussion.

Trustee Firearms Decision Hampers Flying Redmen

By JAMES CONCANNON
Staff Reporter

The flying Redmen, the University of Mass. drill team, is in danger of dying, due to an administration technicality.

Following the Student Strike last May, the University Board of Trustees passed a resolution against all firearms on campus, except those of the university police. Subsequently, all ROTC weapons were removed to Fort Deveons. The Flying Redmen's rifles were with them. The technicality concerns whether or not the Redmen's rifles can really be considered firearms.

According to Keith Wyman, commander of the team, the firing pins on the rifles have been removed, the barrels have been plugged, and holes have been drilled in them. When asked if the rifles could be made fire able again, Wyman replied: "There is no possible way. The barrels would have to be completely melted down and then remolded."

Due to its controversial nature, the administration has so far refrained from making a decision on the issue. In fact, the team has been unable to get anywhere in its efforts to have their rifles returned. Because of this, the team has had to turn down parade offers from several communities, and will be unable to march at any of the football games.

The Redmen have also had to cancel a major recruiting drive. This is expecially important because the team recently became an independent RSO group, and as such is responsible for its own funding. Nevertheless the team was intent on surviving, and continuing to service the university community. Without the rifles, the team be comes an anachronism. According to Wyman, "This is the only thing that could kill us.

Drinan Slated For Tomorrow

Father Robert Drinan, Dean of the Boston College Law School and the democratic primary upset winner in the Third Congressional District over congressional veteran Philip Philbin, will speak at the Campus Center Auditorium. Tuesday at 7:30. Drinan will give a brief address followed by informal questions and answers.

Drinan, is one of several candidates being backed by the Movement for a New Congress that have been touring college campuses to organize student campaign workers for peace candidates in the fall election.

Drinan is facing Republican opposition from John McGlennon and a possible write in candidacy from the defeated Philbin.

Candidates also seeking student helpers in Massachusetts through the Movement for a New Congress include Garry Studds, a democratic in the 12th congressional district and incumbent Michael Harrington, in addition to Drinan.

Five New York Jails Torn By Riots

NEW YORK (AP) - Prison guards battled their way into two prisons yesterday using clubs and tear gas to regain control of a Brooklyn and Kew Gardens jail. An incipient riot was quelled at Rikers Island, but insurgent prisoners continued to hold jails in Long Island City and Manhattan's Tombs.

Twenty hostages still were held in the inmate controlled prisons.

The newest outbreak ended almost as soon as it began at the Rikers Island reformatory, where youths broke out of their cells in mid-afternoon and seized four hostages.

Police and corrections officials quickly stormed in, freed the hostages and forced the inmates back to their cells police said.

No injuries were reported at the island, but more than 200 persons were reported injured earlier when the city regained control of the Brooklyn and NKew Gardens jails.

The inmates have been demanding swifter trial, lower bail and what they term more humane conditions.

Wives of eight of the hostages went to City Hall to ask that Mayor John V. Lindsay hear inmate grievances and thus win release of the men being held. The inmates have said Lindsay's appearance was all that it took to free the hostages.

Meanwhile Black Panther party members rallied a block from the Long Island City jail to show support for the holdout inmates.

The mayor repeated yesterday that he would not talk with the rebels until all hostages are released.

A hostage at the Tombs, Corrections Capt. Charles McElhone, told newsmen by telephone that prisoners there had agreed to free all 18 of their hostages if the mayor appeared, and would send one of them to meet Lindsay at the prison entrance with a list of grievances.

Later, Trainee Alfred Warren, one of the hostages, was released on a pass obtained for him by the Rev. Lawrence Gibney, Roman Catholic chaplain at the Tombs.

"Everything is beautiful. It's calm," Warren said. He said "cool heads" outnumbered "hot heads" in the prison chapel where the hostages were being held "All they want is Mayor Lindsay," he added.

The inmates also demanded a general amnesty, that no reprisals be made, appointment of more Spanish speaking guards and formation of an educational council.

The floor by floor sweep through Kew Gardens was made at 8 a.m. and shortly afterwards Corrections Commissioner George F. McGrath said the prison was secure "and we can all go home."

The uprisings began in Long Island City on Thursday night and the last facility seized - Brooklyn on Saturday - was also the first relieved.

Kennedy Denies '72 Bid

BOSTON (AP) - Sen. Edward M. Kennedy said on NBC's "Meet the Press" yesterday he would not seek the presidency in 1972 because of "the uncertainties of higher office would place a great burden on my family."

"I tried to make that as clear as words could define during the corse of events last summer. I'm running, and I will serve if elected, a six year term in the Senate," Kennedy told a panel of four newsmen on the nationally televised program.

Congress Pressed To Act On Bills

WASHINGTON (AP) - Congress leaders want votes on two major crime bills, women's rights and a near $70 billion defense bill in the next two weeks - if they can keep reelection conscious members in town that long.

With elections for the entire House and a third of the Senate only four weeks off, there is talk House members at least may recess Friday and go home to their campaigns.

Even so the House might be able to get out its two major bills: a tough measure against both organized crime and bomb throwers and the huge defense appropriation.

The defense bill, reportedly trimmed $2 billion from President Nixon's $71 billion request, is scheduled for House action next week but there is pressure to get it out this Friday.

Both bills are important to the campaigns: many members want to register law and order votes for the crime bill and economy votes on the defense spending bill.

But Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield has scheduled more work in the next two weeks than the Senate could normally handle in a month.

Government Untoppled In Bolivian Coup

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) - The army chief of staff led part of Bolivia's armed forces in a revolt yesterday against President Alfredo Ovando Candia, but Ovando - a general himself - appeared to be gaining the upper hand.

There were no reports of shooting.

Ovando flew to La Paz from Santa Cruz, 350 miles east southeast of the capital, to take personal charge of the situation. The loyal Colorado Regiment gave the rebels an ultimatum to surrender unconditionally.

Three loyal government ministers met with the rebel leader. Gen. Rogelio Miranda, at his command post in armed forces headquarters, and reported: "It seems they are going to surrender."

The government was trying to avoid "a bloody showdown, which the rebels would lose," the ministers said.

A state of emergency was imposed on this Andean nation of about 3.7 million people.

Bolivia's air force backed Ovando and said it would "go into action" and "send planes over over armed forces headquarters" is necessary. Ovando went to the air base at La Paz when he arrived from Santa Cruz.

The mechanized Toledo Regiment, biggest and best armed of Bolivian military units based about 25 miles from La Paz, also apparently was under government control. Earlier reports said it was supporting the rebels.

Ovando's government mobilized all its supporters, including armed peasants who were reported marching on La Paz and Cochabamba, 140 miles south east of La Paz. The Central Labor Union declared for Ovando.

Concert Review

Varied Music Greets B.B. King Fans

BOB NESTI
Fine Arts Staff

The usual cage concert problems of crowding and delays were compounded by a nuisance bomb scare and dismal weather this past weekend forcing B.B. King and the Steve Miller Bank to play well into early Sunday morning. It would seem that if anything remains consistant on this campus, it would be the Dining Commons, Registration, and Cage Concerts, all, for the most part, less than totally pleasurable experiences.

So it was Saturday night in the Cage. After a short delay, the early show began with a new group from New York called Dreams. And as we were told, "if you love Blood, Sweat, and Tears, the Doors, and Miles Davis, you'd love"....continue ad nauseam thanks to the Columbia Records promo man. It's not that Dreams is a bad group, they had some good things such as some excellent horn and saxophone playing and the rest wasn't too bad. It is just they echoed Blood, Sweat, and Tears too much and could only mimic Miles Davis. Their set consisted mostly of a long, suite-like piece which attempted to cover a wide variety of musical forms, from atonal jazz to minuet dance to studio pop, with only tedium the result.

Following this group's pretentiousness, B.B. King's unassuming style and freshness came as welcome relief. There was probably no better place to be on a miserable night then sitting listening to this man and his guitar play the Blues.

He began simply enough with his back-up band, Sonny Freeman and the Unusuals setting the mood with a short, jazz set. Than B.B. King came on stage to prove that his namesake as "King of the Blues" is indeed the truth. What this man can do is downright hypnotic, his sound was never brittle, always subtle with that real intensity the Blues just cannot do without.

But B.B. King showed he was more than a great blues guitarist. His whole manner gave the impression of man who could win over four thousand people by simply being himself. No pretense, just B.B. and "Lucille" doing some blues, and mighty fine at that. What a treat it proved to be, for both audience and performer. B.B. King's seen some hard times, some fifteen years of playing before reaching any degree of success. Yet he seemed the type of man who wouldn't let any of that bother him and this comes through in the music. It may well be what the Blues is all about.

The Steve Miller Band closed the concert out with an interesting and varied set. First they played hard rock tinged with blues that, thanks to Miller's strong vocal lead, proved nighty powerful indeed. "Back in the USofA" was good and the new "Space Cowboy" seemed interesting, but for some reason it all began to drag.

Luckily the Band moved out front and did some soft, acoustical songs which showed the very nice direction this group may be headed.

Bunnies Greet Peaceful Opposition

RICHARD C. HANSON
Asst. News Editor

The crowded plains of plush red carpet were not enveloped in battle last Friday night at the Campus Center Playboy Club. Instead, the evening filled soft folk voices and "professional" hypnotic trances, all became blurred, with the opposition buying tickets to see the "Big Bunny from Chicago" and the revelers acting like small town people out for the evening.

UMass co-eds garbed in jet black, body clinging, dance practice uniforms, weaved through the crowds. Most were, to use the vernacular, well stacked. Most seemed to enjoy the role of providing men with something to think about; men dressed for the evening.

UMass liberationists, socialists, "outside agitators" and the like gathered with goodly numbers and carried signs asking people to "think about it." The old hands formed a picket line, chanting anti-bunny club epithets as the key carrying customers boarded elevators bound for the 'Top of the Campus'.

Inside the elevators were minor skirmishes between those who came to enjoy the formal entertainment and those who came to and those who came to enjoy those who had come to enjoy the formal entertainment.

One middling older couple, trapped for ten flights in the elevator with several young anti-bunny types, said that they should "let those who want to enjoy themselves, enjoy themselves." The large lady, buxom as older ladies tend to be, turned to the youths, at one point nearing the seventh floor and commented: "You probably aren't even from UMass!" The young long hairs, not being cruel enough to shatter the fine lady's illusions, cackled about "orders from East Berlin" for the remaining three flights.

The novelty of the protesters made the evening more interesting. One un-official spokesman for the demonstrators said, however, that the Playboy Club wasn't really as important as the Bridal Fair, for example. Nobody really seemed to feel strongly enough about the Playboy club to just avoid it except one young cashier in the Campus Center Coffee Shop who displayed some caustic emotion when the reporter, in jest, told her that she really missed somthing at the Playboy Club. She replied, something to the effect of "I'd rather be dead than go to such an (obviously derisive of the female role in society') affair."

Loving Schools

It was convocation day at Hampshire College Saturday, and the school, whose very existence is a radical break with academic tradition, experienced something very much out of character by contemporary campus standards.

The students were upset by the pomp of the convocation and wanted to demonstrate their feeling of being "left out of the day's events". But they didn't want to "embarass the school" by openly protesting, so they did nothing Saturday.

Student spokesmen said that they will talk with the administration about the problems that they feel occured Saturday and are "sure of being taken seriously by the administration".

The students say that they love their school, that they feel, as its first class, that it is truly their school. They say that the administration works for them, and that they can work out problems between themselves and the administration because the administration understands this, and honestly puts the students' welfare above all else.

Perhaps if other school administrations took this attitude, other student bodies would "love their schools" and perhaps the Federal Government wouldn't have to spend $800,000 on studying the causes of student unrest.

Our PB Club

I guess it's indicative of this campus that on a weekend that saw the inauguration of one of the most progressive educational ventures on, where and another bomb scare affecting 5,000 people, the biggest stir was caused by the Playboy Club.

You see, Women's Liberation was going to demonstrate against a perfect example of American society; (plastic, phony and exploitive.) The intent of this demonstration caused the largest security screen on campus, since Hubie Humphrey blundered forth.

All but two campus policemen were at the Campus Center Friday night. Most were in plain clothes, checking the credentials (tickets) of all people seeking an entrance to elevators. Armed guards were at elevator entrances on the second floor.

In the words of someone in the Club, "They're not going to stop our Playboy Club". Indeed not. The old Playboy Club would go on, no matter what. A good time was had by all. Campus Center officials were drooling, thinking of the business a full-time club would give. In fact everyone was drooling over one thing or another. After all, the Playclub is as American as John Wayne.

Women's Lib., meanwhile, in the face of an armada, peacefully picketed on the second floor level of the CC.

And they were not the only ones upset with the bunnies hustling around the corridors. An elderly campus visitor (here for a secretary's convention) said in a crowded elevator "Imagine, a Playboy Club on a college campus. That's disgusting. I'm telling my sister to pull her children out of this school." (She was immediately confronted by angry patrons calling her a puritan, and supporters greeting her remark with "right ons.")

You know, you'd think that a campus which is proudly liberal in the good old liberal traditions would reject something as reactionary and old hat as Playboy bunnies. But maybe, the Playboy patrons are the same liberals. Maybe that is what a liberal stands for now, "Support your local Playboy Club."

And the Playboy Club did look nice in the backdrop of the unlandscaped Campus Center grounds, which resemble American ecology and beauty at their best.

T.E.C. Teaching Teachers

A proposal that may affect the lives and careers of thousands of teachers and students was released by the Teacher Education Center of the School of Education last week.

Included in the prospective education majors into the School of Ed, limitation of the numbers of students, a reorganization of teacher training from the present required "courses" to individualized, modular experiences, and a shift in emphasis from the training of prospective teachers to the reeducation of present teachers. The proposal, if approved, will take effect in September, 1971, although it will not be binding on present undergraduates.

If approved, a maximum of 75 secondary education students will be admitted per semester to the "ed block". The number of elementary education majors would likewise be reduced, so that be 1975, there would be only 150 elementary and secondary ed students per semester. At the same time, the Teacher Ed Center would begin to build up its in-service training programs--professional up-dating seminars, introduction of "innovations" into cooperatng public schools, and working with already-certified teachers.)

The School of Education, like the Schools of Nursing and Engineering, would have its own admission procedures (the criteria for admission currently under study at the School). Those students admitted to elementary or secondary ed programs, would follow the M.E.T.E.P. plan (Model Elementary Teacher Education Program), a performance-oriented, rather than course-oriented, plan of study. In defense of its proposal, the Teacher Ed Center points to the glut on the market of elementary and secondary teachers, especially in the humanities and the social sciences. It draws attention to the fact that two years after graduation, 50% of certified teachers are not teaching. The Center says that it should not graduate teachers who will become more numbers in the unemployment lines; rather, by limiting numbers and preparing qualily teachers whose primary concern is education and not another discipline, the Center hopes to upgrade education be able to plan its graduates thoughtfully. By shifting its emphasis from pre-service to in-service teacher education, the Center is trying to reach only career teachers and not the student who says, "Gee, it would be nice to have certification".

The Teacher Ed proposal has serious ramifications, ramifications that reach not only the University, but society as a whole. The foremost of these is employment. What is going to happen to the thousands of English and history majors who can get neither certification, nor, if they have certification, a job? How is our society going to provide for those who would work, but who cannot find work? Should there be subsidies, or those in the arts? Should there be a general guaranteed income? Projecting even further, there are those, Marshall McLuhan is one of them, who feel that schools themselves are obsolete. How is this nation, and how is every individual in this University preparing for unemployment?

The proposal would shift emphasis from pre-service to in-service training. In doing so, the Teacher Ed Center will try to make existing schools more suited for educational purposes. One wonders, however, whether or not they will meet with much success, for although all sorts of innovations can be introduced, the basic question is whether or not an experienced teacher can or will want to improve himself. One also wonders where those students who are not admitted to teacher training will go; most likely, to educationally inferior teacher colleges, which perpetuate what the UMass School of Ed is trying to eliminate. It seems that by changing the emphasis from pre-service to in-service, from prevention of an illness to the cure of a symptom, the Teacher Ed Center is defeating itself.

It is unfortunate that there is never enough funds to do everything at once--expand the in-service programming while retaining the pre-service teacher training at its current levels at least. But reality is reality, and I would suggest that with a few modifications, the Teacher Ed Center proposal is a better plan than the current truth and deserves approval.

1. There should be no stated cutoff limit for admission to the School of Ed. It is binding and restrictive to say that only 150 students are capable of being certified by the School per semester. A more fair method of admission would be to keep the enrollment fluid; perhaps one semester thirty students would be admitted, the next semester might find 330 students qualified, capable and desirous of admission. Standards should be established, but no student who meets the standards should be denied admission to the program by a quota system.

2. The Teacher Preparation Program Council, the proposed policy-making body for Teacher Education has one serious defect. Undergraduate education majors, with the exception of one student teacher, are not represented on the Council, although everyone else, from the College of Arts and Sciences to every Center in the School of Ed, is. This will serve merely to perpetuat the relatively low status of the undergraduate in the UMass School of Ed.

3. If the School of Ed is to remain a creative asset to the taxpayers of the Commonwealth, then it must receive the help of the rest of the University. As a beginning, the Chancellor and the Faculty-Senate should invite the School to begin a massive in-service training program for all faculty and teaching assistants and indeed, for the University educational structure itself. It is not a matter of academic freedom whether or not a miero-teaching unit comes into a classroom; it is a matter of improving the skills of one's job.

4. Finally, the sword of Damocles-type question, "What is the nation going to do with so many people and so few meaningful jobs?" And this is a problem that not even the School of Education can solve.

The Teacher Education Center proposal is controlversial. But it is far from approved, and far from implemented. Today, October 5, Wednesday (10/7) and Friday (10/9), open hearings will be held on the plan in Room 128, School of Ed, from 3:00-5:00 P.M. Anyone wishing to make a statement at one of the hearings should contact Kathy Carey (545-8012) at the Teacher Ed Center to schedule a time. The chaos in teacher certification today is inexcusable. But it is incumbent upon those who attack the Teacher Ed Center proposal to come up with a better idea.

EXCERPTS FROM THE TEC PROPOSAL

The Teacher Education Center submits the following recommendations concerning future teacher education programs:

That the TEC begin to plan for a shift in emphasis from pre-service to in-service teacher education. This would involve a slow shift over a period of four to five years. During this time the number of pre-service teachers would decrease to approximately 100 to 150 per semester. During the same time staff involvement in the area of in-service work would increase. Our rationale follows:

a. National Statistics show that there is no longer an urgent need for teachers (except for women's physical education, science, mathematics and vocational education) at either the secondary or elementary level. We therefore should be aware that we are adding teachers who must either seek employment in a field other than that in which they were prepared or compete in an already saturated subject area.

b. National statistics indicate that two years after graduation 50% of teachers certified have never taught or are no longer teaching. It would appear that at best an emphasis on pre-service teacher education is economically wasteful and does not succeed in producing a commitment to education. We would do better to emphasize in-service education, because in doing so we are working with those teachers who have already demonstrated a commitment to teaching.

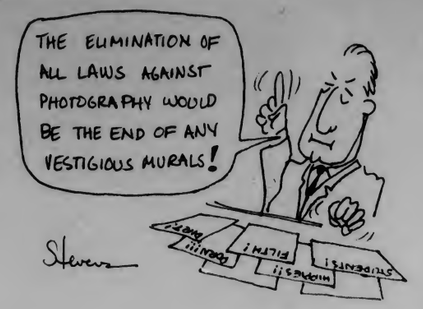
c. There is an increasing need and demand for in-service work, for schools in our area and others across the country. Our staff is well equipped to provide these services.

d. It would appear that working within the establishment with those teachers who are committed to education and are teaching would have a greater effect than sending in "change agents" who are diluted by numbers and overwhelmed by non-supportive environments.

e. Developing in-sevvice centers in schools will provide environments conducive to supporting student teachers who have been trained to innovate.

f. By the same token, with smaller numbers of student teachers, we can be more selective in our choice of students.

g. It follows that we can also be more selective in our choice of cooperating schools and systems.



h. The smaller number of students can provide a population large enough for most research purposes.

i. Other institutions in our State are available to train teachers so that we would not be removing the training facilities from the State.

j. Lack of space now and increasing problems in this area will seriously hamper our effectiveness if we maintain the present number of students.

k. We can look to the University of California system and its relation to state colleges for precedence. This plan has been successfully in operation for many years.

l. One major consideration should be that we, as a university, should also be able to supply new knowledge in teacher education through research. This would be more plausible if the proposed shift were to take place.

Fake Test

Do you sometimes wonder if it's all worth it? Are you really sure you ARE a dedicated radical? Do you think that maybe you're just a fake?

Well, cheer up! If you go to UMass, you probably ARE a fake (a fake radical, at least). So think about it. And to help you realize what a phony you are, here are some guidelines.

You are a fake radical if:

You will drop pencils on the floor so you can look up a girl's skirt (unless, of course, you're a girl too).

You giggle when you swear (especially if you're a girl) (or especially if you're not).

You get excited when you break a 3.0 cum. (2.5?) (2.0?)

You buy pre-faded clothes.

You still worry about B.O.

You hide in your room when you read a pornographic novel.

The sound of squeling tires makes your heart beat faster.

You feel guilty about telling ethnic jokes, but you still do.

You feel guilty about telling ethnic jokes, and you don't.

The first thing you look for in EVERGREEN are dirty pictures.

You read TIME Magazine.

The first thing you look for in TIME Magazine are dirty pictures.

You don't swear at your parents whenever you see them.

You think Doris Day looks "kinda sexy".

You still want to:

a. marry

b. a virgin

SCORING: Give yourself ten points for every positive answer. Have someone straight check your adding. If you made a mistake, subtract 20 points. If you tried to add in your head, add 20 points.

GUS SZLOSEK

Letter From Mothers

To The Editor:

A good many people will remember Don Luce who spoke a couple of years ago in this area about his experiences during nine years in Vietnam with the International Voluntary Services. He has since returned to Vietnam as a reporter, and it was he who recently exposed the terrible conditions in the "tiger cages" which were reported in the nationwide press.

The Women's International League for Peace and Freedom has just received a letter from Mr. Luce enclosing a document from a committee representing 80 mothers of political prisoners jailed in South Vietnam. The letter was written to Vice-President Agnew on his recent visit in the hope that he might read it and meet with them. "But", Mr. Luce reports in his letter, "they could not meet Vice-President Agnew -- or even get their letter to him before he left Vietnam. When they went to the U.S. Embassy on Friday morning, the American MP's would not let them into the embassy. The MP's would not telephone anyone inside to come out and meet the women. Nor would they accept the letter and take it inside for the women."

I now quote from the mothers' letter, which speaks so eloquently for itself:

Dear Mr. Vice-President:

We know that your visit to Vietnam is connected with the making of important decisions. We also know that you are a father, the head of a family. As a father, you have deep love towards your children and you have experienced moments of anxiety when your children are in danger. As a leader of your country, you have many concerns on the South Vietnamese Government action...

We are the mothers of the political prisoners detained in the various prisons of South Vietnam. None of our children is convicted of a crime or robbery. All of them are being imprisoned because they have dared spoken of Peace and Independence, a most profound desire of all the Vietnamese People after years and years of war. Our children were arrested and barbarously tortured. They have been denied food and drink, even medicine when they are sick. The limited amount of medicine provided to the prisoners by the American aid have been continuously smuggled or stolen by the prison authorities. We only learn about the terrible living conditions of our children through statements by recently released prisoners and report made by the U.S. Representatives ANDERSON and HAWKINS after their investigation of Con Son Tiger Cages and the living conditions of the prisoners... we have not been allowed to visit or keep in touch with our children despite renewed requests.

Most of our children were tried by the Military Field Court, a Court which was held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. Yet our children have not been released. Some of them have never been tried at all... We, the Vietnamese Mothers, want to speak out the terrible sufferings of thousands of mothers who have their children being tortured and ill-treated in jail. We wish to directly inform you about the crimes committed under the prison system of South Vietnam. We hope to have the privilege of meeting you while you are here.

You would have to agree that the U.S. Government somehow has to be held jointly responsible for the prison system in South Vietnam since:

- The police forces which arrest and repress our children are being paid by the Americans.

- The equipment used by the Police to repress, torture and jail our children are part of the U.S. aid. The tear gas, the rockets used to repress them are made in U.S.A."...

-The Phoenix operation, the result of which a great number of Vietnamese people have been arbitrarily arrested and imprisoned directly by American authorities in Saigon.

-Our children witness the presence of American Advisers at the prisons. They know that more aid is being given to build more and bigger prisons.

Before such evidence it would be hard to deny and just say that the U.S. is not responsible for the prison system of South Vietnam. The role of the American advisers should be to improve the prisoners' conditions, not merely watch the tortures done to our children who suffer from hunger, thirst, disease, and survive in agony in jail...

Respectfully yours,

Representatives of the Mothers whose children are being detained in the various prisons through South Vietnam.

Don Luce ends his letter with this personal note: "Please help these women get their story told. I promised them that I would help...I am convinced that only an outraged public opinion can stop this madness. Today 200 more students were arrested."

There is a piece of ancient Chinese wisdom, which says, "Heaven arms with compassion those whom it would not see destroyed." Will you help your country's national security? We urge all readers of this heart-breaking plea to write at once to President Nixon.

Work Study Clarified

To The Editor:

In the Friday, October 2nd, issue of The Collegian, there was an article pertaining to the Work Study Program This article was well written and was correct in all forms except for an error in figures which were actually quoted correctly by the MDC but had been given incorrectly by the undersigned.

While the article showed that we had received more Work-Study funds this year than last, the reverse is true. Last year, for the period January 1, 1969 through December 31, 1969, we received $613,772, not the $303,533 as quoted in the article, the figure I had given him since that was a separate award at one time. Thus be it noted that the Work-Study funds are less for this calendar year than those received in the last calendar year.

I apologize for giving the MDC an incorrect figure.

By And For WMUA

To The Editor:

Ed Jewett's article on WMUA in Friday's Collegian raised some interesting questions that I think deserve some attention. $95,000 of SATF money has constructed what Station Manager Horseman calls, "an excellent laboratory for Mass Comm majors" (those were his words). Since when does SATF money build laboratories for the University? Perhaps now the University will build a RADIO STATION for the students.

I think that it's about time UMass got a STUDENT radio station run and FOR students, instead of "a few serious-minded semi professional broadcasters, sometimes disguised as University students," as Mr. Jewett calls them. I think that UMass deserves a radio station (he believes music (even progressive, classical, and jazz) can be used for more than to "provide the fill between news and public affairs programs." By the way, why are seven turntables necessary to provide this "filler?")

Although WMUA admits that they owe their allegiance to students (we can't help but wonder how programming decisions are made and how many of us poor schmucks like what "our" radio station is doing. WMUA indicated how willing they were to listen to students when they cancelled their weekly request show.

Power to the people first, THEN to WMUA

Thanks For The Thought

Editor:

This letter is sent to you on behalf of the inpatient students who find it undesirable to wait (and wait, and wait, and...) in line for breaklast at Franklin Commons.

It's depressing enough that waiting in lines is a fact of life at this massive university. To be forced to wait in line the first thing in the morning while pressed for time to get to class is an aggravating way to start the day.

Students who start the day at 10:10 a.m. must be at the "D.C." by 9 a.m. or else skip breakfast.

These situations can be alleviated. Last year two (2) lines were open for breaklast. This year the management of the "Copper Kettle" has opened only two lines to Central and Orchard Hill residents.

Continental breaklast which lasted until 9:45, has been discontinued and is missed by many of us.

Havens in Concert At Smith College

NORTHAMPTON - Richie Havens - "a pure example of the ecstatic singer" - will perform at Smith College Friday, October 9.

The concert will be at 8:00 p.m. in John M. Green Hall, sponsored by Smith's Recreational Council.

Richie Havens was born in the Bedford-Stuyvesant area of Brooklyn, as the oldest of nine children. His father was a pianist who earned his living as an electroplater; his mother helped to support the large family by working in a bookbinding factory.

At the age of 14, Richie had organized a group called the McCrea Gospel singers, but just for fun. "I really thought I'd be a surgeon," he recalls.

Richie started in show business in Greenwich Village, and gradually gained a "fervent underground following." But it wasn't until the fall of 1966 when "Mixed Bag" was released on the Verve-Folkways label that he became widely known.

Since then have come appearances at the Fillmore West, the Cafe Au Go Go, and the Woodstock Music and Art Fair.

"When I sing - my spirit is feeling the song's sensations all over again. It's like this. I sing from what I see." Havens' music is the communication to men and women of their common story; he says "if its not the words, it's the music they recognize" - in Havens' blues an ballads.

Auditions Being Held For Williams Play

Auditions for a production of Tennessee Williams' THE EC-CENTRICITIES OF A NIGHTINGALE will be held in room 119 Bartlett Hall from 7 to 9PM TONIGHT and TOMORROW night. The play will be presented November 13-14 and offers challenging roles for five men and five women. It is being directed by Judith Willner, a graduate student in theatre, and it may serve as the basis for her Master of Fine Arts thesis.

"Nightingale" is a three act drama which has not been produced on Broadway. According to the author, the play is a revised version of his earlier play, SUMMER AND SMOKE.

However, Williams has also written that, "Aside fron the characters having the same names and the locale remaining the same, I think THE EC-CENTRICITIES OF A NIGHTINGALE is a substantially different play from SUMMER AND SMOKE, and I prefer it. It is less conventional and melodramatic."

The play is a tightly knit structure which integrates major and minor plots to deliver a strong impact.

All parts are open and anyone who is interested is invited to audition.

Melanie's "Leftover Wine"

By JEFF SILVER
Staff Reporter

Melanie's latest live album "Leftover Wine" on Buddah Records must be listened to by anyone who likes passionate music.

To quote the album notes, "as the concert drew to an end and the audience began to fear that each song would be her last, the flood began. Shadowy figures in beads and fringes flowed down the carpeted aisles of Carnegie Hall. They swirled onto the bright stage eddying silently around the singer hunched over her guitar."

"For those of us who were there, the sounds of this record can only remind us of what was felt, we all have to share the leftover wine."

The album contains; Close to it All, Uptown and Down, Mama, Mama., the Saddest Thing, Beautiful People, Animal Crackers, I Don't Eat Animals, Happy Birthday, (since the concert is really a birthday party for Maggie English a writer who recently did an article on Melanie in Look), Tuning My Guitar, Psychotherapy, Leftover Wine, and Peace will Come. One just has to read the titles to get an impression of the Beauty in the album.

This album captures the vibrations from a live performance which are impossible to receive on a regular album. Listening to the album, closing your eyes, you are there in Carnegie Hall, when the audience is pleading for her to come out for her encore, you find yourself yelling, "more, more."

TWO MONTHS* FREE.

We'll send you the $1.79 size of Playtex® first-day™ tampons for only 50¢. You get more than two months' supply free.

There's no other tampon like Playtex. Outside, soft and silky, not cardboardy. Inside, so extra absorbent, it even protects on your first day. That's why we call it the first-day tampon.

In every lab test against the old cardboardy kind, the Playtex tampon was always more absorbent. Actually 45% more absorbent on the average than the leading regular tampon because of the unique way it's made. Actually adjusts to you. Flowers out, fluffs out, protects every inside inch of you.

Once you try it, we think you'll love it. That's why we're making you this special "two months free" offer.

So go ahead. Use the coupon and get more than two months' supply free.

*Based on the average woman's use of ten tampons per month.
